together, does not yet clearly appear. Delivering the promised khureetas into Captain Sandeman's hands, notwithstanding a noticeable but ineffectual attempt on the part of one of his officials, formerly his confidential agent at Jacobabad, to prevent the sending of the letters, his Highness at last took leave with as good a grace as the occasion would permit. The mission left Khelat next morning, every mark of respect being shown, as on its entry.

Moolla Mahomed intercedes for Nurdin.

25. When leaving Khelat Captain Sandeman was again accosted by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, interceding, voluntarily, as it would seem, for Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, whose early destruction appeared to the Raisani Sirdar to be imminent. With the intimation that if Noordeen choose of his own accord to join the camp he might do so, Captain Sandeman declined, as on the previous occasion, to encourage him otherwise. The Jalawan Sirdar did not join the camp.

Correspondence induced by traders.

26. A correspondence took place with his Highness the Khan, at the solicitation of some traders, as described in paragraphs 83 and 84, with little result. In his reply the Khan of Khelat volunteers details of his dealings with Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, alleging arrogance and disobedience of orders against him, in the first instance, culminating thereafter in a conspiracy, secretly abetted by Khan's Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed, to assassinate his Highness, who, anticipating their action, sent troops against them. Noordeen and some 60 of his followers, including a brother of the Wuzeer, who was himself wounded, were killed. It would appear, from reference to documents referred to in paragraph 85 of the report, and from others to which Noordeen's intentions no secret.

I have had access, that Sirdar Noordeen's machinations and intentions were no secret, though his visit to Khelat on the particular occasion, in obedience to the Khan's summons, had not been assented to by the Sirdar, until the most solemn protestations or oaths from the Khan, as to the Sirdar's personal safety, had been previously obtained. The event is illustrative of the uncertainty attaching to any action on the part of the Government of Khelat in the existing state of affairs.

Shahghassee Wallee Mahomed quondam Wuzeer.

27. The reference made by his Highness to the retention at Jacobabad of his Ex-Wuzeer Shahghassee Wallee Mahomed, now a pensioner of Government on Rupees 600 per mensem, is probably not without its special significance. The quondam official of the Khelat State is well reported of in all the correspondence from Sind perused by me. He has been introduced to me here by Sir W. Merewether and Colonel Loch, but beyond one short interview in their presence, I have had no opportunity of making his acquaintance. His presence here, as a pensioner merely, can be productive of no good to the Government interests, and probably his former influence in Khelat affairs, whether for good or evil, causes him to be made the rallying point of the factions at present opposed to his former master, both within and without the British border. His removal to some locality—such as Dera Ghazi Khan—where suspicion would not attach to his conduct, might be solicited by the Khan in the event of a reopening of friendly communications with his Highness, or it may prove to be advisable in every sense.

His antecedents.

Residence at Jacobabad probably injurious.

As a pensioner of Government might be moved further off.

28. That active rebellion was impending throughout the Khelat territories, whether of the Sarawans or Jalawans, previously to Captain Sandeman's appearance on the scene, and without any reference whatever to the objects of his mission, which were not then known to the Khan or his Sirdars, is proved by subsequent local inquiries, confirmatory of the more authentic intelligence previously received on the subject. It seems unnecessary now to speculate upon what might or might not have happened had Noordeen Mingul not been cut off at a time when his faithlessness had very nearly reached its climax.

Revolution in Khelat apparently imminent when Captain Sandeman appeared on scene.

Sarawan action suspended.

Jalawans counteracted by Noordeen's fate.

29. On his return march Captain Sandeman endeavoured to heal differences between Dumars, Sumalani Minguls, and Murrees, with some apparent success. At Kirta, in the Bolan Pass, he received a letter from the Sind authorities, severely censuring his conduct throughout, and he points to it in evidence of the other difficulties which he had to contend with in acting up to the instructions conveyed to him by the Governments of India and the Punjab. I do not consider myself called upon in this preliminary and transmitting report to enter upon the disputed subject of difference of views or misapprehension of orders, as these are matters for disposal between the higher authorities and the Sind officials more particularly concerned.

Proceedings on return march.

Censures conveyed from Sind.

Reasons for avoiding comment on this part of the subject.

30. Bearing in mind the innate love of plunder of the Murrees, their antecedents as a tribe, and the tempting facilities offered by the neighbouring plains of Kutchi, under a weak Government like that of Khelat, for the prosecution of their hereditary profession as "spoliators-in-general," I must be permitted to doubt whether the mere discontinuance of service and confiscation by the Khan of a jaghire given, in the first instance, for specific service, and re-appropriated in consequence of continued persistence in marauding by the Murrees, can be deemed the sole cause of Murree depredations in Kutchi. These seem to be the only causes that can be alleged in so-called justification of a series of the most unjustifiable acts; but it may be questioned whether his Highness the Khan's own forbearance towards the Murrees in 1858–59, when he had the power of inflicting a severe castigation upon them, as recommended by the late General Jacob and Sir Henry Green, may not have tended more than any other cause to induce a repetition of marauding expeditions into Kutchi, his Highness himself would appear now to be fully conscious of this, and there is undoubtedly a large consensus of opinion in favour of the view. Having in a preceding paragraph (No. 23) noted what is advanced on the other side in favour of the Murrees, resting upon our experience of their doings, for some years past, on the Punjab border, the policy thereupon founded being that which has, for the present, been accepted by authority, I need not enter here into any lengthened disquisition on the subject. Beyond a trifling exhibition of bravado on the part of a few Murrees, acting independently during the march of the mission from Kahan, the account of which in Sind Diaries (Captain Sandeman states) is greatly exaggerated, the general behaviour of the tribe during the expedition has been unusually good. I conceive, therefore, that we should accept such conduct, on the part even of Murrees, as encouraging so far. The Deputy Commissioner records in paragraph 92 of his report that the Murrees professed an eager desire to protect trade on reasonable terms, and their Sirdar had written to accept responsibility for Murree raids into Kutchi, on the condition that the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars should be reconciled to each other. Considering the relations that have subsisted between the Khan and Sirdars for the last 15 years or more, it must be admitted that the condition fixed by Ghuzzan Khan is a very problematical one, and that the opportunity for acting up to it may be far distant, judging especially from the attitude which those Sirdars and the Murrees have assumed since their return from Khelat. Still it would be obviously impolitic to expect too much from the Murrees, who have responded with a reasonable amount of readiness, to our requirements.

To be taken for what it is worth.

31. Captain Sandeman refers to the varying principles upon which our relations with the Khan of Khelat have hitherto been maintained, and contrasts the quotations from Sind correspondence given in paragraphs 92 to 95 of his report with others of a contrary tendency, which are to be found largely spread over the Sind reports of the last two years, especially since the withdrawal of our Political Agent from Khelat. He points out that the earlier descriptions confirm his Highness the Khan's verbal statements to himself, during their interviews, as to the rules and principles by which he was guided. Captain Sandeman considers that the Khan may possibly, even now, be brought to a sense of his duty to Khelat and its people, if an opportunity be afforded him, in reply to his letters to Government, of making a full and frank disclosure of all his wants and circumstances, in view to a better understanding, and to his regulating his management of affairs henceforward more in accord with the welfare of his Sirdars and people, and in such manner as may secure the attainment of those objects for which this mission into the hills was sanctioned.

Contrarity of our dealings with his Highness the Khan hitherto.

A further opportunity solicited for coming to an understanding.

32. It is for the Government to decide whether the circumstances disclosed in the accompanying report and appendices justify a renewed attempt, with a fair prospect of success. It must be admitted that the mission was well received by all parties, from the Khan downwards. Untoward events with which, in so far as can as yet be discovered, the deputation of a British officer to the Beluchistan hills had nothing whatever to do, certainly occurred, during that officer's sojourn in Khelat territory; but such occurrences have not been unusual for many years in that disturbed State. In the very peculiar circumstances of the visit, it would, in my opinion, have been a matter for surprise if sinister influences had not been strongly exerted to thwart the objects of a peaceful deputation, such as that headed by Captain Sandeman. It requires but a very cursory perusal of the later documents concerning our relations with Khelat to be convinced that factious intrigues have, for a long period, largely promoted the unsettled state of the country. These intrigues have not been confined to Kutchi or to Khelat. Their ramifications are doubtless widely spread and deeply laid, requiring time, energy, and perseverance on the part of officers specially appointed to search them out. The political affairs of Khelat, in their connexion with Sind, have evidently afforded a large field for scheming factions, undeterred by the fear of a determined or energetic ruler at Khelat. Wuzeers, Shahghassees, and other State officials have followed each other, especially of late, in somewhat quick succession, the rapidity of changes being proportioned to the fitful caprice of the ruler, or the successful influence of intriguers. The results of a long continuance of such a state of things are but too apparent, and they reflect largely upon the decision and capacity of those directing the Khelat Government at the head-quarters of the State.

33. The present aspect of affairs, in so far as I can apprehend it, from recent contact and short acquaintance, appears briefly to be this:—His Highness Mir Khodadad Khan, notwithstanding his past difficulties and trials, stills holds his position in a measure, though nearly all the leading men of the old régime maintain an attitude of chronic rebellion against him. From time to time conflicts have occurred with varying results. The military force at his Highness the Khan's disposal is estimated as under 3,000 men. Of this force the main portion supports the Khan at Khelat, and detachments occupy such outposts as Shalkot, Dadar, Bagh, &c., where the Khan's Naibs and Janishins uphold a semblance of authority in his name, and oppress the people. Some of the surviving so-called nobles of the State are wandering exiles, whose patrimonial estates are either held by the Khan himself or are lying waste. Periodically, the Sirdars of either, or both, the Sarawan and Jalawan factions combine to act in concert against the head of the State, whose unoffending subjects are but too often plundered and victimized by the assembled Brahooees. Occasional greater successes have been attained; but the Khan, with his little standing army, aided by the passive attitude of the Belooch population, obtained palpable local ascendancy, and his enemies are scattered for the time, to re-assemble when a good opportunity offers, by a junction with marauding Murrees or others. Security to life and property, or to traders between Candahar and India, through the Bolan or Mulla Passes, in such a state of affairs is out of the question, exposed as these Passes are to the incursions of various predatory tribes. Progress and prosperity succumb to the general confusion; and communications between the ruler and the representatives of a great and firmly-constituted neighbouring Government like ours become the fertile source of interested schemings of every kind. Separated off from the leading Khans of the principality, with whom he is at chronic hostility, his Highness selects temporary favourites as his officials from amongst the inferior classes by whom he is surrounded, necessarily maintaining intimate relations also with the commandants of his troops, upon whom the stability of his throne alone depends. Excepting the plains of Kutchi, his possessions are chiefly within the mountain ranges, extending from the Murree and Boogtee Hills to the sea, the lower tracts of Lus Beyla and Mekran, but nominally owing his sovereignty.

34. There seems to be no reason at present to apprehend marauding incursions or violations of British territory from beyond the border line at any point. Murree raids in Kutchi may possibly continue, and a few unimportant offences may be committed along the lower border between Lus Beyla and Kurrachee, which is protected by a special police. The force at Jacobabad is indeed ample for all requirements. No impediment, therefore, presents itself to a fair trial of Captain Sandeman's renewed proposals, viz., to re-open communications with his Highness the Khan of Khelat, as de facto as well as de jure Ruler of the State; to endeavour by firm yet conciliatory and encouraging treatment, rendered all the more easy by recently acquired personal intercourse with most of the dissatisfied Brahooee Sirdars to bring them to a reconciliation with the Khan; to withstand firmly the plottings of interested schemers; fearlessly to stamp out factious opposition, with his Highness' sanction and assistance, beyond the frontier line; and to re-establish our relations generally with the Khelat State on a firmer footing than circumstances have admitted of for several years past. A general want of confidence now prevails, his Highness the Khan is believed to possess some of the qualities of a ruler, as evinced by his retention of his position so long, under very adverse conditions. Doubts may well be entertained of his good faith, until his later protestations of fidelity to British interests are again fairly tested. Our maintenance of an entirely passive attitude would naturally be construed into an abandonment of all interest in Khelat affairs. Kutchi would be devastated by the Murrees; the trade routes permanently closed; and the Khan probably driven, in desperation, to seek aid from other quarters (as mentioned in his own Durbar speech); a consummation which, in the present state of Central Asian politics, should be jealously guarded against by us.

35. The issues are important. At present we have practically lost our hold over the Khelat Government. Unity of action and treatment can now be secured, and one policy pursued for the whole Beloochistan frontier, from the Pass of Vehoa to the sea, comprising all the tribes with whom we have to come in contact. The Murrees and Boogtees have, in so far as I am aware, at no previous period been better "in hand" than at present, and it is essential that a hold acquired by years of anxious exertion and labour shall not be relaxed. Never before were the representatives of these tribes, and a large proportion of the Brahooee Chiefs, so recently in rebellion against their Khan, brought to his feet in Durbar by a British officer to sue for reconciliation. Granting that evil influences and contrarieties in our mode of treatment may have tended to throw the Khan for advice and counsel, less or more, into the hands of ill-disposed persons of an inferior stamp, it appears to me, on a review of all the circumstances, and especially with reference to the requirements of paragraphs 26, 27, and 28 of the Government of India Resolution of 16th October last, that on no former occasion have we had a more favourable opportunity for accepting the invitation—made by himself, with apparent honesty and frankness—for a renewal of friendly relations with his Highness the Khan of Khelat, who clearly needs our countenance and aid, in so far as he may show himself to be deserving of them.

His Highness the Khan's apparent anxiety for a re-opening of communications.

His necessities.

36. Captain Sandeman's efforts of nine or ten years have been unflinchingly directed to secure uniformity in our dealings with the Belooch tribes, and much of the success attained would be lost if any less experienced and personally uninfluential hand attempted to cement the disjointed elements. His personal influence over the tribes, and great interest in the work, point him out as the officer most fitted to carry it out to such an issue as may in the future, after consolidation of the system, render its maintenance comparatively easy to selected officers coming after him. I have ever considered the dependence, and success in working, of such a system upon the influence or presence of any one particular officer as its greatest defect, from a Government point of view; and I have often looked forward to the probable collapse of all we had gained by it, as contingent upon a change of officers. This should not be, if we are to aim at permanent benefit and success in our frontier arrangements. Personal idiosyncracies are often valuable doubtless; but in a matter of extensive concernment like the carrying out of an enlightened and generous yet firm policy towards our poor and predatory neighbours of the whole Belooch border, our object must be so to simplify and consolidate that those who succeed the executive inaugurators of the policy may have no difficulty in following suit. Without this the best individual efforts may become exposed to ultimate failure.

Captain Sandeman's successes.

What they point to.

What we should aim at.

37. Having received no special instructions for guidance other than those contained in your telegram of the 12th ultimo, and the order of the Government of India in regard to Captain Sandeman's expedition into the hills, I am somewhat in doubt whether my suggestions may not be deemed premature or out of place, pending the decision of Government regarding the results of the mission.

Commissioner's doubts as to offering suggestions.

Pending decision of Government as to results of mission.

38. Having regard, however, to the advancing season, to my own continued absence from my regular charge, and to the necessity for very early specific instructions as to the future conduct of our relations with Khelat, since the Sind authorities have been relieved of all responsibility in the matter I assume that my recommendations may not be considered to be uncalled for. It appears to me advisable that Captain (now Major) Sandeman should be put in immediate charge of all duties connected with the independent Belooch tribes beyond Sind and the Lower Punjab border throughout, from the Dera Ghazi District to the sea; and that the conduct of renewed relations with his Highness the Khan of Khelat, if Government sanctions such renewal, should also be entrusted to Major Sandeman, who would discharge all duties hitherto performed by the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, relative to our communications with Belooch or other tribes within or without the frontier line in so far as these concern border administration and political management.

Reasons for making suggestions.

That Major Sandeman be put in charge of Political Superintendency on Sind and Lower Punjab borders.

All political and executive frontier control hitherto held by Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, to merge in Major Sandeman's duties.

39. One European officer as Assistant would be requisite, and he should be an officer selected with reference to his special qualifications for the duties to be expected of him. A knowledge of the Belooch language, and previous experience in dealing with Beloochis, are essentials, if any officer possessing such qualifications be available.

A European Assistant necessary.

His special qualifications.

40. I have every reason to believe that Mr. Bruce, Assistant Commissioner, lately of Kulu, and formerly in charge of the Rajanpur subdivision for several years under Major Sandeman, is an officer possessing the necessary qualifications, and that he is fitted, in most respects, from antecedents and experience, to be an efficient coadjutor to Major Sandeman in the difficult task before him of establishing his system, carrying out the policy, now accepted by the Government of India, along the whole Belooch line, and of placing our now suspended relations with the Khelat State and its ruler on an intelligible and firm footing.

41. The supervision and control of these officers might advantageously rest with the Commissioner of the Derajat, to whom they would be subordinate in all respects, reporting through him, for information of the Government of India, to the Punjab Government, which would thus have the undivided immediate direction and superintendence of our frontier management, from Peshawur to Kurrachee, and of our political relations with Khelat, as with Cabul. Such an arrangement would doubtless facilitate the proper regulation of traffic through the great trade routes to and from Central Asia, of which that through the Bolan Pass has been practically closed for several years.

Both officers to be controlled by Commissioner of the Derajat.

Advantages of these proposals.

42. It will be obvious, from a perusal of the enclosed report, that the objects desiderated in paragraph 27 of the Government of India Resolution of 16th October last cannot be satisfactorily attained until some such changes as are herein proposed receive the sanction of Government. The re-opening and secure use of the Bolan Pass for traffic are shown to be contingent upon the success of arrangements to be primarily effected with his Highness the Khan of Khelat, but in combination with the heads of neighbouring tribes, as the Dumar (Kakar) Pathans, Murrees, and others.

Reference to paragraph 27 of Government Resolution.

How the Bolan can be re-opened for trade.

43. Major Sandeman informs me that the sum placed at his disposal in the paragraph just referred to would be amply sufficient, if granted annually, to effect all the objects contemplated in the Government Resolution, in so far as these concern the Belooch or other tribes along the whole line.

Sum hitherto placed at disposal ample for all requirements in the hills.

44. Advantage might be taken in conveying the replies of Government to his letters now forwarded to re-open communication with the Khelat ruler and with the Sirdars. Should an encouraging amount of success attend Major Sandeman's efforts in both directions, as he himself fully expects, when he would be untrammelled by many of the difficulties which he believes mainly contributed to his want of full success on the late occasion, it might be possible thereafter to fulfil the intention expressed in paragraph 29 of the Government of India Resolution.

Resumption of Government intercourse with the Khan.

Major Sandeman's expectation.

45. In the event of our re-opening the communications herein recommended with his Highness, in furtherance of the policy enunciated by the Government of India, it seems to me, on a review of past proceedings on both sides, and also looking at the state of disorganization and want of general confidence prevailing in Khelat, that something more determined than a mere conciliatory attitude on the part of the deputed officer is demanded under the imprimatur of Government to give a reasonable prospect of success in our future dealings with this disturbed border principality.

Suggestions with reference to existing state of affairs.

46. The state of confusion, amounting nearly to anarchy, now existing throughout Khelat territory, appears to require that any renewal of communications should be accompanied, not indeed by threats of armed intervention, opposed to the principles laid down in paragraph 7 of the Government of India letter No. 2214P. of 9th October 1874, and in subsequent orders, but with such unmistakeable evidence of full moral support accorded by the Government to the officers now specially required to deal with these complications as would obviate the possibility of any recurrence of past misconstruction as to motives, objects, and authority.

Suggestions continued.

47. It is to be borne in mind that even in the Treaty of 1854, entered into between the British Government and Mir Nusseer Khan, then ruler of Khelat, special provision was made in Article IV. (at a time, too, when the affairs of Khelat presented an aspect more favourable than now) for the occupation by British troops of any position or station in the territories of Khelat which the British authorities might at any time consider advisable to hold. This fact can, without any departure from the hitherto accepted policy of Government, be brought prominently to the recollection of his Highness the Khan. Entertaining, as I do, much confidence in the influence and authority which Major Sandeman has personally acquired over the wilder trans-border Belooch tribes, and also in the good effects which his recent intercourse with the majority of the Special remarks contingent upon Major Sandeman's further deputation.

Brahooee Sirdars has produced, in demonstrating to them the real interest which the British Government takes in the restoration of tranquillity to their country, I think that, to ensure to that officer a good prospect of success, in the undoubtedly difficult task before him, there should be no opportunity left, in our communications either with Khan or Sirdars, for doubt as to the prospective objects of this final effort towards peaceful mediation. The limit of one year might be fixed within which to judge of progress and results.

48. At present I do not wish to anticipate a result opposed to the expectations of the officer whose recent personal visit to the localities, and whose interviews with his Highness the Khan of Khelat and most of the Chiefs and tribes concerned, have led him to form these expectations. It is obviously unnecessary here to speculate as to the ulterior measures to be resorted to in the event of failure. An assurance that all possible pacificatory measures had been tried would be confidently arrived at, and until such a position is attained I conceive that the object set forth in the despatch of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, No. 91 of 8th July last, will not be gained.

49. Two statements, showing the strength of the Frontier Police in Sind, are appended. The European officers under whom they serve should be directly subordinate to the Political Superintendent at Jacobabad quoad all frontier matters, along the whole Sind and Khelat border, and responsible for the speedy conveyance to him of all border intelligence of importance.

50. In paragraphs 2 and 3 of letter No. 4P.C. of 29th ultimo to your address I briefly adverted to the smallness of office establishments available to any officer deputed, as Major Sandeman and myself have been, to discharge important duties in another Province and Presidency, the system of administration in which appears to differ in many respects from that of the Punjab. With reference to the remarks then made, I beg to append copies of detailed lists obtained from the office of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, which include officials of all kinds, some of whom only, as Colonel Loch, C.B., Captain Reynolds, and several subordinate clerks and others, have been, and are still, in the receipt of pay and allowances for the discharge of duties in the Political Department. The discharge hitherto of so many duties of a varying nature in the Political, Military, Revenue, and Judicial Departments, devolving upon particular officers of another Presidency will necessitate an early change in the distribution of these allowances, and the issue of specific orders exactly defining the positions, emoluments, and relative duties of such officers as may be retained from the Punjab in Sind under the recent orders of the Supreme Government. As regards my own establishments I have not been as yet inconvenienced, because my express deputation necessitated my taking with me such establishments as usually accompanied me on circuit; but if the suggestions offered in this letter are acceded to, specific orders on the point under notice will be called for. Had I not brought my own establishments, I should have received but little aid from the inferior English Clerk and Jemadar of peons alone made over to me. The Head Moonshi in the Political Department, a native of Khelat, and a declared enemy of his country's Sovereign, significantly resigned his office rather than present himself to me.

51. If Major Sandeman be required to remain at Jacobabad, as recommended above, his presence there with an Assistant Commissioner or Assistant Political Agent, available at all times for deputation to any part of the frontier between Jacobabad and the sea, would appear to be amply sufficient, under present circumstances, which do not furnish sufficient occupation for an officer in my position, unless duties of a more onerous nature, in their every day aspect, than the orders of the Government of India appear to comtemplate, in connexion with the affairs of the Khelat State, are detailed for performance. In so far as can be judged, no danger to the peace of the Sind British border need at present be apprehended, and I would therefore solicit early telegraphic orders, if possible, as to my movements. The current miscellaneous work of my division has, as yet, not suffered from my absence, and an early return would enable me speedily to bring up all arrears of judicial work.

Presence of Major Sandeman and an Assistant sufficient at Jacobabad.

Present state of things does not demand permanent residence of a Commissioner at Jacobabad.

No actual disturbance on British border anticipated.

Early orders solicited.

52. I am given to understand that a considerable body of mounted police, consisting of certain members of reclaimed predatory tribes, some of whom were subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat as Dhoombkees, Jakranis, Khasas, and Boogtees, is maintained in the districts, under the designation of "Belooch Guides." In so far as the duties of any of these may be connected with frontier administration not strictly military, and separate from those of internal district police, I consider that they should be freely at the disposal, or entirely under the orders of the Political Superintendent. They must be valuable aids in maintaining communications with the trans-border tribes.

Irregular Belooch Police Horsemen.

Reasons.

53. Having observed various statements in the later political diaries regarding Major Sandeman's proceedings in the hills, to which I deemed it right that he should be afforded an opportunity of replying, I requested him, after I had received his report, to reply to those. He has accordingly furnished the necessary replies in a Postscript, dated the 11th instant, which is attached to his Report. These sufficiently attest the danger which might sometimes attach to action upon unverified information conveyed through interested channels.

Postscript to Major Sandeman's Report.

Why written.

54. In conclusion, it behoves me to notice with commendation Major Sandeman's enterprising exertions in conducting this mission, to and from Khelat, in safety, through an inhospitable region rarely visited by Europeans, except on military expeditions which have not been always successful. His earnest endeavours, under difficulties of no ordinary nature, to effect the objects contemplated by the Government of India, and the amount of success which attended those endeavours, cannot fail, I trust, to receive their due meed of appreciation.

Major Sandeman's own services.

55. Captain Wylie and Dr. Thomson, who accompanied Major Sandeman, have earned his warm acknowledgments, which I believe to be fully merited. The map of the countries visited, prepared by the former officer, and the record of meteorological and other observations kept by Dr. Thomson, will be submitted hereafter.

Captain Wylie and Surgeon Thomson.

56. I have alluded, at some length, in paragraph 9 of this letter to the services of the Belooch Chief, of the Dera Ghazi Khan border, who, with detachments of their clansmen, accompanied Major Sandeman. No more favourable exemplification of the beneficial effects of carrying these Chiefs and their tribesmen heartily with us in our efforts to repress crime and to reclaim their less favoured brethren of the remoter hills could have been given than their cheerful and effective co-operation on this, as on many former occasions. The services of Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan Mazari and Jamal Khan Lagari were prominently conspicuous. The native detachments of cavalry and infantry conducted themselves creditably throughout, and the Subadar of the 4th Sikhs, Wali Mahomed, is specially noticed by Major Sandeman.

From Lepel Griffin, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Punjab, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I am desired to forward a khureeta received to-day addressed to his Excellency the Viceroy from his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

Enclosure 1 in No. 62.

Translation of a letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to his Excellency the Governor-General of India.

Captain Sandeman has paid me a visit and informed me of the kindly desires of the British Government towards me. I feel greatly indebted to your Excellency for the same.

I have ever considered myself as the subject of the British Government, I do so now, and desire to remain under the protection of the British.

I urgently desire to explain to the British Government much that is in my heart, and trust that the opportunity of doing so may be afforded me. I desire this in order to prevent the chance of the old friendly relations that have existed between Khelat and the British being in any degree severed. With the object of obtaining this request I send you these few lines. By your kindness, should you so desire it, I will write your Excellency from first to last through Captain Sandeman a full statement of my affairs. I have told Captain Sandeman a few particulars of my affairs, who will doubtless tell you of them. Instead of writing should you prefer to see me in person to hear what I have to say, on being informed of your desire I will at once present myself before you.

I consider myself bound by former treaties with the British Government, and do not desire in the least to alter these.

Consider me as your Excellency's loyal well-wisher and servant, and treat me with continued kindness.

No. 63.

No. 42P.C., dated Jacobabad, 22nd February 1876.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 21st February 1876.

16th February 1876.—The Naib of Nasirabad sent information to the effect that the Brahooees raided Jhok Kasim Shah near Nari, carrying off 250 cows. They plundered the village and set fire to a few houses.

The raiders were opposed by a party of irregular horse in the pay of the Khan, numbering about 100. These consisted of Rinds, Kumbranis, and Jatois, and were commanded by Jemadars Nusrat, Boogtee, and Shah Muhammad, Jatoi. On the Brahooees nearing the village the irregular horse attacked the raiders, but were repulsed, losing 40 of their number killed and one Jemadar. The remainder fled. The Brahooees are said to have had six men killed and a number wounded.

On hearing of this fight the Naib, Abdul Aziz, marched with the troops stationed at Bagh to attack the Brahooees. He was accompanied by Wudera Dost Muhammad, Rind. On reaching Mall, it being then near sunset, the Naib decided to return with the troops to Bagh, which he did. The troops did not come up with the Brahooees.

2. Sirdar Jamal Khan, Legari, reports that the Bozdars attacked the Khetrans and killed Sher Muhammad and 14 of his followers. This was done in retaliation for the raid made in December last viâ the Mahoi Pass by the Khetrans on the Bozdars. In that raid Sher Muhammad, Khetran, was one of the leaders. The Khetrans on the occasion referred to violated British territory on the way to the Mahoi Pass. The tribe was fined for this by order of the Commissioner of the Derajat.

Subsequent news states that the Khetrans, after the death of Sher Muhammad, collected to the number of 12,000 and raided the Bozdars, but were repulsed with the loss of 18 men killed. Several of the chief headmen of the Khetrans were taken prisoners, and are now in the hands of the Bozdars. The two sides, it is reported, have agreed to terms of peace very favourable to the Bozdars.

3. 18th February 1876.—Syud Aurang Shah has written from Dadar to say that the Brahooees made a raid on a village called Kunda, but were opposed by the Khan's Janashin Alliyar. In the encounter which ensued the Janashin lost one man killed and had six men wounded. The Brahooees had several men wounded. They carried off one flock of sheep.

The Jalawans made an attack on Kotri, but without success. The Khan's Naib, Abdul Latif, with a regiment of infantry under command of Kakir Muhammad occupy Zehri. It is reported that Gohur Khan, Zarukzai, is in communication with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the other Sarawan Sirdars with the object of the Jalawan and Sarawan Brahooees joining their forces and making a combined attack on the Khan's troops in Bagh. This proposal is said to have emanated from the Jalawans, but what reply the Sarawans sent is not known.

A letter from the Sarawan Brahooee Sirdars states they are still anxious to make peace with his Highness the Khan. They state that they are in rebellion from necessity and not from choice, and will now do what they can to prevent their followers from further devastating Kutchi. They ask Major Sandeman to visit Kutchi and to settle their quarrel with the Khan. They explain their object in fighting the Khan is to obtain from him by force fair terms of peace.

Muhammad Khan, nephew of the Barozai Sirdar of Seebee, who was sent to Candaha by Major Sandeman, has arrived at Jacobabad with a letter to Major Sandeman from Sirdar Futteh Khan, Governor of Candahar. The letter simply states that his Highness the Amir of Cabul has replied to his honour the Lieutenant-Governor direct about the opening of the Tal Chotiali route, which reply has doubtless been communicated to Major Sandeman.

20th February 1876.—The report that lately appeared in the "Pioneer" and other newspapers about the plundering of a large Pathan kafila in the Mulla Pass at the commencement of this month, during which over 200 Pathans were killed, is greatly exaggerated. A few camels were plundered en route from Khelat to Gundava in the Mulla Pass, but none of the kafila people, as far as is yet known, were killed, and the loss to the kafila people was not great. Particulars of what actually occurred to the kafila have been sent for, and will be given in next week's diary.

21st February 1876.—Sirdar Moolla Mahomed has written himself to urge Government to mediate between the Brahooees and the Khan, stating that all the Sirdars, Jalawan and Sarawan, will attend to the wishes of the British Government. He says, if Major Sandeman will only come into Kutchi all disorders and disturbances will cease, and that all will obey him. He can explain how the Jalawan quarrel with the Khan can be arranged.

The District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee, reports that up to the 18th of the month the frontier under his charge was perfectly quiet.

It is, however, feared that "the death of Sirdar Noordeen will give rise to much disturbance and trouble in Khelat."

The report further states that "certain Jamote prisoners who were concerned in the attack and 'loot' of the kafilas in 1872 and 1873, and who were captured and taken to Khelat by Wuzeer Atta Mahomed when he was down here with a force in April last, have lately returned to their homes. These men were released about the time that Sirdar Noordeen was murdered, or a little before, and have spread reports that they have been told by the Khan and his ministers to return to their old work of looting kafilas, committing robbery, and creating disturbances of all kinds on the frontier, and that the more they do in this line the better. They also stated that his Highness the Khan was about to send a force against Jam Ali Khan at Lus Beyla, and they had orders to collect together the Jamotes to assist.

"On hearing this, one tribe of Jamotes, who are at enmity with Jam Ali, and who were concerned in the kafila loots before and have always been our most troublesome neighbours, assembled in the hills near the frontier and gave out that they intended to loot as they liked. I (Captain Wise) was on the frontier at the time, and at once sent word to their headmen that I heard they had gone out to loot, and I had therefore given orders to the frontier police that none of them were to be allowed to cross into our territory to obtain supplies, and that such order would remain in force until one of them brought me word that the gang had dispersed.

"Up to date I have heard nothing further, but as they obtain all their supplies from our territory they will probably be dispersed."

The District Superintendent states he has "every confidence in the different Sirdars "residing near his frontier, viz., in Jam Ali Khan of Lus Beyla, Sahib Khan Choota and "Jullah Khan, Brahooee. He believes these Sirdars will succeed in keeping order "should they not be interfered with in any way by his Highness the Khan of Khelat."

The District Superintendent, police, Shikarpur, reports as follows:—

1st. Gohur Khan, Brahooee, made an attack on Kotri in the Mulla Pass, but was repulsed by Sirdar Kaisar Khan, Magussie, and by the Khan's troops.

This information corroborates what appeared in last week's diary regarding this.

2nd. Sirdar Ibrahim, brother of the late Sirdar Noordeen, attempted to intercept the Khelat troops proceeding viâ the Mulla to reinforce the garrison of Bagh. He was aided by Azaad Khan of Kharan, but with what result is not known. The troops, it has since been reported by the Naib of Nasirabad, have arrived at Bagh.

Endorsed by Officiating Commissioner in Sind.

Forwarded for information to the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, Calcutta. The District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee, has been directed, with reference to his report quoted in the diary, to confine his action strictly to the maintenance of good order, and security to life and property, along his western border, and to take no measures likely to be misconstrued as showing a leaning to one or the other side of the contending parties in Khelat territory.

From L. H. Griffin, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of my letter No. 1C., dated 19th current, enclosing khureeta from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, I am desired now to forward, in original, Major Sandeman's report, No. 8 of the 5th February, on the result of his mission, the Commissioner having forwarded copy of his own report direct to the Government of India. Should the papers be printed, I am to request that this Government may be furnished with a few spare copies.

Enclosure 1 in No. 64.

No. 8, dated Camp Jacobabad, 5th February 1876.

From Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Colonel A. A. Munro, Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat, on special duty.

I have the honour to refer you to the Proceedings of the Government of India No. 2819, dated 16th October 1875, and to request the favour of your soliciting the Government to instruct me regarding my further proceedings in connexion with them, for I find I am unable without such instructions to complete the duty I am now on.

Reference to Government of India Resolution.

2. The proceedings of Government of India referred to above directed me to proceed into the hills beyond our frontier: (1), to procure all the information I could respecting local feuds and quarrels among the Murree and Boogtee tribes, or between them and the Afghans, or between them and the Brahooees; (2), to endeavour, as far as I could, to bring about an amicable settlement of these quarrels; (3), to report for the information of Government my views on such quarrels as I could not settle; (4), to report on the general relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes and the Khan of Khelat's Government. I was also to inquire and report whether anything, and if so what, could be done for the protection of trade viâ the Bolan Pass, and whether a system of fixed tolls on caravans could not be arranged, for the proceeds of which would go to the tribes interested in the protection of the route. In respect to all or any of these arrangements discretionary power was given me in regard to the expenditure of the total sum of Rupees 66,960, sanctioned at the Mittunkote Conference.

Its requirements.

3. But in addition to issuing the orders recorded above the proceedings of Government reviewed the recent correspondence on Khelat affairs, and they set forth clearly the policy the Government desired should be followed, and the objects in connexion with it that I should keep in view during my mission into the hills. Moreover, it was distinctly stated that should the measures then authorised prove successful in affording reasonable security to trade through Khelat territory, and should his Highness the Khan show an earnest desire to co-operate for that end and to return to a proper sense of his duties, it would afford his Excellency the Governor-General in Council great pleasure, on receiving an expression of regret for what had occurred, to restore the former subsidy and to re-establish the old friendly footing with his Highness' Government.

Enunciation of Government policy in regard to Khelat affairs.

Conditional restoration of subsidy.

4. In pursuance of these instructions I left Dera Ghazi Khan for the Murree Hills on the 18th of November last. I was accompanied by the Belooch Chiefs and their followers, as per margin. The Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased to furnish me with a personal escort of regular troops, consisting of a company of the 4th Sikh infantry and 20 sabres of the 1st Punjab Cavalry. Captain Wylie, 1st Punjab Cavalry, accompanied me in command of the troops and to map the country. Dr. Thomson, of the same regiment, was in medical charge of the mission.

Captain Sandeman's departure on 18th November and escort.

5. On the 22nd of November 1875 I marched from Hurrand and reached the Shum Plain on the 25th, and was at once joined by the Loharani Murree Chiefs, to whom I sent notice of my approach. I briefly explained to them the duty I was on, and the object with which I had entered the hills. I asked them to join me, and this they heartily agreed to do. I was also joined a few days afterwards by Karam Khan, Chief of the Bijarani Murrees, and by the Boogtee and Khetran Chiefs and their followers as noted in the margin.

Reaches Shum Plain on 22nd November.
Is joined by Hill chiefs.

Sirdar Mirulla Khan with 250 horsemen; Nehal Khan, Loharani, Murree Chief, with 80 horsemen; Karam Khan, Bijarani Murree Chief, with 18 horsemen; Sher Dil and Kechi Khan, Muzerani Murree Chiefs, with 12 horsemen; Gohur Khan, son of Sirdar Golam Murteza, Boogtee, with 72 followers; Babal Khan, Khetran Chief, and his son, Beluch Khan, with 60 horsemen; Kadir Baksh, nephew of the Khetran Chief, with 44 horsemen; Din Muhammad, cousin of the Bozdor Chief, and Shikari Khan, Bozdar Headman, with 7 horsemen.

6. The mission entered Kahan, the Murree head-quarters, on the 2nd of December, and on its arrival met with a cordial welcome from Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan and the Kahan Murrees. The Sirdar himself, with a considerable following, on hearing of my nearing Kahan, came out to meet me, and on coming up to me dismounted, and presented his "nuzzur" of a few rupees.

Enters Kahan on 2nd December.

7. The day after my arrival at Kahan I held a meeting of the Murree Chiefs. At it the existing state of affairs in connexion with Khelat was fully discussed. I found Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan to be then in close correspondence with Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Chief of the Sarawan Brahooees. This Sirdar had lately written a letter to the Murree Chief, intimating that a rising was about to take place against the authority of his Highness the Khan, and Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan was invited, for the reasons given in the letter (Appendix A.), to join the Brahooee Sirdars.

Consultation with Murree headman.

Murree communications with Sirdars of Khelat State.

Contemplated rebellion in Khelat.

8. I fully discussed with Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan the contents of the letter. The causes which had induced the Murree Chiefs to take part with the Brahooee Sirdars against the Khan's Government were fully entered into. The Murree Chiefs declared that were the Khan desirous for peace, which they said they believed him to be, they would most willingly agree to any fair terms that I could arrange between his Government and them. They, however, said that no lasting peace could take place unless the Khan made it with all the Brahooee Sirdars. They explained how this was so in the following words.

Discussion with Murree Chiefs.

Their professed desire for peace.

Only foundation of a lasting peace.

9. They said that the fact of the Murree clan living in the hills as a wild people was known to all. That the present unprotected state of Kutchi was a great temptation to the clan. That designing men used the Murrees to injure the Khan by employing them on plundering expeditions, but were a general peace once made, and the same arrangements come to with all, as existed during the late Nusseer Khan's reign, the Murree Sirdar would then undertake to prevent plundering in Kutchi, and would be responsible for it; but this peace, to last, must be made with all the Sarawan-Brahooee clans.

Exposed state of Kutchi a temptation to Murree raids.

How that could be obviated.

10. In reply, I agreed to do my best to bring about the understanding required. With this object Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's letter was made over to me for disposal, and it was arranged that as Ghuzzan Khan was himself in a weakly state of health, and would, in consequence in all probability, succumb to the cold did he visit Khelat, that his brother, Mirulla, and cousin, Mir Hazar, should accompany me on my onward march. The Murree headmen Karam Khan, Bijarani, Nehal Khan, Loharani, Sher Dil, Muzerani, and other Chiefs of less note, were also to go with me. Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan agreed to give Mirulla and Mir Hazar in writing power to act for him, which was done (Appendix B.).

Captain Sandeman's proposals.

Mirulla and Mir Hazar, Murrees, to accompany as representatives of the Chief Ghuzzan Khan.

Murri Mukaddums also to join.

11. It was then settled that the next day I was to march for Seebee, where Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the other Brahooee Sirdars were said to be. There a conference was to be held, and were the Brahooee Sirdars, like the Murree Chiefs, anxious that peace should be maintained with the Government of the Khan, it was arranged that I should use my influence to obtain it.

12. With this object in view the mission left Kahan on the 4th December and reached the plains of Seebee on the 8th December, where I was joined by the Sarawan Sirdars Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, Shadi Khan, Bungulzai, Alla Dina Khoord, Junda Khan Shahwani, and other minor Brahooee Chiefs. The Khan of Seebee and the Khujjuk Chiefs also joined my camp.

Mission leaves Khan on 4th reaches Seebee Plain on 8th December.

Is joined by Brahooee Sirdars and local Chiefs.

13. The following day I held a conference of the Brahooee and Murree Chiefs, associating with them Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, and Jamal Khan, Lagari. We fully discussed the position of affairs. It was admitted, for reasons that were stated, but which it is unnecessary to enter upon here, that the country was in a state of anarchy, and that the Brahooee clans intended to again rise in rebellion against the Khelat Government. No attempt was made to deny the statement that had been made to me by Sirdar Ghazan Khan that both the Sirdars and the Khan's Government had used parties of Murrees to coerce each other, and that on this account great injury had resulted to the people of Kutchi.

Conference with assembled Chiefs.

Anarchical state of affairs in Khelat admitted.

Intending rising of the clans.

Murrees used by both contending parties to effect contrary objects.

14. Our deliberations resulted in its being arranged that the Brahooee Sirdars should take time to consider whether, under the circumstances, it was desirable that they should join the Murrees in asking the Khan's Government for peace. Did they decide to do so I on my part agreed to send their request along with that of the Murree Chiefs to his Highness the Khan by the hands of two of my own Sirdars. The Brahooee and Murree Chiefs, however, desired that I should give them in writing a statement of the objects with which I had come amongst them. This was considered necessary because the Murree Chiefs at Kahan and the Brahooee Chiefs now had explained to me that however desirous they might be to protect the trade routes and secure the safety of the Bolan Pass, without the co-operation of the Khelat Government doing so was out of their power. Before, therefore, attempting to arrange this it was necessary as a preliminary step, first to settle matters between them and the Khelat Government and get his Highness to agree to co-operate in opening out the route. I directed the Sirdars to enter this statement in their petition for peace, did they agree to make one to the Khan, which I required should be in writing.

Sirdars solicit written statement of objects of the mission.

Reasons adduced.

Settlement of difference absolutely necessary before trade routes can be opened.

15. Late that evening Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord was sent to me with the Sirdar's joint decision. He said they (the Sirdars) were quite unanimous in their earnest desire for peace, and he gave me a written request that I should apply to their Khan for it (Appendix C.) In my answer (Appendix D.) I agree to write to the Khan on the subject, and to despatch two of my own trusted Sirdars to his Highness with that object. They would be directed to explain to his Highness fully the true position of affairs, and the objects I had in view in visiting the country. It was then decided that the Brahooee Sirdars should join the expedition, and that I should proceed to Shalkot (Quettah) escorted by them and 250 of their men, and by the Murree Chiefs, and that we should remain there until the Khan's reply to their petition came. It was further agreed that we were together to inquire into the causes which had led to the closing of the Bolan Pass to traffic. The opportunity would, moreover, be afforded them of demonstrating the impracticability of keeping open the Bolan to trade without the Khan's Government aiding and co-operating with them in doing so. They said a visit to the Bolan would show the impossibility of either side separately and independently of the other keeping open the Pass.

Alla Dina Khoord presents written solicitation of Brahooee Sirdars.

Captain Sandeman undertakes to convey it to his Highness the Khan.

Brahooee Sirdars join the expedition to Shalkot (Quettah).

Advantages of a visit to the Bolan Pass.

16. My mission having so far been successfully accomplished, I decided to march the next day for the Bolan Pass, entering it at Bibinani. By taking this route I avoided coming in contact with his Highness the Khan's officials at Dadar. I decided to adopt this course until I knew that it would afford his Highness the Khan satisfaction to know of my being in the country.

Mission to enter the Pass at Bibinani.

17. On the 13th of December 1875 I left my encamping ground near Seebee en route for Bibinani. I had proceeded some distance when suddenly a party of horsemen appeared on the plain some distance off. They were apparently reconnoitring us. I at once, with a body of men, rode up to them. On reaching them they all dismounted and the chief men presented their "nuzzurs" of a few rupees. They proved to be the "Janishin" of Dadar and the Khan's commandant of cavalry stationed there. They said they had come out to meet us to entreat us to come to Dadar, and that they knew well his Highness the Khan would be delighted to hear of our arrival there. They further explained that they had collected supplies and bridged the streams we would have to cross before entering Dadar to enable us to do so in comfort. Altogether they seemed so thoroughly in earnest that I decided to visit Dadar, and in consequence at once directed my line of march to be altered with a view to visiting that place.

Meeting with Janishin of Dadar and Commandant of Khelat Cavalry.

18. On my arrival at Dadar, the Khan's artillery stationed there fired a salute of 11 guns, and not only his Highness' officials but the Chiefs and people generally appeared intensely gratified with my visit. In the evening the merchants of the town visited me, and told me of the great injury trade had sustained by the closing, during the last few years, of the Bolan Pass to traffic.

Arrival and reception at Dadar.

19. The following day, the 13th December, I halted, and here the Mingul (Sumalani) Brahooee and other headmen of the Bolan Pass joined me. One old headman was so glad to meet me that after shaking hands he lifted my hand to his mouth and kissed it before I could prevent his doing so.

Mission joined by other Chiefs.

20. On the 15th December I marched for Kirta. Just as I was starting I received a letter from the Commissioner in Sind containing subsidiary orders regarding the mission. I must here remark that previous to their arrival I had received the Government Proceedings No. 2819P: from Sir William Merewether, with an endorsement dated Commissioner's Office, Kurrachee, the 3rd November, stating that they were forwarded to me for "information and guidance."

March to Kirta in Bolan.
Letter from Commissioner in Sind.

21. The orders now received were of a nature that rendered it impossible I could comply with them, for they arrived after I had completed the preliminary negotiations with the Brahooee clans, which they were apparently issued to prevent my entering upon. Moreover, they required me to meet the Commissioner in Sind and Colonel Loch at Kusmore in Sind any date from the 20th of December to the end of that month. I may note here that the Punjab Government orders issued subsidiary to the proceedings of the Government of India required my proceeding to the Dusht-be-Daulat (a plain beyond the Bolan Pass), or some place in its neighbourhood, where the Ameer of Cabul had been requested to send an agent to meet me to confer with me regarding the opening of the Tull Chotiali route. After considering the position to prevent further complications, I referred the point demi-officially to the Foreign Secretary, forwarding to him the letter in original of the Commissioner in Sind, to which I asked him to send a reply. I explained that I was proceeding onward in obedience to the instructions received from the Punjab Government referred to above.

Impossibility of compliance with orders received.
Reasons for this.
Subsidiary orders of Punjab Government.
Reference to Foreign Secretary to Government of India.

22. On the 15th I marched to Kirta about 30 miles within the Bolan Pass. On the 16th I dispatched the Mazari and Lagari Chiefs, Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, viâ the Robdar Pass, to Khelat to confer with his Highness the Khan about the petition for peace presented by the Murree and Brahooee Sirdars. I sent ahead of them a letter (Appendix E.) to the Khan, telling him of the deputation of these two Sirdars and the object I had in view in directing them to visit his Court.

Deputation of two Sirdars to Khelat.
Letter to his Highness the Khan.

23. The Khan of Khelat to this letter at once replied, and as what he says is very important, I here record it at length: — "I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter informing me of your arrival at Seebee, and that the object of your visiting the country is to settle the quarrels and feuds between the Murrees and Brahooees. Also that you had deputed Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, and Jamal Khan, Lagari, to visit me. I have made myself fully acquainted with the contents of your letter, and in reply have to state that since the British Government through Sir W. L. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, settled the differences between the Brahooees and my Government I have maintained peace with the Brahooees and caused them no injury. Notwithstanding this, they (the Brahooee) have broken faith with me, have attacked my people, plundered their property, and destroyed their crops. When the above-named British officer settled our differences, the Brahooees bound themselves to return the plundered property taken from my people and from kafilas during the rebellion of 1872, but as yet they have not done this.

"The other day when the Brahooees left Khorassan for Kutchi they caused great violence to my people and again became rebels. On account of their depredations on my people I ordered my troops to attack them and punish them. But on receipt of your letter under reply, I prohibited my troops from causing any violence to the Brahooees.

"You have stated in your letter that the Brahooees have prevented Sirdar Noordeen Mingul (Brahooee) from raiding in my country, who was going to do so. But this statement of the Brahooee is quite untrue. I deputed Sirdar Noordeen to Lus Beyla to protect the country and to arrange revenue matters there. To discuss these I called him into Khelat, and he arrived here on the 14th Zelkad (13th December 1875).

"On the arrival of Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan I will let them know my desires, which they will explain to you. All is well. Consider me always as your friend and continue corresponding with me."

24. This letter, which I have had carefully translated, is important because it shows that Sirdar Noordeen (Mingul) arrived at Khelat on the 13th December, or on the very day I had concluded my preliminary negotiations with the Sirdars of Sarawan. Moreover on that very date I marched into Dadar; it was quite impossible, therefore, that on the date of Noordeen's reaching Khelat either he or the Khan could have known of my arrival in the country, or of the intention of the Murree and Sarawan Sirdars to petition to Khelat Government through me for peace. This letter also bears clear testimony to the fact of his Highness being quite alive to the state of affairs between him and the Sarawan Sirdars, for he particularly notices that if they are prepared to hold by the former agreement made between him and them by S. W. L. Merewether, on their fulfilling its conditions he will also gladly abide by it. What these conditions were, and how impossible it was for the Brahooee Sirdars to fulfil them, will be noticed hereafter.

Simultaneous arrival of Sirdar Noordeen Mingul at Khelat and of mission at Dadar, viz., on 13th December.

Why this is noted.

25. But to return to my narrative of events. As noted above, on the 16th December Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan left my camp, viâ the Robdar Pass, for Khelat. I continued my march on the 17th for Shalkot (Quettah). On the following day on nearing the Sir-i-Bolan we heard of the arrival there of the Naib of Dadar, Faiz Muhammad, and a party of Khan's troops en route for Dadar. They had left Mustung that morning. In the evening Faiz Muhammad and the principal officers with the troops paid me a visit. They were very polite, and here we heard for the first time of Sirdar Noordeen's arrival in Khelat. The news was told to the Sarawan Sirdars by the Khan's Naib in rather a triumphant manner, but they would not believe what was said, saying that the Naib was not to be depended on.

Mission reaches Sir-i-Bolan.

Meeting with the Naib of Dadar,

26. On the 18th we continued our march, and, on the following day, just after leaving the Dusht Plain, I was joined by Abdul Latif, the Naib of Shalkot, who informed me that he had received orders from his Highness the Khan to pay me every attention possible, and to treat me in exactly the same way as he (the Naib) would act towards his Highness the Khan himself when on tour.

and with Naib of Shalkot.

27. Shortly after the Naib's arrival an express sowar came from Jacobabad from Colonel Loch bearing a letter to my address. The following is a transcription of its contents. It is dated the 13th December:—"The Commissioner in Sind has "desired me to inform you that a revolution in Khelat is "clearly imminent, and he directs you to be most careful to avoid any communication "whatever with the Brahooee Sirdars or their followers, and that you are on no account "to go beyond the Murree Hills towards the Bolan, Seebee, Mittree, or Kutchi."

Express received from Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

Contents of letter.

28. To this I sent the following reply, dated Camp Shalkot (Quettah), the 22nd December 1875:—"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, without number, dated the 13th instant, informing me, by desire of the Commissioner in Sind, that a revolution in Khelat was so clearly imminent that the Commissioner directed you to tell me to avoid any communication whatever with the Brahooee Sirdars or their followers, and that I was on no account to go beyond the Murree Hills towards the Bolan, Seebee, Mittree, or Kutchi.

Captain Sandeman's reply.

"2. In reply to the above, I shall be obliged by your informing the Commissioner in Sind that I left the Murree Hills on the 10th instant, or three days before your letter under reply was written. It will, however, doubtless afford the Commissioner in Sind pleasure and relief to know that the state of Khelat is so far quite tranquil that the contending factions, notwithstanding their differences, express their earnest desire to preserve the present peaceful state of the country, which I trust may be maintained.

"3. I am at present busily engaged in carrying out the instructions contained in the Government of India Resolution of the 16th of October last. As soon as they are concluded I will submit, through the Commissioner in Sind, for the information of the Government, the report called for in the above-named Resolution of the Government of India."

29. After despatching the reply recorded above, I received the Dumar Chiefs of the Kakar Pathan tribe, who inhabit the hills to the right of Shalkot (Quettah). They stated their wishes were those of the Brahooee Sirdars, and that they would, like them, gladly join in any arrangements I could make for the protection of trade. They told me that prior to the closing of the Bolan Pass to trade they had been in the receipt of an allowance from his Highness the Khan, which has since been discontinued. They seem well disposed, and stated as they were very poor they would be greatly pleased if I could arrange their quarrel with his Highness' Government and get back for them their allowance.

Meeting with Dumar Kakar Pathan Chiefs.

Results of interview.

30. On the 24th of December I arrived at Shalkot (Quettah) under a salute of 11 guns. In the evening I visited the town, and was received with every possible mark of honour by the Khan's officials. Here I received a letter from his Highness the Khan. It is dated the 24th Zelkad 1292 (23rd December 1875), and runs as follows: "I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter sent by the hands of Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, and Jamal Khan, Lagari. I have made myself fully acquainted with its contents. The above-named Sirdars have given me your message, and informed me of the kind intentions of the British Government towards me and of your own kind wishes.

Arrival and reception at Shalkot (Quettah).

Letter from his Highness the Khan.

Its purport.

"I consider myself as subject to the British Government and believe you are my friend. I am ever ready to attend to the wishes of your Government, and to be bound by my old engagements with it. I have verbally informed your Sirdars of my own views and desires, and they will explain these to you. Should you so desire it I will come myself to visit you at any place you like to name. In the meantime I send my Mustowfi, Mulla Fakir Muhammad, who will accompany Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, to attend on you and see to your wants. All is well. Continue to correspond with me."

31. In addition to this I received a letter (Appendix F.) from my two Sirdars, then with the Khan, to say that his Highness was highly pleased to see them, and would agree to all the proposals I had desired them verbally to explain to the Khan, who had approved of them and of my arrival in the country. Altogether, up to the date of my arrival at Shalkot, viz., the 23rd December, my mission had prospered beyond my expectations, and there was every reason possible for believing that the result the Government had in view in sending it into the country would be fully attained.*

Report of Sirdars deputed to his Highness.

Favourable aspect of affairs up to this point.

* See also postscript to this letter, which contains Colonel Loch's views, which strongly support mine here given.—R. SANDEMAN.

32. But I reckoned without my host. On the 24th December I received another express from Jacobabad. It was also from Colonel Loch, C.B., and was dated the 17th December 1875. Its contents were as follows: "Under instructions conveyed to me by telegram from the "Commissioner in Sind, I have the honour to direct that "on receipt of this letter you will at once return to "your own district, Dera Ghazi Khan, and that you will report your arrival there to "the Commissioner in Sind, and explain to him why you "have disobeyed his express orders not to visit Seebee or "Kutchi, or to communicate with the Brahooee Sirdars."

Symptoms of interruption.

Letter from Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

Orders therein conveyed.

33. To this I sent the following reply, dated Shalkot (Quettah), 25th December 1875: "In reply to your No. 4419, dated 17th instant, I have "the honour to refer you to my Office No. 171, dated "Shalkot, the 22nd instant. In addition to the explanation in that letter, I have the "honour to state that I fully understand that I am on special duty, acting directly under Captain Sandeman's reply.

" the orders of the Government of India conveyed to me in their proceedings of the " 16th of October last. As already stated in the letter above referred to, after I have " completed the duty I am now on, I shall submit a report through the Commissioner in " Sind for the information of Government as directed. At the same time I despatched a Telegram to Foreign Secretary to Government of India.

" telegram by special messenger to Rajanpur informing the " Foreign Secretary of what had happened. I pointed out " that the orders of the Commissioner in Sind directing me at once to return to my district " clashed with those I had received from the Punjab Government, and I requested that " further instructions might be issued to the Commissioner, Colonel Loch, and myself " conveying to us the final orders of Government for guidance." This was done, but they reached too late to be of value.

34. But it is my duty here to record that the arrival of these messengers from Jacobabad was calculated to counteract the objects of my mission and to injuriously affect the minds of all the Chiefs in camp. I was continually asked by the Brahooee Chiefs if it was true that I was in the country merely for pleasure. Similar questions were asked of Captain Wylie regarding my mission, and shortly after I resumed my march en route for Mustung to meet the Khan's Mustowfi, I began to feel that even our own Chiefs were doubtful as to what my powers from Government really were. I put, however, a bold face on matters, and unchanged proceeded on my course. It had, however, been brought to my notice by Syud Aurang Shah of Dadar, who was with me, that Naib Abdul Aziz had sent off to the Khan an express sowar to tell him of all that had occurred.

Injurious effects of the orders received.

Objects of mission misconstrued, and doubts as to its authority.

His Highness the Khan informed of counter orders received.

35. When encamped at Shalkot a large kafila arrived from Candahar. The Kafilabashi came to me and said that he had left Candahar en route to India, because he had heard from two Jacobabad kossids who had passed me in the Bolan of my arrival in the country, and he asked me to give him a Brahooee and Murree escort through the Pass. I enquired of the Naib, Abdul Latif, regarding this. He said I could of course do as I liked, but the Khan had directed that kafilas were not to go through the Bolan Pass, but were to proceed to India viâ Khelat and the Mulla. The kafila people grumbled greatly at this order, saying, its issue entailed great danger from the severe cold to the safety of the caravans. That the route viâ Khelat was a very long one compared with the Bolan Pass route, and that on the way no fodder was to be obtained for their luggage animals, &c. After considering the position, I decided I could not interfere with his Highness' orders. It was clear to me, however, that the object of the Brahooee and Murree Chiefs in bringing me to Shalkot (Quettah) was obtained, for it was perfectly obvious that without the co-operation of his Highness the Khan, as the Fort of Shalkot covered the kafila route, the Bolan Pass could not be again open to traffic.

Kafila at Shalkot.

Prohibition as to use of Bolan Pass.

Dissatisfaction of traders.

Captain Sandeman does not interfere.

What the incident illustrates.

36. I marched into Mustung on the 26th December under a salute of 11 guns, and the following day Mustowfi Fakir Muhammad, accompanied by Sirdars Jamal Khan and Imam Buksh Khan, arrived on the part of his Highness the Khan. Mustowfi Mulla Fakir Muhammad conveyed to me the most respectful messages from his Highness, and told me the Khan was most desirous of peace, and deeply regretted the misunderstanding which had arisen between him and the British Government, assuring me the Khan would come to Mustung himself, did I desire it, to say so.

March to Mustung.

Return of deputed Sirdars with his Highness' Mustowfi.

37. I sent through the Mustowfi the following reply, dated Mustung, 26th December, to the Khan's letter received at Shalkot (Quettah) recorded above:—" I have received your letter and " perused its contents. I am much pleased with what you say; I also appreciate your " Highness' kindness in sending your Mustowfi, Fakir Muhammad, to meet me.

" I have consulted with him and my Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan as to where we should meet, and I have decided in visiting you at once to consult with you regarding the duty on which the Government of India has sent me, I will therefore proceed towards Khelat directly the weather permits."

Reply to his Highness' previous letter.

38. The Khan at once replied as follows:—" I have to acknowledge the receipt of " your letter informing me of your health, also that you " were en route to visit me at Khelat. I have made

His Highness' acknowledgment.

" myself fully acquainted with its contents. I am highly pleased we are to meet, as I " am very anxious to see you. All is well, &c."

39. I may here note that the Jacobabad messenger, whom I had despatched to Jacobabad with my reply to Colonel Loch's letter recorded above, returned to my camp, saying the weather prevented his crossing the Dusht Plain. The Mustowfi, Fakir Muhammad, that day paid me a visit, and during it asked me by what authority I had come into the country, and whether I had permission from the Commissioner in Sind to arrange matters between his master and the tribes. I reassured the Mustowfi, telling him exactly what the orders of Government were. Even then, although I felt very anxious on the subject of the extent of the injury the arrival of these messengers was doing the cause I was on, I still hoped to be able to tide it over and maintained an unaltered aspect. I was, however, to know shortly the effect their arrival and news of a similar nature to that conveyed to my people by them, but received from other sources, was producing on the minds of his Highness the Khan and his advisers.

Return of a messenger.

Mustowfi's interrogations.

Effect of injurious reports.

40. I left Mustung under a salute of 11 guns, and arrived at Khelat on the 31st of December. The Khan sent out his son, Mir Mahmud Khan, a boy of 12 years of age, escorted by a regiment of cavalry, to bring me in. They met me several miles from Khelat. A salute of 11 guns announced our arrival. After seeing me to my Camp, Mir Mahmud Khan took his leave, but left with me Nawab Muhammad Khan, late Vakeel at Jacobabad, to see to my comfort. The very first question the Ex-Vakeel put to me was as to whether I had lately received letters from Jacobabad. On my replying in the affirmative, he asked in a very significant manner as to their purport. I told him, in reply, that when I visited his Highness the Khan I would give him every particular as to the objects the Government had in view in sending my mission into the country.

Mission leaves Mustung.

Deputation of his Highness' son to meet and welcome the mission to Khelat.

Questions continued as to communications from Sind.

41. The next day was devoted to visits of ceremony. I went in the morning, about noon, accompanied by Captain Wylie and Doctor Thomson and an escort of Punjab cavalry, to visit the Khan. We were all in uniform, and were received with considerable ceremony. The approach to the Durbar room was lined with troops, and everything possible done to receive us with honour. The Khan of Khelat, Mir Khodadad Khan, met us at the door of the Durbar room, and with considerable ceremony conducted us to our seats. He was surrounded by his courtiers, but with the exception of Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, whose presence in consequence was conspicuous, no Brahooee or other Chief of note was present. After sitting a little talking on ordinary subjects we took our leave.

Noordeen Mingul sole Sirdar of note at his Highness' Durbar.

42. In the afternoon of the same day his Highness, Mir Khodadad Khan, accompanied by his three sons, returned my visit. He arrived in Camp about 4 p.m. My escort of regular troops lined the approach to my tents and saluted him as he dismounted. On alighting from his horse he was received by Captain Wylie, I myself meeting him at the door of my tent. The Khan sat for some hours talking. He asked permission to inspect the Punjab troops, which was granted. After doing so he took his leave seemingly very much gratified with his visit.

Return visit of his Highness.

43. The next day, 2nd of January, was to be devoted to business. On the morning of that day, accompanied by Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, I went to the Durbar room. After talking a little the courtiers were all dismissed, and the Khan and myself were left alone, our confidential attendants merely being present. The Khan retained with him Nawab Muhammad Khan Sheikh, late Vakeel at Jacobabad, and a Pathan adviser of the name of Abdulla Khan. I retained Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan.

Visit on business.

44. On our being left with the attendants named in the last paragraph, the Khan turned round towards me and asked me to be good enough to explain my desires and the objects I had in view in visiting Khelat. In reply, I told him they were those my two Sirdars, now present, had stated to him when they visited him to present to him the Murree and Brahooee request for peace. He asked me to personally inform him of my wishes. I did so, saying that I trusted he would see the necessity of making a permanent peace with the Murrees and Brahooees, and arranging with me for the protection of the Bolan Pass traffic which I had been authorised by Government to do my best to secure. I pointed out that the Murrees had always to me maintained that their cause of quarrel with his Government was the same as the Sirdars, viz., the depriving them of service granted by his late brother, Mir Nusseer Khan, and the confiscation of their jaghire lands. On my mentioning the conditions of peace granted to the Sirdars, his Highness gave a most disagreeable smile, and said at once that the conditions of peace given to the Sarawan Sirdars were of such a nature that "neither the present Sirdars nor their children's children could fulfil them." He alluded to the conditions of peace made in 1872, which required that the Sirdars should make good the property plundered from the kafilas, and that all the property seized during the rebellion of that year by the Sirdars and their followers "from the ryots of "Beloochistan, whether in Khorassan or Kutchi, had to be restored." A reference to the record of that year will show that the rebellion had been a very successful one. Shalkot, Mustung, Bagh, Dadar, and other places having been captured by the rebels, the property in consequence which was destroyed amounted to a large sum. The money due to the Khan by the Sirdars for the kafilas plundered under the conditions of peace was of itself nearly a lakh, for his Highness said that the lakh of rupees given him that year by the Government to meet necessary expenses had been used, all but Rupees 10,000, by the Sind authorities to reimburse the merchants' losses.

Khan's inquiry as to objects and means.

Explanation of objects.

Contemptuous reference of Khan to previous conditions of peace with Sirdars in 1872.

Reasons for deeming them impracticable.

45. In reply to this explanation of his Highness, I said that all I desired him to grant the Murree clan was a peace with his Government the conditions of which they could fulfil, and I trusted after what he had said that he would take pity on the distracted state of the country, and also give the Brahooee Sirdars such terms of peace that they also could fulfil them. I pointed out that the Murree and Sarawan cause was one, and that unless a comprehensive agreement was made with all, including the Dumar-Kakar Pathan Chiefs and the Murrees and Minguls of the Bolan Pass, no satisfactory arrangements for the peace of Kutchi and the protection of the Bolan Pass for traffic could be effected.

Captain Sandeman's reply.

46. In answer to these remarks his Highness said that he could not agree to be responsible for the Bolan Pass traffic. That the original order closing the Pass was issued by Major Harrison, who sent notice to the Candahar merchants that the Pass was closed. In consequence of this order he had removed his police post of Kirta in the Pass. He said, however, he would co-operate with me in opening the Pass by directing his Naibs of Shalkot (Quettah) and Dadar to help me by every means in their power, but the responsibility for the safety of kafilas could no longer be accepted by him. Although he would accept no responsibility, he would however expect the fair share of the kafila fees which had always been the right of the Khans of Khelat.

Reasons adduced by his Highness for non-interference as to Bolan Pass.

47. I did not attempt to argue with him on the want of fairness in what he said, but in my reply endeavoured to show how greatly he and his people lost by the present state of anarchy in the country, and I endeavoured to move him to a fair sense of his duty as ruler of the country and successor of the great Nusseer Khan, by pointing to the fact that I, a British officer, after great trouble and expense, had brought to his feet the Brahooee, Murree, Dumar, and other Bolan Chiefs, and was entreating him in the name of his ancestors to have mercy on his people and country, and to make peace with the Chiefs in accordance with old Brahooee and Belooch custom. I said I was in a position to state that all the Chiefs would gladly accept the terms of peace formerly granted by his late brother, Mir Nusseer Khan.

Captain Sandeman's rejoinder.

48. For a time my earnest tone and manner did seem to move him, and I could see I had impressed him to some extent for he hesitated a little. At this stage of the conference Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan said to the Khan, he hoped his Highness would answer him plainly as to the causes which had led him to go back from the promise he had given himself and Sirdar Jamal Khan during their late visit to make peace with all in accordance with the terms granted by his brother, the late Mir Nusseer Khan. The Sirdar appealed to the Khan, asking if it was not true that he (the Khan) had not only agreed to the proposals I had sent him and Jamal Khan to make, but had deputed his Mustowfi, Fakir Muhammad, to visit me to say so and to bring me to Khelat.

Its visible effects.

Endeavour to explain inconsistencies.

49. To this his Highness gave an evasive reply, admitting however that what the Sirdar said about his having promised to make peace with the Murrees and Sirdars being quite true. Seeing distinctly that for the present prolonging the interview would do no good, I proposed to adjourn the conference. His Highness at once signified his approval, but said he would reflect well on all I had explained to him, and would next day again visit me in camp and give a final reply. I then took my leave.

Conference adjourned.

50. On my return to Camp Sirdar Moolla Mahomed paid me a visit to tell me that the rumours about Sirdar Noordeen having of his own accord joined the Khan were quite true, and that he was playing a double part in Khelat politics, and one quite opposed to the interests of the Sirdars. The Sirdar asked me to send for Noordeen and to admonish him. This I declined to do. I said that as Noordeen had gone to the Khan of his own accord, it would do infinite harm did I interfere between the two. I may mention here that during our stay in Khelat, Sirdar Noordeen did not visit in accordance with Belooch custom our own Sirdars, but held entirely aloof from them.

Sirdar Moolla Mohamed's visit.

Declares Noordeen to be playing a double part.

Captain Sandeman declines to send for that Sirdar, who had kept aloof from other Sirdars.

51. The next day, an hour or more before I expected his Highness the Khan's visit, Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan asked for a private interview with me, I at once granted it. On coming into my tent they said they were sure they knew the reasons that had led to the Khan going back from his promise to them. I said, "tell them." They at once replied, "The letters from Jaco- "babad have done it all. The Khan has been told that you have no authority from the "Government to make peace, and this has been told to him since we left with his "Mustowfi to bring you to Khelat." I was then informed that Ex-Vakeel Muhammad Khan had a son living at Nurpur, near Jacobabad, who had been writing news to his father about my mission into the hills, who had told it to the Khan. Our two Sirdars were strongly of opinion that the Khan himself when they first met him had really wanted peace, and that the story of my want of power from Government to treat with him alone had changed him.

Formerly deputed Sirdars seek an interview with Captain Sandeman.

Their explanation of his Highness the Khan's change of demeanour.

52. After hearing all the Sirdars had to urge, I decided, when the Khan paid his visit, to be perfectly open with him, and explain to him what my Sirdars had told me. I determined to tell him plainly with what object the Government of India had sent my mission into the country.

Captain Sandeman's resolve in consequence.

53. The Khan arrived in camp about 4 p.m. I received him as usual, and after we were seated I asked him to dismiss all but his confidential advisers, as I had something particular to say to him. This he did at once, and I told him before Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan what they had just said to me. On hearing it he opened his eyes, gave a hearty laugh, and at once turned to the Ex-Vakeel, Muhammad Khan, who was some distance away from him, and said, "Ah "Muhammad Khan, you are found out. Don't fear. I will be responsible; the Sahib "is not angry with you. It is not right for a father to fear his son," alluding evidently to the Ex-Vakeel's son who had sent the news, &c. His Highness the Khan then desired to give me full particulars of his quarrel with the Sind authorities, saying they were already very angry with him, and did he treat with me, excepting by order of the British Government, he knew, from experience, that he would give still deeper offence, &c.

His Highness the Khan's second visit.

References to news from Sind.

His Highness' fears and scruples.

54. In reply I explained to him fully my position, and I read to him from the Government of India proceedings of the 16th October last, the objects the Government desired to accomplish in sending my mission into the country. In polite language I told his Highness that it would not be becoming in me to listen, under the circumstances, to his complaints against the Sind officers.

Objects of mission fully explained to him.

55. After hearing all I had to advance, the Khan then said, "But no power has been "given you to dispose of my quarrel with Sirdar Moolla "Mahomed and the other Brahooee Sirdars. Their quarrel "with my Government has been settled by the Sind officers, and I cannot alter without "the authority of the British Government, or I may fall between two stools. Did I listen "to you and enter upon new agreements with Murrees and Brahooees, and afterwards did I "find the Sind officers had to put these in force, I would get no help from them, and my "Sirdars would in consequence get their help and support to my great loss." He said the peace arranged at Jacobabad is not a possible one (in reference to its conditions he used the word na moomkin, meaning impossible). During this interview he spoke in a most reasonable way, and concluded with words to the effect that he could not rule his country without the aid of the British.

Further discussions and explanations.

56. In answer I again placed before him the true position of affairs. I admitted that it was true I had not the power to settle between him and the Brahooee Sirdars, but I was directed by Government to do all I could to arrange a peace between his Government and the Murrees (the Bolan Murrees included), and as the Bolan Pass could not be opened to traffic until the Murree and Brahooee quarrel about the kafila fees was arranged, he must see plainly that their dispute regarding this was really a part of it, and inseparable from the quarrel between him and his Sirdars, and to arrange it properly it was necessary to treat the matter as a whole and deal with it as such.

His Highness' expression of inability to act differently from what was required from Sind.

The cost to him and hatred between him and his Sirdars.

57. The Khan then told me plainly that he knew to do as I recommended would require him to alter his entire policy. Truth necessitates my adding that he said, "Sahib, had I met you years "ago and heard what you have now said matters would "be different from what they now are between me and my Chiefs. I have an office "filled with papers advising me to pursue the policy I am now engaged on, but if your "Government direct me to alter and send positive orders, I must obey these, but I "won't otherwise do so, as I am entitled to Government "help, having spent many lakhs of rupees in fighting and "coercing my Sirdars, whom I hate, and who hate me."

The Khan's admission of weakness.

His expectations,

and reference to policy hitherto pursued.

58. To this I replied that I understood him to say that he had not the power to reduce the country to obedience by force of arms. He admitted this most openly, saying he had no such power, and that it was this knowledge that made him feel that he must do as the British Government directed, but before complying with my wishes in regard to restoring peace on the terms given by his brother, Nusseer Khan, he claimed the right to be heard by our Government. He seemed to think our Government was bound to give him money and arms to enable him to carry out the policy he had been educated in by Government officers towards his Sirdars, saying that to that alone was due the fact of a civil war now existing in his country, with which he was unable single-handed to cope.

59. I informed his Highness in reply that so very important a point as the one he had now advanced was, of course, one I could not deal with, and also that I was quite certain our Government would never deny him a fair hearing, and, in my opinion, he ought to tell the Government what he had just said to me. He then asked me to be the bearer from him of a letter to his Excellency the Viceroy. I explained to him the custom on such occasions, and that if he wrote a letter to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor asking him to forward his letter to his Excellency the Viceroy, I would accept it and forward the two letters.

His Highness asks Captain Sandeman to be the bearer of letters to the Viceroy and Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

60. The result of our conversation, as given above, seemed highly to please his Highness. He had come at 4 in the afternoon, and it was now nearly 9 at night. On his rising to go away I proposed that as a preliminary step to changing his policy towards his Sirdars and their tribes, I trusted he would receive the Sirdars and Chiefs now in Khelat, who were all desirous of making their submission and being received by him. He at once heartily agreed, saying he would receive all in the morning, and would hold a Durbar for the purpose.

His Highness agrees to give the Sirdars an interview.

61. Next day, at noon precisely, I went accompanied by all the Sirdars and Chiefs then in Khelat to the Durbar room. Captain Wylie, 1st Punjab Cavalry, also accompanied me.

Proceedings of next day.

The British Chiefs present were Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, Jamal Khan, Lagari, Sekunder Khan, Khosa, Miran Khan, Drishak, Gholam Haider, Lund, Muhammad Massu Khan, Nutkani, Mazar Khan, and Ahmad Khan, son of the Lund Chief.

Chiefs present.

Brahooee Sirdars.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisa-ni, his eldest son Hassad Khan, Sirdar Alla Dina Khoord, Shadi Khan, Bungulzai, Muhammad Said Khan, Junda Khan, Shahwani, Yar Muhammad Khan.

The Murree Chiefs present were—

Sirdar Mirulla Khan, Mir Hazar Khan, cousin of the Murree Sirdar, Gul Muhammad, nephew of the Murree Sirdar, Karam Khan, Chief of the Bijarani Murrees, Nehal Khan, Chief of the Loharani Murrees, Sher Dil and Kenchi Khan, Chiefs of the Mazerani Murrees (Bolan Pass Murrees), and the Bolan Pass Dumar (Pathan) Kakar Chiefs Rahim Dad and Khodadad, Mingul Brahooees Rasool Baksh, Rahu Khan, and Khair Muhammad.

The Boogtee and Khetran Chiefs present were—

Gohur Khan, son of Sirdar Golam Murteza, Boogtee, Haibat Khan, Chief of the Massuri Boogtees, Fatteh Khan, Chief of the Nathani Boogtees, Rugga Khan, Chief of the Khalpur Boogtees, Beluch Khan and Kadir Baksh, eldest son and nephew of the Chief of the Khetrans.

62. Before the Brahooee Sirdars were admitted to the Khan's presence considerable ceremony was observed. A message was sent to the Khan's Shahghassee to say that the Sirdars asked an audience of the Khan, and that they inquired after his Highness' health. A suitable reply was sent by the Khan, and they and their headmen were then admitted. On their entering the Durbar room his Highness the Khan rose and remained standing until Sirdar Moolla Mahomed saluted him. This was done by the Sirdar kissing the Khan's extended right hand and touched both his eyes with it. Both then sat down, and all the other Chiefs and their followers advanced and kissed his Highness' hand in the way Sirdar Moolla Mahomed had done. After all were seated I asked the Khan's permission to address the assembly, which was at once granted, and I did so to the following effect.

Ceremonies observed.

63. I said that the day was a very auspicious one that had brought so many Khelat Chiefs and Sirdars to the feet of the ruler of the country, Mir Khodadad Khan. I explained the object with which I had visited the country, and the great pleasure it had given me to obtain the consent of his Highness the Khan to make peace with his Sirdars and Chiefs who were also anxious for peace. That the Khan, at my request, had agreed to receive all his Sirdars in Durbar and to accept their submission, but could not arrange with them the exact terms of peace until a point we were in doubt about had been referred to the British Government. I then told the assembled Chiefs that I had one or two points to talk over privately with his Highness the Khan before he himself addressed them, and I asked the Khan to close the Durbar for a short time to give me the opportunity of doing this.

Captain Sandeman's address in Durbar.

64. My object in asking this was to enable me to make sure of the terms the Khan had agreed the previous evening to give the Sirdars and the Murrees should the reply from the Government be of such a nature as to make it advisable for his Highness to come to terms in the way I proposed with the Chiefs and clans. The Durbar was at once closed, and Captain Wylie, the Khan's eldest son, Mir Muhammad Khan, and myself were left alone with his Highness.

Durbar temporarily closed and why.

65. Addressing myself to the Khan I then went carefully over all that occurred from first to last since I entered the Kohistan by order of the Government of India, and I concluded my address by asking the Khan if he truly desired peace, and would grant it in the way proposed by me, did the Government require him to make it with his Chiefs and people. I said I particularly desired to know if he would do this willingly, and would give the old terms granted by his brother, the late Nusseer Khan.

Captain Sandeman's address to the Khan in private.

66. The Khan heartily responded to my request, saying he was quite in earnest during the previous evening in what he had said. I asked Captain Wylie to record for my information what he recollected of this and a subsequent interview with his Highness, regarding which I will presently enter upon, and this Captain Wylie has done. His letter is marked Appendix G.

His Highness the Khan's acquiescence.

67. In this way having come, as far as was possible, to a thorough understanding with his Highness, the Durbar was again opened, and the Chiefs and Sirdars took their seats. Some little time afterwards Sirdar Noordeen entered, bowed to his Highness, and took his place away from the Brahooee Sirdars, sitting down amongst the attendants belonging to his Highness' Court.

Re-opening of the Durbar.

Entry of Sirdar Noordeen.

68. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed then addressed the Khan in the following words:—

Address of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to his Highness the Khan.

"Your Highness, we the tribes of Sarawan are your "subjects; you are our King and master. We have come "to your door to ask forgiveness for past offences, and trust your Highness will pardon "our evil deeds. Great troubles have been experienced by us all, for which we are sorry. "Look upon what has occurred as due to misfortune, and have mercy upon us. We are "your subjects."

69. To this his Highness the Khan replied, turning round to me and saying with apparent truth—"I am going to speak kindly. I will "make peace if the British Government order me to do "so after I have told it all that is in my heart." He then said—

His Highness' reply.

"Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and other Brahooee Sirdars, I (Khodadad Khan) am the subject of the British Government. My country and all that I have belongs to the British, and it is my duty to make these over to that Government on being called on to do so. The kingdom of Khelat, since my ancestors possessed it, has always been subordinate to a superior Government, and has never been a kingdom wholly independent.

"Since the British Government took Sind and came into this part of the world, Khelat has been a dependency of the British Government. But, notwithstanding this, of late years the British Government has separated itself from Khelat, and left me to rule alone. I do not know the real cause of this, for I cannot say I have neglected the advice given me by the British.

"Such being my position, and feeling helpless, I looked about for another King. I thought of asking the help of the Ameer of Cabul, or of the Shah of Persia, but I did not do so, saying to myself I am truly the old subject of the British, and one day they will surely remember the fact, and call upon me personally to explain the state of my affairs from first to last. You (turning to me) Sahib have come into this country by order of your Government, and if you tell me I must do such and such a thing, I must obey, because I am subject to the British, but you do not order me to act contrary to my wishes, therefore, before settling with the Brahooees, I must from beginning to end lay my affairs before your Government."

Turning to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed the Khan said—

"Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, once you were my subject. It is 17 years since differences first commenced between you and me. You should remember that although you have caused me loss by your acts, doing so has not benefited yourself. I am Khan of Khelat and you are my Sirdars (turning and facing all), I liken myself to a man who has the proper complement of arms and legs—I am the body, you, Sirdars, are the arms and legs. No living man desires to injure the arms and legs of his own body by his own acts, but if a limb gets diseased, and likely by remaining on the trunk to injure the entire body, he cuts it off, and casts it from him." The Khan then turned to me and said "Sahib, is it "not so? Don't the English Hakeems do this when necessity arises for it." He then resumed his speech.

"If you, Sirdars, act honestly for the future I will make peace with you. Necessity alone has caused me to injure you. Remember this, and do no more harm to my people. All that has passed between us I forgive. It is four years now since Sir W. L. Merewether settled our differences. I have held by the peace then made, but you, Sirdars, cannot say you have fulfilled the conditions you agreed to. You have not paid the value of the kafilas you plundered, nor paid for the losses caused to my people by your misconduct, although you agreed to do so. But now that Captain Sandeman has brought you here, I am willing to forgive even these matters, but first I must write to the British Government on the subject. As soon as the British Government sends me a reply I will then join Captain Sandeman, and we will together do what is ordered. Until such reply is received do not injure my people, and I will not allow my troops to injure you."

70. To this Sirdar Moolla Mahomed in the most humble tone replied—"Your "Highness, you are our King, and we are your subjects. "We have been very unfortunate and have suffered much, "do have mercy on us. We have been deprived of your favours for long. Forget our "past bad acts. We are at your feet."

Mulla Mahomod's rejoinder.

71. His Highness the Khan then addressed the Murree Chiefs as follows; but it was clearly with difficulty he could reconcile himself to the Murree alliance, for, before speaking to them, he whispered to me—"Nothing but the sword will ever cure the Murrees."

His Highness' address to the Murris.

He then said:—

"Murree Chiefs, since former times you are my subjects, and you were at one time loyal and true to the Khelat Government. Since you commenced your depredations I have looked upon you merely as a set of thieves and scoundrels, but lately you attacked my troops, killed them, and captured my guns. Since then I have looked upon you as a disloyal people. But now you have come to me with Captain Sandeman, I accept your submission, and will forgive your past conduct on condition that you abstain for the future from evil acts. If you do not do so, then Captain Sandeman will join me, and we will together punish you. Do not think we cannot do this. If the Sahib helps, we can together destroy you." His Highness then asked me to confirm his words.

72. I, at the Khan's request, addressed a few words to the Murrees. I said I felt sure they would hold to their promises, and if his Highness forgave the past it would be necessary for them to behave well. I said I had Ghuzzan Khan's written promise saying he would be responsible for Kutchi, as far as their tribe was concerned, once peace was established between the Khan's Government and them, see Appendix H. That what the Khan said was quite true, that if they broke faith after a permanent arrangement had been come to it would certainly be to their great loss.

Captain Sandeman's special reference to the Murrees.

Mirulla and Mir Nazar replied in proper terms, saying the Murrees would keep faith with the Khan. Sirdar Karam Khan said that he hoped the Khan would restore their service in taking them again into favour and give Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan back the Murree jaghire. To this request of Karam Khan's I drew the attention of his Highness the Khan.

Reply of Murree representatives.

73. The Khan then said:—"It is quite true. When Shah Nawaz Khan opposed my "father, Mir Mehrab Khan, the Murree Sirdar, Din Mu- "hammad, joined him and did good service, and on this "account my father, Mir Mehrab Khan, gave the jaghire of Tunia to the Murree "Sirdar. For misconduct I afterwards confiscated this "jaghire; but if you Murrees will give up your evil ways "and will for the future act honestly, the jaghire of "Tunia shall be restored to you."

His Highness' reference to past history of Murrees.

Why their jaghire was confiscated.

Conditional restoration.

74. Some further conversation ensued between the Murree Chiefs and the Khan, but it was of no importance, and it is unnecessary to record it. The Durbar then was brought to a close. His Highness remarking to me as I was leaving him that he would come and say good-bye the following evening, and would bring letters with him for his Excellency the Viceroy and the honourable the Lieutenant-Governor. I had arranged to leave Khelat the next day but one, as there was nothing to detain me longer in Khelat.

Durbar dissolved.

75. From what is recorded above it will be seen, as far as circumstances admitted of their doing so, my negotiations with the Khelat Government had apparently prospered well, and I felt very hopeful that ultimately peace between the contending factions, so very necessary in the interests of all concerned, would by the intervention of our Government be secured.

Apparent success of negotiations up to this point.

76. Next morning, however, I was surprised and grieved at receiving copy of a report direct from his Highness to say that the Naib of Bagh had attacked the Brahooees in Kutchi, killing several and carrying off a number of sheep and goats. On getting the news I at once sent word to the Khan to say that my delaying till the next day was quite useless, as under circumstances such as those described in the Naib's letter peace in Kutchi was quite hopeless.

Causes of disturbances.

Conflict near Bagh.

Captain Sandeman and Murrees to depart.

77. To this message his Highness sent to say that he was coming himself to my camp, and to await his arrival. On hearing this I sent for Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and asked him what his hopes of peace under the circumstances were, and if he could account for the Khan's troops acting as they had done.

His Highness announces his desire for another interview.

The Sirdar said probably the Brahooees had committed some offence, that he and the other Sirdars were very anxious for peace, and if his Highness would agree not to cause further injury to the Brahooees, and would restore the plunder for what had happened, they did not desire to break the conditional peace agreed upon the day before.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's views of the untoward occurrence.

78. On getting this reply, I sent word to his Highness that I would await his arrival in camp. He came accompanied by his son, but his looks had altered very much. He said that he could not trust the Brahooee Sirdars; that they were all rebels, and, at heart, hated him and he hated them; that what had occurred was the result of their people plundering in Kutchi. To exemplify this he then said that in the Khelat State there was only one loyal Sirdar left, Fakir Muhammad, who any day might become disloyal, and he would then have to kill or hang him. He asked me not to be angry of what had occurred in Kutchi, which was merely an every day event.

Captain Sandeman accedes to another meeting.

His Highness the Khan's altered demeanour and explanations.

79. To this I replied that I was not angry, only very sorry, and greatly disappointed, as it was clear that under such circumstances no permanent reconciliation between him and his Sirdars could be arrived at. I pointed out that what he had said about Sirdar Fakir Muhammad was not apposite to the present position of affairs; that we were all his guests, and no Government, be it Christian, Mahomedan, or Hindoo, broke a truce of the nature granted by him to the Brahooee Sirdars during the time negotiations were going on. I could not, however, get him to see this. His one idea seemed to be that as the Brahooees had been misbehaving, only punishment would bring them to a proper sense of their allegiance to himself.

Captain Sandeman's reply.

His Highness' apparently fixed impression.

80. After a good deal of talk I agreed to delay leaving Khelat until the next day, the date on which I originally had decided to march, but I said I did this to show I was not angry, as I was only very deeply grieved. The Khan replied by asking me to take and deliver the letters referred to above for his Excellency the Viceroy and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor, remarking that he held to all that he promised in Durbar the day before.

Captain Sandeman postpones departure for a day.

His Highness' letters to the Viceroy and Lieutenant-Governor received.

81. I agreed to be the bearer of the letters which the Khan told an attendant to produce, but in taking them I informed his Highness I would in delivering them, give the Government a true account of all that had occurred, to which he assented. Just as he was giving me the letters Ex-Vakeel Muhammad Khan tried with great and marked eagerness to prevent the Khan's handing them to me, kneeling at his feet and trying to get him to change his mind. The Khan, however, was quite determined and urged the letters on me. I have the honour to enclose them, and shall be obliged by your forwarding them to the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor for whatever notice the Government may consider it desirable and proper to take of their contents. I may here add that before receiving them, I took care that they were couched in proper terms. But I found this precaution was unnecessary. Inquiry proved their contents to be entirely the Khan's own sentiments, and when the rough copies were submitted to me for approval, the writer who brought them said his Highness had himself carefully studied the meaning of each word contained in the letters. Shortly after I had accepted the letters his Highness took his leave and his good-bye. For translation of letter see Appendix I.

Captain Sandeman's remarks in taking charge of them.

Obstructive efforts of Ex-Vakeel Muhammad Khan.

Disregard by his Highness.

Letters herewith submitted for transmission.

Believed to have been dictated word for word by his Highness himself.

82. The next morning at sunrise the mission marched from Khelat. A salute of 11 guns being fired on our departure. Just as I was mounting my horse Sirdar Moolla Mahomed again came to me about Sirdar Noordeen, urging that I should send for him and tell him to come away with me. He said if I did not do this Sirdar Noordeen would certainly be destroyed by the Khan. Under the circumstances I said I could send no such message to Noordeen, more especially as I had reason for believing that the Sirdar was playing a double part. Moolla Mahomed frankly admitted this, saying that Noordeen was a scoundrel, but notwithstanding this he urged that I should send for him. I said I could not do so. He then said: "If Noordeen joins you of his own free-will will "you let him do so." I said, certainly, and you may tell him so; however, he never came. I will notice this fact and the reasons for it a little further on.

Mission leaves Khelat.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's urgent solicitation regarding Sirdar Noordeen.

Reason assigned for it.

Captain Sandeman declines to interfere regarding Noordeen.

Noordeen never came of himself.

83. Just as I was leaving Khelat, another circumstance occurred worthy of note. A large kafila had arrived in Khelat that morning, the Kafilabashi ran after me and asked me to allow his kafila to come with me. I said I had no objection to his coming with me, and would write to the Khan on the subject directly I reached my encamping ground. This I did as follows:—"Be it known to your Highness that yesterday when leaving Khelat, the Kafilabashi of a kafila ran after me and entreated me to allow him and his kafila my protection through the Robdar Pass. He stated that the other kafila routes were unsafe, and said he had a very large kafila with him.

Letter to his Highness the Khan.

"At Shalkot the Kafilabashi of a very large kafila, on account of the unsafe state of the Bolan Pass, asked me for a Murree and Brahooee escort through it. The Murree and Brahooee Sirdars with me were ready to grant such an escort, but hearing that it was by your Highness' order that the Bolan route was closed, I refused it.

"I did not allow the kafila to come with me yesterday, as I understood your Highness to say that you only desired to keep open the Mulla Pass route, but as your Highness mentioned to me, just as you were saying good-bye, that the Mulla Pass was unsafe, I write this letter to inform you of the request of the Kafilabashi and my reply, so that you can send the kafila after me if you so desire it.

"You will remember that I told your Highness in Khelat that one of the principal objects of the Government of India in sending me into the country was to inquire and report whether anything, and if so what, could be done for the protection of the Bolan Pass route, hence the present position of affairs regarding it and the kafila traffic generally is very grave."

84. The above letter I despatched to the Khan on arrival in camp, and I received a few days afterwards the following reply to it from his Highness:—"I have to acknowledge the "receipt of your letter written from Jouhan informing me of your good health; "also of the request of the merchants to afford protection to their kafilas through "the Robdar and the Bolan Pass on your return journey. I "have made myself "fully acquainted with its contents. All I had to say with regard to the merchants "and the opening of the trade routes I informed you "verbally of when you were in Khelat. I have nothing "further to add. After your departure the following event occurred:—

His Highness' reply.

Unfavourable to Kafilabashis.

"On Wednesday, the 7th instant, I sent for Sirdar Noordeen Mingul. He came, and I directed him to bring to me by force Gohur Khan Zarukzai, as he was oppressing the merchants passing through the Mulla Pass. Sirdar Noordeen replied that he would neither go for Gohur Khan, or bring him to me in any other way, and used many other arrogant words.

Announces destruction of Sirdar Nroodeen Mingul.

"As I considered Noordeen as one of my Amirs I allowed the matter to pass, but I discovered that when he returned to his abode he consulted with my Wuzeer Atta Mahomed, and the two together entered into a conspiracy against me.

Reasons for it.

"The next day, Thursday, my Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed, had a private interview with me in the Durbar-room. It is a rule from ancient times that our Kutcherry is closed on Thursday, and that I perform my ablutions. I was then alone, and the Wuzeer on leaving me sent a man to inform Noordeen, telling him of the fact, and that they should together come at once to the 'Miri' and attack me.

Particulars.

"On getting this information Noordeen collected his followers and joined Atta Mahomed, and they were both ready to attack me in the 'Miri.' But I got intimation of the conspiracy, and ordered out my troops who, instead, attacked them. A fight ensued, Sirdar Noordeen and his followers, as well as Mahomed Ali, brother of Atta Mahomed, have been killed in the encounter. Atta Mahomed himself is wounded. I write for your information. Continue to correspond with me."

Noordeen's alleged proceedings and conspiracy.

Troops ordered to attack conspirators.

Result.

85. The fate of Sirdar Noordeen, as stated by the Khan, from what I have already reported in this letter, will, I feel sure, cause no surprise. If you refer to the Khelat Diary for the week ending 19th December 1875, and my reply No. 3, dated 13th January, in answer to it, also to the Candahar news-letter recently received, you will find that for a long time it was well known that certain of the Khan's officials were conspiring against his Highness with the object of deposing him and putting his son, Mir Muhammad Khan, on the throne. How far the conspiracy extended it is not for me to say, but it was believed that not only the Wuzeer, Atta Noordeen's conduct for a long time suspicious.

References in illustration.

Mahomed, and Sirdar Noordeen, as stated by his Highness in his letter, were concerned in it, but it was believed that on the conspiracy breaking out a Commandant of one of the regiments and some of the troops would join the conspirators. The Khan himself, I felt certain, knew of it when I was at Kelat, for he very pointedly and bitterly complained to me that his Ex-Wuzeer, Wullee Muhammad, was allowed an asylum at Jacobabad, from whence he engaged in intrigues against him. I avoided having anything to do with Noordeen for the reason I have given in this letter. I was aware also that the Commissioner in Sind, when mediating between the Khan and his Sirdars in 1872, had excluded Sirdar Noordeen from the terms of peace, recording his reasons in the following words:—"The attitude assumed by Sirdar Noordeen Mingul has placed him "beyond the pale of mediation. The Sirdars here wrote to him that, as he had not "ceased to cause disorders, they had no longer anything to do with him. I also informed "him he had lost my mediation, and his Highness the Khan was at liberty to act against "him as he pleased. Correspondence on the subject is appended."

His Highness the Khan's probable knowledge of conspiracy from the first.

His complaint about Ex-Shahghassee Wullee Muhammad.

Commissioner in Sind had previously excluded Noordeen from negociations of 1872.

86. From what transpired at Khelat it appeared that the fact of the Sarawan Sirdars having cast off Noordeen on the occasion named above had angered him; therefore when it was given out, in consequence of the information received from the Ex-Vakeel's son from Jacobabad, as related in this report, that I was not acting under orders of Government, Sirdar Noordeen held aloof from the other Sirdars, and thus paid them out in their own coin, by not joining them at Khelat in trying to obtain terms from the Khan. Doubtless he had other reasons for doing so, such as the conspiracy against the Khan in which he was engaged, but this I believe to have been one of them.

Probable causes of Noordeen's declining to join Sarawan Sirdars.

87. My own Sirdars, Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, are of opinion that the Khan was acting quite honestly when they first met him in Khelat, and that it was the news from Sind and the knowledge which came to him later on of my being in the country in opposition to the wishes of the Sind authorities (which fact became widely known through the arrival of the messengers who brought the expresses to me from Jacobabad ordering me back to my district) that caused his Highness the Khan to go back so determinedly from what he had at first to them so willingly and heartily agreed to. Doubtless another cause was that he knew of the conspiracy against him and felt he had Sirdar Noordeen in his power; but for all that, I concur with our own Sirdars in thinking that, had no such decided action been taken from the direction of Sind, an honourable peace might have been obtained for all, the Khan himself of his own action including Sirdar Noordeen in it.

Opinions of Mazari and Lagari Chiefs.

Wide dissemination of contents of prohibitory letters from Sind.

Another probable cause.

Captain Sandeman's concurrence with Tomandars as to evil effects of.

Interference from Sind.

88. Before disposing of this matter I desire to remark on another point connected with it, viz., that Sirdar Noordeen's destruction ensued two days after I left Khelat. In considering this it has to be remembered that the late diaries received from Jacobabad, as well as the information I received when in Khelat itself, testify to the fact that a conspiracy of no ordinary kind had been organized against the Khan which, had it succeeded, would in all probability have resulted in the destruction of his Highness himself, probably at the very time Sirdar Noordeen met his death. That Noordeen and the others concerned were playing a game of this kind the whole country knew, and I think, considering the circumstances as they existed when I entered the country, matters have ended very fortunately. The position would have been to all appearances a much more difficult and serious one had the Khan and not Noordeen been destroyed, and I think, therefore, the Khan can hardly be blamed for attacking Sirdar Noordeen in the way he did on a favourable opportunity offering.

Sirdar Noordeen despatched two days after departure of mission from Khelat.

Previous intelligence as to inimical revolution.

Results therefore not so untoward as they might have been.

89. On my return journey I took the opportunity of doing my best to bring about a fair understanding between the Dumar Kakar Chiefs, the Sumalani Mingul Headmen, and the Murree Chiefs. Peace was agreed to, and on entering the Bolan Pass from the Robdar Pass, I dismissed them to their homes. All expressed their satisfaction at their sojourn with me, and their readiness at any time to join me on being sent for.

Apparent amenability of Chiefs and Headmen to Captain Sandeman's visit.

90. On arriving at Kirta in the Bolan Pass another express from Jacobabad reached me. The letter brought by it was from Colonel Loch, was addressed to me, and ran as follows :—"I have the "honour to acknowledge the receipt of your two letters, "Nos. 171 and 174 of the 22nd and 25th ultimo, and by "the direction of the Commissioner in Sind to inform you in reply to them that he "views with extreme displeasure your highly improper "and indecorous behaviour in acting as you have done, "interfering with matters in which you had no business to engage, and I am desired to "repeat his orders that you at once return to your dis- "tricts in the Punjab, where your legitimate duties lie, "reporting your arrival there for his information."

Mission arrives at Kirta in the Bolan on return journey.

Express from Jacobabad.

Captain Sandeman severely censured by Sind authorities; and ordered to return to his district.

91. I have recorded this letter here at length, because it strongly illustrates the difficulties the mission had to contend against. From first to last not only had the support I was fairly entitled to from Sind when putting in force the orders of the Government of India as contained in their Proceedings of the 16th October last been withheld, but every means possible had been taken, by the despatch of this and similar letters, to publicly discredit and disavow the duty I was on, nor is the statement contained in this letter that I was interfering with matters I had no business to inquire into in any degree correct. The very reverse of this was the case, for not only do the Proceedings of the Government of India direct me to inquire into the general relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes and the Khan's Government (paragraph 26), but Sir W. L. Merewether in a letter dated 25th November 1875, No. A-917, to my address, animadverts very strongly upon the recent conduct of the Murrees in Kutchi, recording his opinion to the effect that "it had been worse than he had ever known it during the last "30 years and more." There was, therefore, the strongest reason for my taking up the matter, and thoroughly getting at the true causes which have led to Murree raids in Kutchi. It is not too much to say that the mission the Government of India deputed me on has, without any doubt whatever, demonstrated that the acts of the Khan of Khelat himself in regard to confiscation of the Murree jaghire, &c., render him solely responsible in the matter, which responsibility he fully admitted.

Letter quoted at length as illustrative of Captain Sandeman's difficulties.

Orders deemed obstructive of compliance with Government of India orders.

Recent reference by Commissioner in Sind to the Murrees.

And necessity for inquiring into causes of raids in Kutchi.

His Highness the Khan's action in the matter points to this responsibility.

92. On the 9th of January I arrived at the foot of the Bolan Pass, and at once telegraphed to Government the results of my mission. I considered these to be that although his Highness the Khan would not make peace with the tribes, until I had referred to Government as to the policy he was to pursue towards his Sirdars and their clans for the future, still he had sent most submissive letters to his Excellency the Viceroy and the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, asking for permission to submit his case from first to last to Government for consideration. In regard to my negotiations and dealings with the Murree and Brahooee Sirdars, I have been perfectly successful. They accompanied me to Khelat and made their humble submission in public Durbar to his Highness the Khan. They professed their eager desire to protect trade on most reasonable terms, while Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan has himself written to say that after peace was arranged between the Chiefs and the Khan he would hold himself responsible for Murree inroads into Kutchi. With such results before me I may with confidence assert that the cause of disturbances in Kutchi and in Khelat itself are due primarily to the conduct of the Khan himself and to the policy he had been recommended, according to his own statement, to pursue towards his Chiefs and people. I quote here from a letter of the Commissioner in Sind, No. 266, dated 1st May 1869, to the address of the Political Superintendent, as it denotes conclusively what that policy really was. "It "will be manifest to you from what is above written that the policy I would wish you "to follow is that of friendly counsel to his Highness the Khan as the sole person in "Beloochistan with whom we have any right or reason to communicate; that we are in "no way entitled to interfere directly between him and his nobles and subjects, and to Exit from Bolan Pass.

His Highness the Khan's reluctance temporary.

His desire for free communication with Government.

Successful dealings with Murree and Brahooee Sirdars.

Ghazan Khan's professions.

His Highness the Khan himself primarily responsible for state of affairs.

Quotation from former correspondence.

" carry out this policy fairly and justly, it is above all things most important that it " should in no way be shown that we are meddling in the affairs of the country by " identifying ourselves openly with the cause of those who are acting in opposition to " him."

93. I arrived at the town of Mull on the 14th January, and here I dismissed the Murree and Brahooee Chiefs. Before permitting them to depart I recorded their views as to the causes which had led Mir Khodadad Khan to act towards them in the way described in this report. Their deposition attributes their present position and the state of anarchy prevailing in the country to the policy adopted by their Khan in his dealings with them. They say they date their present troubles from the day guns and arms were supplied to the Khan by our Government. In dealing with the present state of affairs, it should be borne in mind that they have existed for 15 or 16 years, and are now very serious.

Brahooee and Murree Chiefs permitted to depart.

Written statement of their views.

94. In considering this I do not think it is fair or right to hold his Highness the Khan personally responsible for them. He himself most emphatically said to me that in doing as he had done he was merely acting up to the advice which had often been given him. I notice too that Sir William Merewether in his letter No. 367, dated Kurrachee, 11th April 1872, paragraph 7, to his Excellency the Governor of Bombay in regard to this, writes: " I had a long " conversation with the Wuzeer Shahghassee Wullee Muhammad, and he assured me that it was his master's most earnest desire to act only in conformity with the wishes of Her Majesty's Government, and appealed to me to confirm him, from my own knowledge of all that has passed, in the statement, that from the time his Highness has ascended the throne he had never once failed to act strictly up to that desire. I can most fully do so, and confidently assert that whatever faults his Highness may have, want of loyal friendship to the British Government is certainly not one of them.

His Highness the Khan's policy advised by Sind authorities.

Quotations.

95. Again, Sir W. L. Merewether in the 33rd paragraph of his letter No. 340, dated Camp Jacobabad, 5th April 1872, writes on the same subject in the following words: " I would now proceed " to offer a few remarks on the future. There cannot, in my opinion, be the least doubt " what course should be followed with regard to Khelat, or Beloochistan as it should be " correctly termed. His Highness the Khan is de facto and de jure ruler of that " country. We have treaty engagements with him, under which he is bound to keep his " subjects from injuring British territory or people, to protect trade, &c. But the treaty " is with him as ruler only, and under none of the engagements are we called upon to " interfere directly in the manner in which he carries on his government. It is, however, " an object to us that there should be a strong and well regulated Government in his " country, and it has been the custom hitherto to give him freely, through the Political " Agent at his Court, the best advice on occasions of difficulty. I must say I know of no " occasion when such advice has been rejected, and I can confidently state that the Khan " has invariably done his best to act as would be approved by the British Government. " But he has had great difficulties to contend against in the ambitious practices of certain " of his nobles. They are not many, they can easily be numbered and named, but they " have been sufficient by their restless intrigues to keep the country in a perpetual state " of ferment, destructive of all advance in prosperity. It is the state of our own country " under the Plantagenets over again."

Further questions.

96. I have quoted freely from the Commissioner in Sind's letters as given above, because what he says supports fully what Mir Khodadad Khan himself stated to me at Khelat. A consideration of the entire state of affairs leads me still to hope that his Highness, even at this late date, may be brought to a proper sense of his duty to his country and people. The Khan's letters forwarded with this report to his Excellency the Viceroy and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor afford the opportunity to the Government to enunciate direct to the Khan himself the views of the British Government regarding his policy and conduct, and the principles that should for the future guide him in conducting these. The opportunity is also afforded the Government of hearing the Khan in his own defence.

His Highness the Khan's solicitations by letter afford the opportunity of hearing all he has to say.

97. Should the Government adopt this view of the matter and bring Mir Khodadad Khan to a proper sense of his position, I see no cause whatever to prevent my again visiting his Court, on no doubtful mission, but on the almost certainty that he would agree to put in force the arrangements contemplated in the Government Proceedings of the 16th October last, and to which he has already conditionally agreed. It is true that since I was in Khelat the Khan has destroyed Sirdar Noordeen ; but I do not see that his Highness can be greatly blamed for this ; for it appears, as already stated from all I can learn, that Sirdar Noordeen's destruction by his Highness was incidental to the position, and could hardly, under the known circumstances, have been avoided.

Captain Sandeman hopeful of the effects of a further mission untrammelled as this has been.

Sirdar Noordeen's destruction forced upon the Khan by circumstances.

98. But whatever decision the Government may arrive at on a perusal of this report, I would earnestly urge that delay should not be permitted to take place in taking whatever further action may be determined on, and in replying to his Highness the Khan's letters, and to the petition of the Chiefs. Delay will only make the state of affairs, already very complicated, much worse. In considering this, I trust the fact of the Murree Sirdar having agreed to be responsible for the safety of Kutchi directly peace is made between the Khan and his Sirdars may not be overlooked, and that the Murree Chiefs and the Chiefs of the Bolan Pass, without exception, have visited his Highness' Court during the most severe season of the year and publicly made their submission, craving his Highness' forgiveness, and agreeing to protect the Bolan Pass traffic on the terms granted them by his brother, the late Nusseer Khan.

An early decision solicited.

Overtures of the Murree Sirdars not to be overlooked.

99. In concluding this report, it is with pleasure I bring to notice the excellent service performed by Captain Wylie, who has been indefatigable in mapping the country, and otherwise has rendered me during the mission much valuable assistance. Doctor Thomson's services on the present occasion I also desire to bring to favourable notice. These officers are to submit reports of the duties performed by them during the tour which will be forwarded when received.

Services of officers commended.

100. The services of Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan Mazari and Jamal Khan were very valuable. They spared no trouble in their endeavour to bring my negotiations with his Highness to a favourable conclusion. The other British Belooch Chiefs and their followers behaved well, and although considerable hardship had to be endured in Khorassan from the extreme cold, not a grumble of any kind reached me. It was remarkable that during the tour no mishap or contretemps of any kind occurred. The escort of regular troops under command of Subadar Wulli Mahomed behaved on all occasions in a most soldierly like way. I felt much indebted to the Subadar for the way he performed his duties, which I will bring to the notice of his commanding officer. The escort marched from this en route to Rajanpur and Dera Ghazi Khan to rejoin their regiments on the 6th instant, Captain Wylie and Doctor Thomson accompanying it.

And of Belooch Sirdars.

Appendix A.

Translation of a letter from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, to Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan, Murree.

I sent you Alum Kungrani lately with a message to say that his Highness the Khan has taken possession of my lands on the plea that I am your (Ghuzzan Khan's) friend, and that I had in consequence returned to you the captured (stolen) Murree mares. That it was I who had caused the Khan's territory to be raided by the Murrees. Since then the Khan has taken a fine of Rupees 1,500 from my people (Hindoos and zemindars), saying that I, their Sirdar, am his Highness the Khan's enemy, and have in consequence become the friend of the Murree Sirdar, and that it is through me the Khan's country is plundered.

The Khan has also told the clans of Sarawan that I induced the Murrees to make the raid on Dadar. That in consequence of this he is sending his son with his troops to Kutchi, and that they (the clans) should join his son and help him to attack the Murrees, because they are his and their enemies, their Sirdar having joined the Murrees.

The Sarawan headmen have come to me here, and the southern Murree headmen have sent me a letter to say that I ought to come to some arrangement about them and the Brahooees. In reply I have again sent for the Murree headmen. On their arrival I will settle matters between the Murrees and Brahooees.

Lately the Khan sent orders to his officials, directing them to give money secretly to the Brahooees, and having thus caused them to join the Juttoees, the two together would attack the Murrees. This matter was arranged, and it only lately came to my knowledge.

Directly I heard of what was about to happen I sent a man secretly to prevent the Brahooees joining the Juttoees. The Brahooees obeyed my orders, and the Juttoees were obliged to return to their homes.

I now send Muhammad Sadik and Bukhtiar Khan, Ghazni Murrees, to you to say that the Murrees do not discern between an enemy and a friend at the time of fighting. On receipt of this letter please send Mirulla Khan or Sher Muhammad to Mondai, because I expect matters will be brought to the issue between the Khan and myself. Should the result of this be a truce, I will be able at the same time to make your peace with the Khan. Should the Khan direct his troops to make an attack on the Murrees, then I will send the Brahooees to join you to aid you in opposing the troops.

Should the Khan's troops attack me, then Mirulla Khan or Sher Muhammad with the Murrees should come to my aid. It seems advisable that we should afford each other mutual aid against the Khan's troops.

Do not delay sending either Mirulla or Sher Muhammad. It is necessary that we should consult in order that whatever happens we may act in concert and prevent the Brahooees from being induced to join the Khan. Before the arrival of the Khan's son the Brahooees and Murrees should join together and arrange for the future what to do. If you act at once and send Sher Muhammad or Mirulla, the Brahooees will remain within my power. If you delay sending Mirulla or Sher Muhammad, I will induce the Brahooees to join you and send my son along with them. Be comforted regarding this, once we have joined together we cannot afford to separate our interests. This is a time of difficulty, but if we act together with one mind, by the grace of God we will achieve our objects.

Prior to this I wrote you to send the mare carried off by Sher Dil, Sherani Murree, but as yet have received no reply. Please send her to me by the bearer of this letter, and keep me aware of your health and prosperity.

Appendix B.

Translation of a Mukhtiarnama of Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan, Murree, dated 4th December 1875.

Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazi Khan, having come into the country to arrange to open the Bolan Pass and to settle the feuds between the Murrees and Brahooees and other matters connected with the trade routes, I am ready to accompany Captain Sandeman with that object, but my feeble state of health does not permit of my doing so. Instead, I send with Captain Sandeman my brother Mirulla Khan and my cousin Mir Hazar Khan and some other relatives, as well as the Murree headmen, and I authorise my brother Mirulla Khan to act for me in concert with the Murree headmen during the coming negotiations. Whatever arrangement he and the headmen make there I will abide by. In virtue of this, I, Ghuzzan Khan, set my seal.

Appendix C.

Translation of a petition, dated 11th Zelkad 1292 (10th December 1875), from the Brahooee Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, Wudera Shadi Khan, Bungulzai, Alla Dina Khoord, Junda Khan, Shahwani, and Mirulla Khan, brother of Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan, Murree, to Captain R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazi Khan, on special duty.

As your Honour has come into the country to inquire into the causes which have led to the closing of the Bolan Pass to trade, and to procure all the information you can respecting feuds and quarrels among us and the Government of the Khan of Khelat, we beg to inform you that these feuds and quarrels are of a very long standing, and have led to the closing of the Bolan Pass to trade and to the bad state of affairs in Kutchi. We were going to raid on Kutchi, but hearing of your Honour's expedition into the country, we have presented ourselves to you, and hope that your Honour will interfere and settle these disputes. If your Honour will be good enough to do this, we beg to assure you that we will hold ourselves responsible to protect trade through the Bolan Pass and prevent raiding into Kutchi. We are willing to be guided by the wishes of the British Government, and have abstained from causing further violence in Kutchi. We hope that your Honour will consult with his Highness on the subject, and let him know how earnestly we desire peace. We also beg your Honour to state to us in writing what the British Government desire to accomplish by sending your expedition amongst us.

Appendix D.

Translation of a letter, dated 12th December 1875, from Captain R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazi Khan, on special duty, to the Brahooee Chiefs, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, Wudera Shadi Khan, Bungulzai, Alla Dina Khoord and Mirulla Khan, brother of Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan, Murree.

In reply to your petition dated 11th Zelkad 1292, I have to inform you that I was greatly pleased to receive your request desiring me to forward your express desire for peace to his Highness the Khan of Khelat. This I have done by the hands of two of my own Sirdars, who will explain to his Highness your wishes. Should his Highness favour me with his own desires on the subject I will at once communicate these to you.

It is with much satisfaction that I observe you have voluntarily come forward to promise that for the present all acts of violence by your people will cease in Kutchi and in the neighbourhood of your country. His Highness the Khan cannot fail to appreciate your having thus acted in this way of your own free will.

In your petition under reply you, Sirdars and headmen, desire me to place on record for your information the views and wishes of the British Government, and the object with which I have visited your country. In reply, I have to inform you that my chief desire is to aid you by my influence and advice in restoring peace to the country. The British Government has ordered me to tell you that although my Government does not accept any direct responsibility for the protection of life and property beyond the British frontier, it desires to influence you, Sirdars and all concerned, in maintaining the peace of the country, and protection to trade. My instructions are to procure all the information I can respecting the local feuds and quarrels among the Boogtee and Murree tribes, or between them and the Afghans, or between them and the Brahooees; to endeavour as far as I can to bring about an amicable settlement of these; to report for the information of Government my views regarding such quarrels and feuds as I cannot settle; to report on the general relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes and his Highness' Government.

I congratulate you all in having so heartily come forward to proclaim to the whole country your earnest desire for peace and protection to trade. The British Government will receive this your assurance with the most lively satisfaction. On my own part, in answer to your request for my aid in obtaining for you the blessing now sought for, I can most truly reply that my aid in obtaining a successful issue to your petition to his Highness is given as freely and cheerfully as you have heartily asked for it.

Appendix E.

Translation of a letter, dated 12th December 1875, from Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazi Khan, on special duty, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

In accordance with order received from the Government of India I have visited Kohistan to inquire into the causes which have lead to the feuds and quarrels between the Murree, Boogtee, and Brahooee tribes, and closing of the Bolan Pass to trade.

Having visited the Murree country, I arrived here at Seebee a day or two ago.

The Murree and Sarawan (Brahooee) Sirdars are with me.

All these Sirdars are most anxious for peace and for a fair settlement of their quarrels. At their request I write to tell you this.

The Murree and Brahooee Sirdars have promised me to abstain from all acts of further violence in the country, and anxiously hope their petition for peace will be listened to.

I send the Sirdars' petition to you by the hands of two of my own trusted Sirdars, who will explain the true state of affairs to you and the objects of my expedition into this part of the country.

Appendix F.

Translation of a letter dated Khelat, 20th December 1875, from Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, to Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

Having left your Honour's camp we arrived at Khelat yesterday. Before entering the city we sent messengers to his Highness to inform him of our arrival. The Khan sent Atta Mahomed Khan, brother of Abdul Latif Khan, Naib of Shalkot, to meet us with 10 sowars. They met us at a short distance from the city. On arrival in Khelat they took us to a house allotted by the Khan for our accommodation. This house is a very good building and contains many rooms. The Khan also gave us four tents for our people. He entertains us in a very hospitable way. A short time after our arrival we went to pay our respects to the Khan, who received us very kindly and asked after our welfare. After a short time we took our leave. The next day his Highness sent for us again and we explained to him fully the objects of your expedition, in the way you instructed us to do. The Khan was very much pleased to hear what we told him. On being asked by his Highness regarding certain matters, we gave proper replies to the best of our ability. In short, the Khan was highly delighted, and said that to-morrow, the 21st, he would give us a letter to your address informing you of his desires. As soon as we receive the letter we will send it to you at Mustung, or wherever your Honour is encamped. The Khan has issued orders to his officials at Mustung and Shal to attend to you and to receive you at the Dusht. We expect that the order must have reached them by this time.

Appendix G.

Dated Camp near Bibinani, Bolan Pass, 9th January 1876.

From Captain H. Wylie, 1st Punjab Cavalry, to Captain R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

In accordance with your desire, I have the honour to report to you the substance of what I heard and saw at the two interviews which took place on the 3rd and 4th instant between you and his Highness the Khan of Khelat, at which interviews I was, by your order, present.

The interview of the 3rd took place in the Miri of Khelat. You were attended by the whole of our Belooch Sirdars, and by the Brahooee Sirdars, and Murree Chiefs.

The Khan was in state, with his officers around him, and received us with marked cordiality.

After the usual formalities, his Highness addressed Moolla Mahomed and the Brahooees to somewhat the following effect:—

That there had been war and bloodshed between them for many years, but that now, by the Grace of God, Captain Sandeman had managed to bring the Chiefs of the Brahooees before him, and had told him they were anxious for peace, which he (the Khan) was also, he would therefore forgive past offences, and he hoped that for the future there might be peace in the country. They should, however, remember this, that when a limb of a man's body was in a diseased state he naturally tried every means to cure it, till, if all failed, he at last had it cut off. They were like a diseased limb to him, he would try and cure them without amputation, but, if all means were ineffectual, off they must come. He further said that when definite orders were received from the British Government sanctioning Captain Sandeman's mediation between the Brahooees and himself, he would come down to Kutchi and there settle all matters in dispute.

He then addressed the Murrees. (He called them a regular lot of thieves,) and said that without a good lesson he feared they would never be anything else, but that as the Sahib had brought them before him, and as they promised to behave better, he would forgive their past offences, and he hoped that their conduct would be better for the future.

On this Sirdar Kurrum Khan, Murree, got up and asked for the Tunia Jaghire to be restored to them. This and other matters the Khan promised to arrange with them and Captain Sandeman at the proposed conference in Kutchi.

Notwithstanding that the interview had had such and apparently satisfactory ending, I could not but be struck by the grave faces and downcast looks of the Brahooees and Murrees, but particularly of the former. The fact was they knew the Khan's character better than we did, and distrusted his word.

After this the Durbar was cleared, and we had a private audience. The people present being the Khan, his eldest son, Mir Mahmud Khan, and our two selves.

You first addressed his Highness and explained to him all that had occurred since our entry into Beloochistan in about the following terms:—

That the Khan was aware of your orders from Government, as you had read them to him, that on your way through the Murree country you had had an interview with Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan, who had shown you a letter he had recently received from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Brahooee, informing him of a concerted rising which was about to take place against the Khan of Khelat's Government, and urging on Ghuzzan Khan to raise his clan and join the insurgents; that Ghuzzan had however promised to be guided by you, and that he had left the letter in your hands; that he had stated that he was not well enough to accompany you himself, but that he would send his brother Mirulla and the headmen of the various sections of Murrees with you. He also put his seal to a document authorising Mirulla to treat with the Khan, and binding himself to any settlement which you and Mirulla should make with the Khan. The headmen of the Murrees, with a sufficient number from each section, had accordingly come with you, and you had brought them into the Khan's presence.

That on the 9th December you reached the Nari River, and encamped near Seebee; the previous evening Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the representatives of the Brahooees had joined you. The objects of your expedition were explained to them, and they were given time to think of their reply, which was to the following effect:—That, undoubtedly, a rising on a large scale was intended, and would have taken place very soon, but that as they were anxious for peace, they would like to accompany you to the Khan, and through your mediation make up their quarrel.

On the 13th December you recommenced your march, intending to go up the flank of the Bolan to Bibinani viâ Muskaff. You were met, however, by the Janashin of Dadar, who pressed you so earnestly to go to Dadar that you consented. You were received by a salute of 11 guns, and everything that the Janashin could do to make you comfortable and show you honour was done, he stating that the Khan would never forgive him if he neglected you in any way.

As at that time you did not know what the wish of his Highness might be about treating with the Murrees, &c., you despatched to him, from Dadar, our two Sirdars, Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, with the following orders:—"That the Murrees and Brahooees were very anxious for peace; that the Government of India was also anxious that the disturbances in the country should cease; that it was quite impossible to separate the Murree and Brahooee quarrel with his Highness' Government; but that if he, the Khan, would agree to peace, there would be no difficulty about it; that you were authorised to tell him that if he would co-operate heartily with you in arranging and affording protection to the Bolan trade, and express his regret for what had passed, the Indian Government would with pleasure enter into their old relations with him."

After despatching the above message to Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, you had proceeded up the Bolan Pass to Shalkot to meet, if possible, the Candahar Agent, and make arrangements about trade routes.

During the passage of the Bolan you had passed a body of the Khan's troops en route from Mustung to Dadar. The Naib of Dadar was with them. He came and paid his respects, and said that the Khan had ordered him to conduct you to the Dusht-Be-daulat if you wished. This offer you had declined.

At Shalkot, Naib Abdul Latif, of that place, had shown you every attention, and stated that his Highness' orders were that you should be treated in every way as he, the Khan himself, would be were he on tour. That as his Highness had shown such a kindly spirit towards you, you had determined to go to Mustung so as to be near him for correspondence, and that you had accordingly arrived at Mustung on the 25th December.

That evening Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan had returned to you from Khelat, accompanied by Mustowfi Fakir Muhammad, who was bearer of a letter from the Khan to you.

In the letter the Khan had expressed himself as willing and anxious for peace, and glad of your arrival and of the chance of your mediation; indeed so anxious was he that he would come to you wherever you wished; he had further said that he felt himself as holding his kingdom only under the British Government, and that he would go anywhere and do anything he was ordered if only the Government would inquire into his case.

You had, however, considered it best that we should go to his Highness, and we accordingly had arrived at Khelat on the 30th December, and that you were now willing and ready to try and help him in making arrangements for peace in his country, and for opening the Bolan Pass to traffic.

His Highness replied to the following effect:—

He said he was most anxious for a settlement of his case with the British Government; that though he was a King in his own country, still he looked on the British Government as his King, and that he held his land as under the English. That he was ready and willing to obey any orders sent him by our Government, but that before settling with you for the future management of his country, he wished to be told distinctly whether he was to receive orders and work with you, or with the Sind authorities; he said that on three several occasions had he met the chief representatives of our Government, and from all he had returned "hopeless."

That when he met the Viceroy at Sukkur in 1872 he was allowed no private interview, or (as he could not speak English) any means of fully laying his case before him. He said that the last treaty drawn up by Sir William Merewether between himself and the Brahooees was of such a nature that he knew at the time that not only the Brahooees then living but their children's children could not fulfil the conditions laid down therein. He further stated that he knew he could not rule his country properly without aid; that being cut off from all communication with us, he was thinking of looking for help elsewhere, such as to Persia, or Afghanistan, but that he would gladly seize this opportunity of forwarding a letter through you to the Viceroy, and that, if the Government permitted him, he would send them an account of his case, entering fully into all his disagreements with the Sind authorities; that also, if permitted, he would gladly proceed to Calcutta, or London, or anywhere he was ordered, and meet the heads of the Government, and in person lay his case before them, but that he earnestly entreated that he might be told definitely whether he was to deal with Sind or the Punjab, for that at present he felt he was in danger of falling between two stools, and of having no settlement of his case and no proper understanding with the British Government.

He said that in now tendering his submission he begged to be allowed to say that though he was heartily sorry for the disagreements which had arisen between the British Government and himself, he felt that he could not say he was sorry for any act of his own, as on all occasions, according to the best of his ability, he had endeavoured to carry out the wishes and instructions sent him, and that he had not succeeded in this he attributed in great measure to the demands made and to the misunderstandings which had taken place between himself and the officials with whom he had to deal.

You here asked his Highness how it was that his words now were different from those he wrote to you to Mustung, and also to what he had said to Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan.

To this he replied, that his chief adviser, Nawab Muhammad Khan, had a son at Shahpoor near Jacobabad, and that this son had been told that you were up here without proper authority; in fact, that you were wandering about the country for your own pleasure, and not by orders of Government. This the son had written to his father, who had warned the Khan not to treat with you, and that he naturally felt that until he received positive orders from the Supreme Government he could not bring himself to look on you as a properly authorised ambassador.

The Durbar was then again opened and the trusted Native officials on both sides admitted.

The Khan entered pleasantly into conversation with all, and joked Nawab Muhammad Khan as to his feelings with regard to Sind. The form of letter which the Khan was to address to Government was then arranged, and we took our departure much pleased with our interview. I myself was much struck by the Khan's manner, with the clearness and force with which he spoke, and with the pleasant way in which he addressed the Sirdars, always seeming to have some happy remarks or joke to make with each. I came away with the impression that if he had always had fair treatment from us, much of the evil which now reigns supreme in the country might have been averted. It will be understood from what I have written that it was with surprise and pain that on the 4th instant we received the information that the Khan's troops at Bagh had attacked the Brahooees near there, killed five of them, and taken several prisoners and some cattle.

You sent to the Khan to say that after the information received you felt obliged to march. He replied that he hoped you would stay, and that he would come and see you in the afternoon. The Brahooee Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the Nawab Muhammad Khan having also requested you to do so you consented.

In accordance with this arrangement the Khan arrived in camp about 4 p.m. By your order I was with you during the interview, and the few really trusted Native gentlemen on both sides were also present. I was at once struck by the complete change of his Highness' tone of voice and manner.

He asked why you were leaving him, and for what reason you were angry?

You then told him you were not angry but sorry; and that the surprise and pain which the news received from Kutchi had given you was great; that you had brought the Murree and Brahooee Sirdars to his feet, and that in open Durbar he had forgiven them; that it was not the custom of any people, whether Christian, Mahomedan, or Hindoo, to attack their enemies while treaties of peace were under consideration; that you could not look on this breach of faith with any feelings but those of sorrow, and that you were sure the British Government would do the same; that his Sirdars and people were most anxious for peace, but that by this action he had destroyed all hope of it for the present.

To this he replied that he could not see much harm in his conduct; that we must clearly understand that the attack on Brahooees had been made by his orders, and that it was in no way the fault of his servants. That there had been long years of warfare between himself and the Brahooees, and that the quarrel could not be patched up in a day. That he was ruler in his own country, and that he meant to keep that country in order by force of arms; that the Amir of Cabul did so, and why should not he, the Khan. That he would, if you requested it, give up the prisoners, but that he would not restore the cattle or make any other restitution. He further stated that he considered the best way to get his country into order was for the British Government to give him aid with troops and money. The Khan added that notwithstanding that he considered it necessary to treat his subjects in this way, and that he could not repent of the action of his officials in the matter, still he hoped that you would convey his letter to the Viceroy, and assure the British Government of his earnest desire for a settlement of his affairs with it. He then repeated his words of the previous day, saying he would go anywhere to meet a properly authorised Envoy, or even to the seat of Government, if that was the wish of the Governor-General. You replied that you would forward his letter, and he then prepared to hand it to you. This Nawab Muhammad Khan tried to prevent, and in his eagerness got up and knelt before him, holding the letter in his hands, but the Khan was determined, and himself placed the letter in your hands.

He then said, Sahib, if you and I are permitted to work together, see if we don't get the country all right, but after this, don't let me fall out of your hands again, it will be to my great loss.

The interview then closed, and the Khan took his departure.

The next morning, as originally intended, we commenced our return march towards the Punjab. A salute of 11 guns being fired by the Khan's artillery on our setting out.

Appendix H.

Translation of a letter, dated 22nd December 1875, from Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan, Murree, to Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated 14th December 1875, and, in reply, I beg to state that prior to its receipt in obedience to your order, I made the Murrees to return the plundered property taken last year from Kutchi. It is the Dhoombkees, Brahooees, and Khujjuks in reality who induced the Murrees to raid in Kutchi. The Murrees themselves do not do so. Moreover, no arrangements for the protection of Kutchi have as yet been entered on.

The camels recently plundered from Kutchi, the restitution of which you now ask in the above-named letter, were carried off by the Murrees before your arrival in Kutchi. After you have come to an understanding with the Murrees for the protection of the Khan's country, I will act as you may order, and will be responsible for Murree raids into Kutchi. To settle about this, I have sent my brother, Mirulla Khan, Mir Hazar Khan, Gul Muhammad Khan, and the Murree headmen with you.

Appendix I.

Translation of a letter from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, Punjab.

Captain Sandeman has paid me a visit, and from him I have heard of the kind desires of the Governor-General of India towards me. He also told me that your Honour wished me well.

I am the subject of the British Government, and have always considered myself in that light.

I have told Captain Sandeman the state of my affairs. He will explain it to your Honour.

I have taken the opportunity of sending a letter for his Excellency the Governor-General. Be good enough to forward it, and obtain a favourable reply to the request it contains.

Treat me with kindness, and consider me as your well-wisher and friend.

Appendix K.

Translation of a petition from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, Wudera Shadi Khan Bungulzai, Said Khan, Muhammadshahi, Alla Dina Khoord, and the Murree Chiefs, Mirulla Khan and Mir Hazar, to Captain Sandeman, dated Camp near Mittree, 13th January 1876.

It is about 12 years now since we first went to war with his Highness the Khan of Khelat. Four years ago a kind of settlement was arranged between the Khan and ourselves, but it was not a satisfactory one. The Khan himself did not hold to the agreement, but took possession of our lands. He also, from our tenants, levied money contrary to our laws. Prior to your arrival the other day in the country the Brahooees and Murrees in despair were about to collect, join their forces together, and attack the Khan's troops. It was with great pleasure we heard of your arrival in the country, as we were very anxious for a settlement of the feud without resorting to arms, and we gave you a petition asking you to arrange our dispute with the Khan. You took our petition and said you would send it by trustworthy messengers to his Highness the Khan. You informed us that you were going towards the Bolan, and you wanted us to accompany you; we agreed, and we decided not to commence war with his Highness the Khan. You sent off your confidential agents to his Highness with our request for peace. Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan visited the Khan with the object of discovering his views on the subject, and whether he would agree to settle with us and prevent his troops doing our people further injury. In pursuance of our desire for peace directly we had decided to ask his Highness for it, as Noordeen Mingul had acted hitherto with us, we sent off sowars to tell him what we had decided to do. But before our sowars reached Noordeen it appears he put faith in promises of the Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed Khan, and has of his own accord gone into Khelat.

On your (Captain Sandeman's) arrival at Shalkot a reply came to you from the Khan agreeing to our request for peace. In that letter (which you read to us) the Khan said he had directed his troops and servants to cease from causing our people further injury. After this you marched towards Mustung. On your arrival there, your Sirdars, Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, accompanied by Fakir Muhammad Mustowfi, arrived bringing a letter from his Highness the Khan. In that letter (which you also read to us) the Khan expressed a desire to meet you at any place you might appoint. You, having regard for the position of the Khan as ruler of Khelat, said you would go and visit him. We, the Sirdars of Sarawan, and the Murree and Boogtee and Dumar (Kakar) Chiefs all agreed to go with you, and did so. We presented ourselves before the Khan in Durbar at Khelat. According to the ancient custom of the Khelat State we humbled ourselves before the Khan, making our submission to him, and asked for peace and forgiveness. You yourself were present and saw and heard all that passed. You also heard the Khan accept our submission, and his agreeing to forgive past offences. In open Durbar you heard the Khan himself say that the condition on which the former peace was made, viz., that we were to give compensation for plunder taken in the former rebellion, was not only impossible for us to fulfil, but his Highness declared openly that our children's children could not do so. The Khan then told us to take comfort; that he had some matters to refer to the British Government, and after getting a reply he would arrange a fair settlement of our case according to the ancient State laws, and would in the meantime prevent his troops injuring us and our people. He asked us to promise not to injure his people, and this we agreed to.

This matter being settled we were indulging the hope that all was well, when suddenly, when you were still in Khelat, news was received by you from the Khan that Abdul Aziz, Naib of Bagh, had with the Khan's troops attacked our people, killed five, and carried off some property and flocks. On hearing this, after holding an interview with his Highness the Khan, and finding that peace was not then possible, you the following day left Khelat. The Khan fully admitted to you that by his orders his troops had injured our people.

On our arrival with you in the Bolan Pass, after leaving Khelat, news reached us of the death of Noordeen Mingul and several of his followers at the hands of the Khan. The Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed, is also said to be killed, and Ali Jan Shahgassee put in prison.

It is clear to us that the Khan's object is to gradually destroy his Sirdars and take possession of their lands. He desires to rule the country by means of his slaves and servants, and to resume all jaghires and revenue free grants. For instance, having murdered Taj Mahomed, he possessed himself of his lands. What the Khan is doing is quite contrary to the laws of Khelat. When his ancestors took possession of the country, ours aided them, and the rule and custom of the country is for the Khans of Khelat to hold power through their Sirdars and Chiefs, and their tribes. In return for aiding the Khans of Khelat to rule, the Sirdars were allotted lands and revenue free grants. Now the Khan has again waged war on us to achieve the objects named in this petition, we must meet him in the field or else fly the country. The English Government rules the country, and is in the light of a king to us, we therefore submit this statement in order that a just view by Government may be taken of our position, and steps taken to restore peace and order to our distracted country. Since the British Government gave our Khan arms and guns he has used them with the objects of destroying us, and from that day the ruin of the country commenced. For the present we are all going to retire to the Murree Hills. We, Murrees, Brahooees, Dumars, and Sarawan Minguls, are ready and willing to protect trade passing through the Bolan Pass. We have the power to protect trade when in the pass, but the Khan himself does not desire to open the Bolan Pass to traffic. He, the Khan himself, told you (Captain Sandeman) this. The reason for this is that in accordance with old custom, and also in accordance with Sir William Merewether's settlement of our case, the seventh part of the kafila fees is the right of the Sarawan Sirdar, Moolla Mahomed. This of itself is of great value. There are also other shares, badrakhie fees, that go to the tribes in the pass who protect the kafilas. The Khan desires to prevent our getting our fair share of the fees, and wishes to send all the kafilas via Khelat and the Mulla, to enable him to levy for himself all the custom dues, &c. Going by the Mulla is most detrimental to the caravans, but the Khan does not care for this, or what trouble they are subjected to. The Khan himself told you he would not protect the Bolan; but the British Government might open the pass; that he would not be responsible. Why should the Khan get the customs and other fees if he does not aid in keeping open the pass? Without the Khan's aid we cannot open the pass, because his Highness has troops at Dadar and Shalkot, and we could not undertake the responsibility on that account. What is given above is our case, which we represent to the Government for consideration.

Candahar caravans returned from Hindoostan, numbering 2,000 to 3,000 camels, arrived at Shikarpoor. Merchants clamouring for help through the passes. Major Sandeman believes it feasible on orders issuing. Telegram No. 671P., dated Fort William, 14th March 1876.

From Foreign Secretary, Calcutta, to Colonel Munro, Jacobabad.

Your letter, No. 20 of 12th February, transmitting Major Sandeman's report of his mission, and your subsequent telegrams, and the letter of the Khan of Khelat, have been considered by the Governor-General in Council; your conclusions are generally concurred in, and suggestions approved. If, though you are satisfied that Khan and principal Chiefs of all parties, including Jalawan and Sarawan, are ready to accept Major Sandeman's arbitration, you are authorised, should you deem it desirable under present circumstances, to depute him to meet Khan and Sirdars in Kutchi or elsewhere, as may be convenient, and make a renewed attempt to carry out objects set forth in Government Resolution of 16th October, that is, a general settlement of differences between the tribes themselves, and between them and Khan, and also, if Khan shows a proper spirit, the re-establishment of friendly relations between him and British Government. Major Sandeman should be accompanied by military escort of such strength as you consider amply sufficient for his protection and dignity, the troops being taken from Punjab or Sind, or both Punjab and Sind, as you may think fit; military authorities of Punjab and Sind will be instructed accordingly. Major Sandeman may also have the services of any available officers, civil or military, whose assistance he requires and you consider necessary; and you may advance to him from the treasury such funds as he may need. In short, the Government of India, having confidence in yourself and Major Sandeman, desire that the latter be allowed, under your orders, a full opportunity of effecting, under the most favourable circumstances, a settlement of Khelat affairs.

A letter from his Excellency to the Khan of Khelat, in reply to his communication, will be transmitted to you in due course. Pending further orders you will continue at Jacobabad in charge of political relations of the British Government with Khelat and frontier tribes from Dera Ghazee Khan to the sea under the immediate orders of the Government of India. Bombay Government will be requested to place at your disposal the service of Belooch guides. Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed should be desired to leave Jacobabad forthwith, and reside at Dera Ghazee Khan, as suggested. Order on subject of transfer of internal administration of Sind Frontier District from Sind to Punjab will issue hereafter.

Resolution No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875, conveying instructions to Major Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazee Khan, in reference to his proceeding to the Murree Hills, and setting forth the policy of the Government in regard to Khelat affairs.

Correspondence ending with this office, telegram No. 102P., dated 20th January 1876, relieving the Commissioner of Sind from all responsibility for Khelat affairs, and entrusting the political charge of those affairs to Lieutenant-Colonel Munro, Commissioner of the Derajat Division of the Punjab.

Read—

Letter from Major Sandeman, No. 8, dated 5th February, to Lieutenant-Colonel Munro, submitting report of his proceedings under the above Resolution.

Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Munro, dated 12th February, transmitting above, and making suggestions for future conduct of our relations with Khelat.

Letter from Khan of Khelat forwarded with Punjab Government's letter, No. 1C., dated 19th February.

Telegram from Punjab Government, dated 20th February, containing Lieutenant-Governor's opinion as to action to be taken on above.

Telegrams from Colonel Munro reporting events in Khelat since the return of Major Sandeman.

Khelat diaries.

Observations.—In reference to these papers two questions of importance have to be considered:—

First.—What action shall be taken by the Government in view of the state of affairs in Khelat reported by Major Sandeman, and subsequent events?

Secondly.—Are any further measures immediately necessary for efficiently conducting British relations with Khelat now that the Commissioner in Sind has been relieved from responsibility in reference to them?

2. With regard to the first question, viz., what action shall be taken by the Government in view of the state of affairs in Khelat reported by Major Sandeman, and subsequent events, his Excellency in Council observes that the policy of the Government in regard to Khelat affairs is thus set forth in paragraph 25 of the Resolution of 16th October 1875: "So far as the influence and good offices of Frontier Officers can be "used to promote peace and good order and settle disputes, whether among the tribes or "between the tribes and the people of Seebee or the Government of the Khan, his "Excellency in Council desires that they shall be freely exercised, but the responsibility "for the government of the country and the maintenance of order does not devolve on "the British Government."

3. In pursuance of this policy, Major Sandeman was deputed to the Murree Hills with the following instructions:—

"At present the real causes of the quarrels and disturbances which prevail are but imperfectly known. Without fuller and more explicit information there is little prospect of the influence of the British Government being successfully applied to their settlement. His Excellency in Council therefore desires that Captain Sandeman shall proceed into the Murree Hills as early in the cold season as practicable, in order (1) to procure all the information he can respecting local feuds and quarrels among the Murree and Boogtee tribes, or between them and the Afghans, or between them and the Brahooees; (2) to endeavour as far as he can to bring about an amicable settlement of these quarrels; (3) to report for the information of Government, through the Commissioner in Sind, his views on such as he cannot settle; and (4) to report on the general relations between Murree and Boogtee tribes and the Khan's Government. Sir William Merewether may, if he thinks fit, depute an officer from Sind to be associated with Captain Sandeman, but in subordination to him.

"Captain Sandeman will also inquire and report whether anything, and if so what, can be done for the protection of trade viâ the Bolan, and whether a system of fixed tolls on caravans could not be arranged for, the proceeds of which would go to the tribes interested in the protection of the route. In respect to all or any of these objects Captain Sandeman will have discretion to make any arrangements he considers to be advisable, within the total sum sanctioned after the Mittunkote Conference, viz., Rs. 66,960 per annum."

It was added—

"Should the measures now authorised be successful in affording reasonable security to trade through Khelat territory, and should his Highness the Khan show an earnest desire to co-operate for this end, and to return to a proper sense of his duties, it will afford the Governor-General in Council great pleasure, on receiving an expression of regret for what has occurred, to restore the former subsidy and re-establish the old friendly footing with his Highness' Government."

4. Major Sandeman duly carried out the above instructions. Proceeding from Hurrund, on the Dera Ghazee Khan frontier, on the 22nd November he entered the Murree Hills, and in the course of a long tour through Kahan, Seebee, the Bolan Pass, Quetta, Mustung, and Khelat, had friendly conferences with the Chiefs of the Murree and Boogtee tribes, the Brahooee (Sarawan) Sirdars, the Afghan Chiefs of Seebee and Shujjak, and ultimately with the Khan himself.

5. From his interesting report it appears that his mission was in one respect a failure; he did not succeed in settling the disputes between the Murrees and Boogtees and the Brahooees, or between them and the Khan; but, nevertheless, in the opinion of the Government of India, it was by no means wholly unsuccessful; it proved, if it did nothing more, that the advent of a British officer as mediator was most welcome to the Chiefs of Khelat. By all parties with whom he came in contact, by Murrees and Boogtees, by the Afghans of Seebee, by the Brahooee Sirdars, by the Dumar Kakar Patan Chiefs, by the Minguls of the Bolan Pass, and by the Khan himself, Major Sandeman was received in a spirit of marked friendliness and respect; indeed all seemed tending to a successful issue when a change appears to have taken place in the disposition of the Khan, which change Major Sandeman attributes to some doubts which arose as to his position and authority; but, even after this, he was still treated with consideration. The Khan himself, though he drew back from the promises of a reconciliation, "on the "basis of Nusseer Khan's settlement," made to the Belooch Sirdars who proceeded in advance, still professed his readiness to comply with the directions of the British Government; at Major Sandeman's request he received the Brahooee Sirdars in Durbar; expressed his willingness to forgive the past, and to abstain from hostilities against his Sirdars, pending the orders of the British Government, and eventually made Major Sandeman the bearer of a letter to his Excellency the Viceroy, couched in submissive terms, asking permission to offer an explanation of his conduct through Major Sandeman, or to attend at any place required to offer it in person.

6. If the history of the mission had ended here there would indeed have been little doubt as to the course to be pursued; for as the British Government had, by the deputation of Major Sandeman, expressed its willingness that the influence and good offices of its frontier officers should be used for promoting good order and for the settlement of disputes in Khelat, and as the officer deputed had been received in a most friendly manner by all parties interested, it would have been only in accordance with past orders to allow Major Sandeman to complete the work which had been commenced with promise of success but had been interrupted by circumstances; but, unfortunately, during the stay of the mission in Khelat territory two events occurred which seemed likely to place difficulty in the way of effective mediation.

7. In the first place, on the very day after the Durbar in which the Khan had declared for a suspension of hostilities pending the decision of the British Government, his Naib in Kutchi (acting, as the Khan afterwards admitted, under his own orders) opened fire upon some Brahooee followers of the Sirdars, killed several, and carried off some head of sheep and goats. The occurrence was announced by the Khan himself, who explained that it was in punishment for an attempt to plunder. Major Sandeman was justly aggrieved at the Khan's conduct; but as the leading Brahooee Chief did not attach, apparently, much importance to what had taken place, it need not probably be regarded as a serious obstacle to reconciliation.

8. The second and most serious occurrence was that Noordeen, the Mingul Chief, was killed by the Khan's troops a few days after Major Sandeman had left Khelat. The Chief had arrived at Khelat some time before Major Sandeman, and his advent was in no way connected with that officer's visit; his death, therefore, was not in violation of the pledge of safety given by the Khan to the Chiefs accompanying Major Sandeman, and the honour of the British Government is not concerned in the matter. The Khan, indeed, who was the first to inform Major Sandeman of the event, explained that in causing the death of the Sirdar he simply anticipated an attempt to be made on his own life; as the Chief is said to have been an unscrupulous intriguer, and as Sir William Merewether has reported that he was at the time engaged in a conspiracy to dethrone the Khan, it is possible, indeed not improbable, that the Khan's story is correct.

9. However this may be, the occurrence had an unfortunate effect, and made it necessary for the Government of India to pause for a time and watch the progress of events before deciding upon the continuance of a policy of mediation. From Colonel Munro's telegram of the 9th of February, it appeared that the Brahooee Sirdars (Sarawans) having lost all confidence in the Khan in consequence of the death of Noordeen, were in communication with the Jalawans in view to a general rebellion; that plunder and anarchy were generally prevailing, and the Khan's troops cooped up in Bagh and Dadur; and on the 16th it was reported that raiding by Murrees and Sarawans was going on in Kutchi. A telegram of the 29th announced a temporary lull in hostilities, both sides clearly awaiting indication of further action by the British Government; it stated further that a satisfactory communication had reached Colonel Munro from the Khan, while the Brahooee Sirdars wrote similarly, suspending hostilities against the Khan; and in the Khelat diary of the 21st February it was reported that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, the Sarawan Chief, had written to urge the Government to mediate between the Brahoocs and the Khan, stating that all the Sirdars, Jalawan and Sarawan, would attend to the wishes of the British Government, and that he could explain how the Jalawan quarrel with the Khan could be arranged. But on the 11th of March a collision was reported between the Sarawan Sirdars and the Khan's troops upon the Murree border, and the Brahooee Sirdars were said to be concerting a combined movement against the Khan, expressing disappointment at the inaction of the British Government. Lastly, from a telegram of the 13th, it appeared that Candahar coravans returned from Hindoostan, numbering from 2,000 to 3,000 camels, had arrived at Shikarpore, and that merchants were clamouring for assistance through the pass, which might, in the opinion of Major Sandeman, be easily arranged on orders issuing.

10. Such being the state of affairs in Khelat territory, the time has now arrived when it is necessary for the Government definitely to decide what course is to be pursued; whether they will abandon the task of mediation or instruct Major Sandeman to proceed with his endeavours to effect a settlement.

11. Major Sandeman remarks, "I am not without hope that the Khan, even at this "late date, may be brought to a proper sense of his duty to his country and his people," and "I see no cause whatever to prevent my again visiting the Khan's Court on no "doubtful mission, but on the almost certainty that he would again put in force the "arrangements contemplated in the Government Proceedings of the 16th October "last."

Colonel Munro, an officer of long frontier experience and sound judgment, observes that "no impediment presents itself to a fair trial of Major Sandeman's renewed pro- "posals," and he recommends accordingly that "advantage be taken in conveying the "replies of Government to the Khan's letters to reopen communication with Khelat "and the Sirdars," with the proviso that "renewal of communications be accompanied "not indeed by threats of armed intervention, opposed to the principles laid down in "paragraph 7 of the Government of India letter No. 2214P., of the 9th October 1874, "and in subsequent orders, but with such unmistakable evidence of full moral support "accorded by the Government to the officers deputed, as will obviate the possibility "of any recurrence of past misconstruction as to motives, objects, and authority."

The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab in his telegram of 20th recommends that "in the first place the Khan be permitted to submit a statement of his case to the "Government of India;" and that Major Sandeman "be instructed to persevere in "endeavouring to obtain objects laid down in Government of India's letter of 15th "October."

12. After full consideration of all the circumstances of the case, the Government of India are of opinion that the course proposed by Colonel Munro and supported by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is the best that can be adopted under the circumstances, viz., that Major Sandeman should be allowed to endeavour to carry out, under more favourable circumstances, the objects for which he was deputed to the Murree Hills; it is clear that he has not as yet had a fair chance of achieving success; present circumstances are not such as to render success hopeless; on the contrary there is, so far as can be judged, a desire on the part of all for the intervention of the British Government; until therefore a renewed attempt at mediation shall have been made and failed, the Government of India is not prepared to abandon the line of action taken in October last. Intervention under these circumstances will be widely different from that proposed by Sir William Merewether and rejected by the Government of India in this Office letter No. 16P., dated 5th January 1875.

13. Accordingly orders will at once issue that if Colonel Munro is satisfied that the Khan and principal Chiefs of all parties, including Jalawans and Sarawans, are ready to accept Major Sandeman's arbitration, he is authorised, should he deem such a course desirable under present circumstances, to arrange for a meeting between Major Sandeman, the Khan, and his Sirdars in Kutchi, or elsewhere as may be convenient, and make a renewed attempt to carry out the objects set forth in the Government Resolution of the 16th October last, that is, a general settlement of differences between the tribes themselves and between them and the Khan; and further, in extension of those orders, if the Khan should show a proper spirit, the re-establishment of friendly relations between him and the British Government. Major Sandeman should be accompanied by a military escort of such strength as the Commissioner may consider amply sufficient for his protection and dignity, the troops being taken from the frontier forces of the Punjab or Sind, or both the Punjab and Sind, as the Commissioner may think fit. Major Sandeman may also be allowed the services of any available officers, civil or military, whose assistance he requires and the Commissioner considers necessary; and the Commissioner is empowered to advance to him from the treasury such funds as he may need. In short, the Government of India having confidence in Colonel Munro and Major Sandeman desire that the latter be allowed, under the Commissioner's orders, full opportunity of effecting under the most favourable circumstances a settlement of Khelat affairs. A letter from his Excellency the Viceroy to the Khan of Khelat, in reply to the latter's communication, will be transmitted to the Commissioner in due course. Some minor points referred to in the reports under consideration will be disposed of by separate letter.

14. His Excellency in Council proceeds to consider whether any and what further measures are required to secure the effective political management of the Khelat border.

15. Under orders contained in the telegram to the Commissioner of Sind, No. 102P., dated 20th January 1876, the Commissioner of Sind was relieved of all responsibility for Khelat affairs, and the political charge of those affairs was entrusted to the Commissioner of the Derajat Division of the Punjab. His Excellency in Council now desires that it be clearly understood that the political jurisdiction of the Commissioner of the Derajat Division extends through the whole length of the Khelat frontier from Hurrund to the sea, and that all information, reports, or political information of any kind received by the Sind Police stationed at or near the Khelat frontier, be furnished direct to Colonel Munro, as heretofore to the Political Superintendent of the Sind Frontier District.

16. His Excellency in Council further desires, with reference to paragraph 52 of Colonel Munro's report, that the services of the mounted police maintained in Sind Districts under the designation of Belooch Guides be made available to, or placed under the orders of, the officer in charge of our political relations with Khelat.

17. Lastly, his Excellency in Council has arrived at the conclusion that it will be necessary, for the effective political management of the Khelat border, that the portion of Upper Sind known as the Frontier District should be placed under the administrative control of the Punjab Government, and an application for sanction of Her Majesty to this transfer will be made to the Secretary of State in Council in order that a Proclamation to that effect may be issued under the provisions of 28 Vict. c. 17.

To the most Hon. the Marquis of Salisbury, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

My Lord Marquis, Fort William, the 17th March 1876.

With reference to our Despatch No. 6, dated 14th January 1876, on the subject of Khelat affairs, we have the honour to transmit, for the information of Her Majesty's Government the accompanying papers :—*

2. These papers include the official Report of Captain (now Major) Sandeman's proceedings which were briefly noticed in paragraph 9 of the above Despatch; the recommendations of Colonel Munro, the officer now in charge of our political relations with Khelat, and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab as to the course to be pursued, and telegrams and diaries concerning events in Khelat up to the 13th March.

3. The Report and the papers connected therewith have received our most careful consideration; and the conclusions we have formed and the orders we have issued are fully set forth in our Resolution No. 671 (a) P. of the 14th March; from that Resolution your Lordship will perceive that we have authorised a renewed attempt being made by Major Sandeman to carry out the objects of the Resolution of the 16th October 1875, and also, under certain conditions, to re-establish friendly relations between the Khan and the British Government.

No. 55, dated Camp Jacobabad, 21st January 1876.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I have the honour to request that you will submit to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council that it was with the most extreme regret, and, I trust I may be allowed to add, surprise that I received your cypher telegram of the 7th instant, and still more the subsequent one of the 10th, copies appended, as well as of my replies.

2. I have now had the honour of serving Government for close on to 35 years, 31 of which have been spent in India in the endeavour to do my duty and to act strictly in accord with the orders of Government in every position I have held, and never before this has there been any question that any other motive actuated me than the faithful performance of my duty, and the careful observance of instructions communicated for my guidance.

3. I trust that I may be allowed to say, with all due deference and respect, that in this one solitary instance the imputation on me is not really deserved, and that it has arisen from mistakes and omissions with which I have had nothing to do, and which I will now try briefly to show.

4. The hill tribes of Belcooch, the Murrees and Boogtees, both face the ends of the Sind and Punjab border. The latter, from having been taught some severe lessons and being nearer to us, had become more amenable to management, and gave little trouble. The Murrees, on the contrary, while respecting the Punjab Frontier, and receiving favourable treatment there accordingly, behave most obnoxiously towards the plains of Kutchi, territory belonging to our then ally, his Highness the Khan of Khelat. The Sind border was quite safe from both tribes. But the successful forays by the Murrees in the Khelat district of Kutchi disordered the country generally, interfered with the chief trade route through the Bolan and plains below, and tended to upset the mind of the Belochs located within our border, who had only lately been reclaimed from a similar wild life. The Murree proceedings were therefore objected to by the Sind authorities, in which charge the political relations with Khelat were entrusted.

5. As far back as December 1868 I pointed out the dangers that must follow from allowing these Murrees unrestricted license in one direction, though they behaved well in the other, and urged a blockade being established until they came to behave better. It was, I consider, very unfortunate the plan was not then followed, as had it been the Murrees would have been completely in hand by this time instead of, as they are, more insolent and defiant than they have ever been. The Punjab officers argued it would be hard on their part to bring force to bear on the Murrees, who had behaved perfectly well as regards them, while restrictive measures such as proposed would probably lead to disturbance of the peace on their frontier.

6. The correspondence that took place led to the assembly of the Muttunkote Conference, at which it was endeavoured to get rid of the dual system of management, which was found to work so roughly, and for this purpose it was ordered that the officer in charge of the Punjab Frontier, Southern Derajat, should be qua Murrees and Boogtees under the Commandant and Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Sind. This scheme did not answer any better. The Murrees deliberately ignored the chief authority, the Commandant on the Sind Frontier, and their conduct continued so bad that the intention of taking some of them into pay for the maintenance of the peace had to be abandoned. They would neither obey the Sind Frontier Commandant's orders nor those of their legitimate ruler, the Khan of Khelat, and when summoned through the Khan of Khelat in February 1873 to meet the Commissioner in Sind they ignominiously held aloof. But they kept even with the authorities on the Punjab border all the time.

7. During 1874 the conduct of the tribe and their continued raids in Kutchi were so glaringly objectionable, and their fomenting discord amongst the Boogtees was doing so much harm to that tribe, that the plan of blockade was again revived in my letter, No. 1146 of the 5th November, with the further recommendation that should the blockade prove insufficient, the troops, which in the same letter it was proposed should be sent to Khelat, might on their return pass through the Murree Hills, and, if necessary, administer direct and lasting punishment to that tribe. I would respectfully ask perusal of the above quoted letter of the 5th November, particularly paragraphs 6 to 9 inclusive, as it bears on the whole question now at issue, and puts the relative position in a clear and simple light.

8. The result of the papers submitted in 1874 was, that I was summoned to Calcutta to attend his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General. The measures I had ventured to urge to put affairs in Beloochistan and the Government relations with her ruler of that State on a more satisfactory footing, as well as to secure the Murrees into more obedient and peaceful behaviour, could not be entertained and others had to be substituted.

9. In Government letter No. 16P. of the 5th January 1875 it was ruled in reference to the objectionable proceedings of the Khelat ruler and his subjects on the western border of Sind, as well as the general state of misrule that pervaded that State, that—

" His Excellency in Council considers that as the Khan of " Khelat has failed to prevent those crimes, or to give " satisfaction for them, and there is no reasonable expec- " tation at present that the attitude of the Khan will be " changed for the better, it has now become incumbent on the British Government " to take its own measures for the prevention of such offences in future, and the " exaction of a reparation for such as may hereafter occur. I am therefore to request " that the Khan may be addressed by you in a letter setting forth the cases in which " he has failed to grant redress for outrages committed within British territory or upon " British subjects. He should be informed that until such time as he manifests both a " willingness and an ability to perform the duties of a good neighbour, we should take " our own measures, without reference to him, to protect our territories and the lives and " property of our subjects; that any of his subjects who may commit offences in British " territory and be apprehended there will receive the utmost penalty of the law; and " if they succeed in escaping back into Khelat territory they will, whenever this may " be practicable, be followed and punished, and satisfaction will be exacted from those " who may shelter and aid them.

8. " A draft of the letter to be sent to the Khan of Khelat should be submitted for " the approval of the Governor-General in Council. After its despatch all further com- " munication with the Khan should, if possible, be avoided " till such time as he comes to a better mind." The above instructions are most clear, and point to an absolute avoidance of all interference with affairs connected with the Khelat Government or its ruler. The letter to the Khan was despatched in the month of March 1875.

The italics are mine.—W. L. M.

10. With regard to the other question of the procedure of the Murree tribe, it was considered that the reason for their " line of conduct has been to a considerable extent " the dual system of management. While the Murrees have been comparatively tractable " on the Punjab side, owing to the advantages they derive from the British Govern- " ment, they have rendered themselves justly obnoxious to the Sind authorities by dis- " regarding the policy of Government and raiding in the Kutchi plains, His Excellency " in Council considers it necessary that this double management should absolutely " cease. It is essential to any proper dealings with these tribes that the question as it " affects the Punjab and Sind should be treated as one. If their behaviour is such as " to justify their punishment on the Sind side, they cannot continue to receive favour " from the side of the Punjab.

" For this reason his Excellency in Council considers that the Deputy Commis- " sioner of Dera Ghazi Khan should be the medium of all intercourse and communica- " tions with the Murree and Boogtee tribes in all their branches, but that he should be

" With reference to other tribes than the Murrees and Boogtees, that is to say, tribes " whose proceedings mainly affect Sind, and who have no direct intercourse with the " Punjab, the Deputy Commissioner should take no action without reference to the Com- " missioner in Sind, and such action as may be ordered in respect to them should be " undertaken jointly by the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazi Khan and the Political " Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier. Unity of policy and action is absolutely " necessary, and no deviation from the policy prescribed should be permitted by the " officers on either side without previous instructions from the Government of India." These instructions are perfectly plain, and I will venture respectfully, but confidently, to assert that the records will prove they have been absolutely and solely carried out by the authorities on the Sind side. How far this has been the case on the Dera Ghazi side I am unable to say, as recent events lead to the conclusion that communications from that side have been submitted to Government, which I have never seen, and which did not pass through me. I may be wrong, but the inference is, I think, justifiable. Government will be able to judge whether it is correct or not.

11. It was thought that the management, which had been partially tried with some success on the Punjab side, might produce good results on the Murrees and Boogtees, and Captain Sandeman was instructed to use his influence in the settlement of existing intertribal quarrels, and to subsidize those tribes with the view of inducing them to behave in an equally exemplary manner towards Kutchi as they did towards the Punjab border, accepting the responsibilities and dispensing the benefits under the orders of the Commissioner in Sind.

12. Certain preliminary arrangements, however, had to be made in consequence of the disobedient attitude that had been assumed towards the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, by the Murree Chief, and the neglect of the latter to make, as he had been called on to do, restitution of property plundered from the kafilas in 1872. Also restitution of cattle belonging to British subjects carried off by Murrees and Boogtees in August 1874 from outside the Sind outposts. When these conditions were fulfilled Captain Sandeman was at once to proceed to arrange the details of the measures resolved upon.

13. The Murree Chief, Guzzun Khan, paid his respects to Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, at Jacobabad, in February 1875. But it is now stated that he did so only as a personal favour to Captain Sandeman, which I consider should not have been the manner of the submission. An award made by Captain Sandeman as to the amount to be made good by the Murree tribe for the plunder they gained from the kafilas was accepted by me, though very far below the value of what they had possessed themselves of. In the same way with restitution for the Khutton raid in August 1874, the decision arrived at by Captain Sandeman was, I considered, very much below what ought to have been enforced, but it was frankly and readily accepted by me in the hope that this leniency would have a salutary effect on the hill tribes, and would strengthen Captain Sandeman's hands in his endeavours to bring those tribes, the Murrees especially, under the control desired. I regret to have here to remark that the Khutton award has not yet been fully enforced. I must also add that neither of these demands on the Murrees have had the effect which they were intended to produce, viz., that they should make the Chiefs and members of the tribe generally feel they were punishments awarded for their misdeeds. The amount for the kafilas, Rs. 4,000, was simply deducted from the subsidy paid to the Chief, while he and his tribe retained possession of, and had benefited by, goods to the value of a very much larger sum than that, and the delay in enforcing, as well as the comparative smallness of the demand for the Khutton loot, has made it no infliction at all.

14. After the despatch of the letter to the Khan of Khelat in March last year, the policy of absolute non-interference in the affairs of the Khelat State was rigidly adhered to throughout the year by me, and, under my instructions, by Colonel Loch, the Political Superintendent on the frontier. It was several times brought to my notice that communications were passing between the Dera Ghazi Khan District and Khelat. Having in view the orders of Government that nothing of the sort should occur from British territory, I addressed the Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazi Khan, and asked him if such was the case. He stated distinctly no, and forwarded a letter from his assistant, the Assistant Commissioner of Rajanpur, to the same effect. I rested quite satisfied with this. Government will be best able to decide whether I was right in doing so.

15. The proceedings of the Murrees, instead of becoming better after the leniency with which they had been treated, increased in insolence and defiance of the avowed policy of the British Government with regard to Kutchi, and with which they could not fail to have been acquainted, Captain Sandeman having been instructed in letter No. 16P of the 5th January 1875 to explain it carefully to the Chief, Guzzun Khan. It was, moreover, notorious throughout the country. I drew Captain Sandeman's attention to their repeated acts of outrage, and inquired of him whether the late orders for more extended subsidising had been carried into effect. I also particularly pointed out to him that these acts of the Murrees were for the most part not prompted by feelings of revenge or intertribal quarrels, but were dictated by their inveterate love of plunder and outrage, and mainly directed against unoffending people who were unable to protect themselves. His replies were not satisfactory, as will be shown from the correspondence; indeed, in October he fairly acknowledged he had been unable to keep the Murrees out of Kutchi. He stated by telegram, in reply to a question from me, he had not given a rupee of the new subsidy to any of the tribe.

16. The state of affairs in Khelat may with advantage be here briefly referred to. Discussions between the Khan and his Sirdars had commencement with the earliest period of his reign, 1857. He was thought to be a weak youth, and that once in their hands they might wield power as they pleased. In this they were then defeated by the old Darogah, Gool Mahomed, who, whatever his other faults may have been, was a staunch upholder of the Ahmadzai dynasty. The breach continued to widen as years went on. Several rebellions took place against the authority of the Khan, and for a time he was deposed, but was reinstated by the Sirdars on the murder of the cousin put up in his stead. He has managed to hold his own ever since. In the autumn of 1871 one of the most serious outbreaks of all took place, and became the more serious from the Sirdars conceiving themselves supported in their action by the then chief official on the British border. To put an end to the disorders which were becoming serious in Kutchi, the Government of India ruled that the Sirdars should be allowed to come into Jacobabad to detail their grievances, and the Khan of Khelat gave full power to the Commissioner in Sind to act and decide on his behalf. The complaints of the Sirdars were most fully inquired into, and the award was that while they were to make restitution of the plunder taken from the kafilas by their followers in the Bolan, and agree to act loyally in future towards their Sovereign, he in his turn was to allow and confirm them in their hereditary lands, and treat them as the custom of the country required they should be recognised. The Sirdars looked for this award to be abided by by the Khan, but they state it has not been, and they further urge that many acts of tyranny have since been inflicted on various clans by the Khan, as well as that they can in no way trust to him or his promise. His Excellency the Viceroy received the Khan at Sukkur in November 1872, and it was hoped this would have a good effect. In the February following I proceeded to Shahpur in Kutchi to have a meeting with the Khan. All the Brahooee Sirdars were present. Every possible endeavour was made by me to induce the Khan to abide by the award of 1872, to act towards his Sirdars in a more generous, conciliatory spirit, and to make arrangements for the better government and maintenance of peace and order in his country. But it was all of no avail; under the influence of bad advisers he would take interest in nothing useful, and only kept repeating applications for the release of three questionable favourites, who had been removed into Sind. I saw all the Sirdars, both in the presence of the Khan, and afterwards at his desire by themselves, the Wuzeer being present on each occasion. They were very reasonable and respectful, with the exception of Noordeen Mingul, who openly defied the Khan in his camp, and did not attend any of the latter Durbars. I could only advise the Sirdars to do their best to be on good terms and work with their Sovereign, it being the wish of the British Government to see a firm government and united people in Khelat, and impress upon them that no good could accrue to anybody from disturbances such as had been promoted by them in 1871–72; neither would they be tolerated; that these only injured unoffending people. They should, therefore, abstain from that mode of obtaining redress, and I particularly warned them if perpetrators of such disorders approached the British border they would be treated like common thieves, and punished accordingly.

Vide Report No. 400 from Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to Government, dated 3rd May 1873.—W. L. M.

See paragraph 27, page 14 of letter No. 400 of 3rd May 1873.—W. L. M.

I must state that they have hitherto most loyally held to the promises they then made to follow this advice.—W. L. M.

17. Finding no good results could be gained by further interviews with the Khan, I broke up my camp, and from the next halting place, Manuti, wrote my views fully to him, and pointed out how I thought matters might be improved. The Khan did not accept of them. In April 1873 his manifest disinclination to act in accord with the wishes of the Government of India, and his conduct towards the Political Agent at his Court, was such as to make the latter's recall absolutely necessary. The excellent Wuzeer, Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed, against whom the Khan had lately been deliberately working, found it advisable to leave too, and come into British territory for protection. The Khan retired to Khelat, and the Sirdars went to their homes above the passes, with the exception of Moolla Mahomed Raisani, who distrusting the Khan preferred returning to his old place of voluntary exile in Seebee.

18. During 1873–74 relations were not entirely broken off with the Khan of Khelat, but he showed no signs of any endeavour on his part to improve the state of affairs in his country. Various acts of outrage were committed by his people on British subjects, and when redress was required of him reply was given that arrangements were about to be made to restore order in the places complained of, but nothing was ever done. In February 1874 a gross outrage was committed on the western frontier of Sind. The arrest and delivery of the perpetrators was demanded, but, though promises were freely made by the Khan, nothing was, or has been up to the present time, done by him in this respect. I then ventured to recommend force should be employed to compel the Khan to act up to his engagements. On the departure of Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed from the Government of Khelat no Wuzeer was at first appointed. It was several times offered by the Khan to Atta Mahomed, son of the Darogah Gool Mahomed, but refused until about November 1874 when it was at last accepted, and Atta Mahomed was installed. In the spring of last year the new Wuzeer proceeded into the southern districts of Khelat to restore order there and in Lus Beyla, and to seize the perpetrators of outrages whose extradition had been demanded, especially Pahar Khan Sassuli, the Chief, in the grave outrage of February. All this the new Wuzeer did excellently well, and took the defaulters back with him to Khelat last April, but the Khan did not cause them to be delivered up as required, nor has he to this day.

19. As stated in the previous part of this letter, I proceeded to Calcutta in December 1874, according to summons by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General, and after my return to the frontier, the letter ordered to be addressed to the Khan of Khelat was despatched. It was delayed a little, because there seemed a hope of improvement in the Khan's demeanour, but this proved illusory. A letter was also forwarded to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani, repeating the advice and injunctions given to him and the other Sirdars by me at Shapur in 1873.

20. On the 21st of October last, as the year was drawing to a close, I submitted the report quoted in the margin, showing the state of affairs in Khelat, and what had occurred up to that time. There has been no change for the better on the the part of the Khan. Indeed, he had shown himself even more pointedly indifferent as to how he stood with the British Government by disgracing the new Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed, when he returned to Khelat after admirably arranging with Captain Wise for order and quiet on the western frontier of Sind. The Khan's answer to my letter of March was most objectionable in tone, and as it gave no opening for recommendation of renewal of old relations no steps were taken on it. A very full and interesting report by Colonel Loch was forwarded, at the same time showing that the Khan's conduct towards the Sirdars had been persistently irritable, and that complaints were loudly made by them.

No. 846, dated 21st October.

21. The Resolution of the Government of India No. 2819, dated 16th October, was received by me on the day of my departure from Sind for Bombay to attend at the coming of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. As Government was not then in possession of my report of the 21st idem, and as there were points in the Resolution which I thought would have been differently viewed had his Excellency the Viceroy perused that report, I ventured in a further letter, dated 29th October, to submit some further observations relating to affairs on the Sind and Punjab Frontiers and in Khelat, and to ask instructions.

22. These points may briefly be said to have been—

That the expectation of the Khan of Khelat having somewhat realized the gravity of the situation had not been realized.

That the Murree tribe, though the Sirdars had paid the required visit to Jacobabad, and arrangements had been made for the restitution of plundered property or its equivalent, had shown no improvement in their behaviour towards the unoffending people of Kutchi, indeed had shown more daring rapacity than I had ever known them display before. That these outrages did not proceed from any particular quarrels with other tribes, but from the insatiate love of plunder possessing the Murrees, and the assurance they feel that they can carry it on with impunity. The leniency system I felt would never bring them to order, that nothing but severe measures and telling punishment will induce them to withhold from deeds of violence.

That there was no immediate dispute between the Murrees and the Khan of Khelat, further than that they always disobeyed his orders and harried his country when it pleased them, and that if the Khan or his officials had prompted the Murrees to molest any people, that was nothing to us; our dealings were now direct with the Murrees, and they should elect once for all who they would serve, us or the Khan. They could not have engagement with both now; that the object of the Mittunkote Conference was to put an end to a system under which a tribe of robbers were favourably received and treated well on one side, and there was reason for this, but they were guilty of deliberate misbehaviour on the other, harrying unoffending people and interfering with trade; that it was absolutely necessary this state of affairs, which still continued, should be put a stop to, as if it was not, the district of Kutchi immediately adjacent to Sind would become desolate, and traders not dare to cross it.

That if kafilas were deterred from coming through Kutchi, they would be driven to adopt the routes by Khelat, which would be advantageous to the Khan, but injurious to Sirdars who had been in the habit of sharing in the transit dues of the Bolan.

That the Thull Chotiali route might possibly be re-opened, but it would be of little practical use, as it was only a side route to Delhi in former years. Now the trade must find its way to the sea by the shortest and best road, which unquestionably is that through Kutchi, and which ought therefore to be solely thought of.

That the position of the Sind outposts was not exactly that given in the Government Resolution, and that they were of no value for maintenance of order in Kutchi, being far removed therefrom.

Finally, that there was positively nothing to be learned as to the real state of affairs either in the Murree Hills or in Khelat. Previous reports during the past years had explained everything, and my letter of the 21st October, with its accompaniments, had detailed all up to date, while the supplementary letter of the 29th had cleared points which seemed to be considered obscure. The position was simply this, the Khan of Khelat was at open variance with his Sirdars, and hope of reconciliation did not exist unless some third party intervened, stronger than either, who would insist on pledges being observed on both sides; or that they should measure strength until one overpowered the other. The other matter was that a tribe of lawless plunderers were disturbing the country and injuring trade, and they must be either forced or tempted into obedience and respect for the property of others. In both instances it had been ruled that the latter courses were to be followed. The Khan and his Barons were to be allowed to settle their differences after their own fashion, interference from our side being strictly avoided, beyond precautions for the safety of life and property within British territory, and better behaviour was to be secured from the Murrees by friendly offices and subsidising. The former, viz., position of Khelat parties, remained as it was, and had yet to develope itself. The latter had been found impracticable from the experience of the past year, owing to the continuous and even increased outrageous acts of the Murrees. In conclusion, I recommended a new plan by which Kutchi might be kept clear of the Murrees and trade be protected.

23. Up to the time of my return to Kurrachee in November, I had received no further orders on my letters of the 21st and 29th October. I therefore drew up instructions for Captain Sandeman, how he was to act in carrying out the orders of Government conveyed in Government of India Resolution No. 2819 of the 16th October last. Copy of these already have been submitted. In preparing them I was guided by the orders I had received to avoid all interference in the internal affairs of the Khelat State, which I had been closely adhering to, and which I understood to be still in force. I was the more sure of this, because on my arrival at Kurrachee I found awaiting me there Government of India letter No. 2872P., dated 21st October, acknowledging receipt of my letter No. 471, dated 4th idem, regarding affairs in Khelat, and the desire of certain subjects of his Highness the Khan to emigrate from Kutchi and seek an asylum in Sind. The wish of these people had been reported to me by Colonel Loch, Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, as also the disordered condition of Kutchi. In reply, he had been told that the state of affairs was much to be regretted, but no interference could take place. If people desired to come into Sind they could be permitted to do so, at the same time Colonel Loch was told he had acted quite right in exerting his influence in inducing them to stay in Kutchi. In the above quoted letter from the Government of India, Mr. Secretary Aitchison writes:—

"His Honour in Council observes that you have instructed the Political Superintendent, "Upper Sind Frontier, that no interference on the part of "the British authorities can take place in these disputes "between the Khan and his subjects. In this opinion the Government of India fully "concurs. There is no need for any active interposition on the part of the British "Government, and if the people who have reason to complain of misrule in Khelat choose "to emigrate and settle in British territory, an asylum "should not be refused to them as long as they abstain "from using that asylum as a point from which to excite "disturbances in Khelat." I would draw attention to the date of this letter, it is five days subsequent to that of Resolution No. 2819P., and certainly conveys the view that the policy of non-interference by British authorities in the affairs of the Khan of Khelat and his subjects are still to be strictly adhered to.

The italics are mine.—W. L. M.

This was the course recommended by me before when Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani asked for an asylum in Sind.—W. L. M.

24. Government Resolution No. 2819P. of the 16th October abandoned the idea of preventing Murree depredations in Kutchi. As the discontinuance of those outrages was the main cause of the Mittunkote Conference and subsequent arrangements under which Captain Sandeman was made immediately subordinate to me, that he might exert his influence for good over that tribe, naturally his functions in that respect would be supposed to cease, but it was considered that "at present the real causes of the quarrels and "disturbances which prevail are but imperfectly known, without fuller and more explicit "information there is little prospect of the influence of the British Government being "successfully applied to their settlement," I ventured in my letter of the 29th October to point out how these doubts might be removed, but hearing no further on the subject

I accepted the instructions laid down in the 26th and 27th paragraphs of the Government Resolution, and directed Captain Sandeman accordingly, at the same time keeping in view the policy and necessity enjoined on me of abstaining from any direct interference between the Khan of Khelat, his Sirdars, and his subjects.

25. These instructions were as follows :—"His Excellency in Council therefore desires "that Captain Sandeman shall proceed into the Murree Hills as early in the cold season as "practicable, in order (1) to procure all the information he can respecting local feuds "and quarrels among the Murree and Boogtee tribes, or between them and the Afghans, or "between them and the Brahooees; (2) to endeavour, as far as he can, to bring about an "amicable settlement of these quarrels; (3) to report, for the information of Government "through the Commissioner in Sind, his views on such as he cannot settle; (4) to "report on the general relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes and the Khan's "Government. Sir William Merewether may, if he thinks fit, depute an officer from "Sind to be associated with Captain Sandeman, but in subordination to him." These orders I construed to confine Captain Sandeman's proceedings entirely to the Murree Hills, that being his especial field of action at the time, and believing such, I did not consider it necessary to depute an officer from Sind to be associated with him.

26. Paragraph 27 directed—"Captain Sandeman will also inquire and report whether "anything, and if so what, can be done for the protection of trade viâ Bolan, and whether "a system of fixed tolls on caravans could not be arranged for, the proceeds of which "would go to the tribes entrusted in the protection of the route. In respect to all or any "of these objects Captain Sandeman will have discretion to make any arrangements he "considers to be advisable within the total sum sanctioned after the Mittunkote Con-"ference, viz., Rupees 66,960 per annum." After my interview with his Highness the Khan at Shahpur in 1873, it was proposed by me to him that an arrangement similar to this should be made, and allowance passed to the Sarawan Sirdars, who are most concerned with transit, through the Khan. The latter rejected the proposal, and as without his assent it could not possibly be carried out as long as he held the supreme power, it was dropped. No matter what arrangements the Sirdars made for passage down the Bolan, the Khan could at once defeat them by directing his Naib at Quetta to make all kafilas diverge there, and go viâ Khelat and the Mulla or other roads. This much, if Captain Sandeman had not already learned it from the records, he would have been told by any one in the country, and could have reported on accordingly.

27. Paragraph 28 refers to the practicability of re-opening the Thull Chotiallee route, with which I have nothing to do, though I have repeatedly endeavoured to show that the difficulties attending it are very great, and it would be of little use when re-opened.

28. Paragraph 29 reviews the whole, as it were, and suggests that should the measures authorised prove successful in affording reasonable security to trade, and should his Highness the Khan show desire to co-operate for this end and make proper amends, the old friendly footing with his Highness' Government might be re-established. But this I understood to be more for the information of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and myself, who were to have the direct carrying out of the orders of Government.

29. The last paragraph would seem to refer to some impatient and inconsiderate dealing with the tribes, as well as harsh and precipitate action on my part, regarding which I am at a loss to conceive in what respect I was found to have acted so. I certainly complained repeatedly about the gross outrages committed by the Murrees, but I think there was good reason for this, at the same time I sure am the correspondence will show that on the points submitted to me for decision in regard to what should be required of that tribe for its misdeeds, my action was most lenient, more so than their subsequent proceedings have shown they deserved. I am always most ready to treat these wild people with every consideration and kindness, when they show themselves worthy of it, and are amenable to proper control. The rule with these tribes should always be parcere subjectis sed debellare superbos, and this is what I have ever tried to follow.

30. In the orders contained in the latter part of the Government Resolution, I would beg, then, most respectfully and deferentially to observe, there is nothing whatever to show that the policy directing strict non-interference between the Khan and his Sirdars or subjects had been abandoned. Indeed, in a letter dated five days later, such non-interference is fully approved and enjoined. I could not therefore for a moment suppose it was the wish of his Excellency in Council that Captain Sandeman should enter in between them, and while placed in subordination to me, take up a most important subject I had been directed to withhold from.

31. My instructions to that officer were based therefore on that view. I must also add, that I was prompted to be very precise and explicit in them, because I had noticed for some time past he had shown a strong, and I considered unreasonable, desire to engage in the internal affairs of the Khelat State. He had also on a former occasion exhibited a tendency to act independently of me, which it may be recollected I had to bring to official notice, knowing well the inadvisability of disunited and discontented people conceiving there could be two different executives on the part of Government; the difficulties that must follow from the vague hopes that would be excited in the Sirdars' minds by their cause being apparently taken up again, and the danger of fresh complications with the Khan of Khelat arising from a new official coming in, so soon after he had been told all communication with him had been withdrawn until he made amends for his disregard of friendly obligations and treaty engagements. I placed what I thought very necessary restrictions on Captain Sandeman, and desired him to absolutely confine his action to within the Murree Hills.

32. Captain Sandeman had been placed under me in January 1875, and was directed to report to me, and to me only, on all subjects relating to the Murrees and Boogtees, and tribes in any way connected with them, sending copies to the Government of the Punjab. It would seem now that he could not have abided by this rule, or I should have been better acquainted with his proposed actions. I append a list of all the documents received from him during the past year, from which Government will learn how far he complied with the instructions given him. If all reports on these subjects prepared by him have not been submitted to me I think I have just reason to complain of such action on his part.

33. Had I had the slightest idea it was the wish of his Excellency in Council that Captain Sandeman should actively engage in Khelat affairs, and personally visit the Sirdars and Khan, I should have felt it my duty to point out officially the difficulties and evils that would arise from such a course being followed, and to recommend its being abandoned. If after the arguments I should have adduced his Excellency still wished that Captain Sandeman should be deputed on this extra service, it would have then been my duty to see his Excellency's wishes carried out, and do all I could to see them effectually performed. One of the first requisites was that he, Captain Sandeman, should have been provided with credentials from me, that is, letters of introduction to the Sirdars and Khan, from the authority with whom they had hitherto only communicated officially. Not having these papers, the Sirdars and Khan would naturally think there must be something strange in his coming to them, certainly something very unusual, and any object there was in view would have all the less chance of success, if it ever possessed any at all. I was not called on to supply such documents and beyond a telegraphic announcement of Captain Sandeman having left for the Murree Hills, which reached me on the 25th November, I received no intimation from that officer of what he proposed doing, where he intended going, or any reports of progress as should certainly have been furnished to me.

34. Two days after my arrival at Sukkur, or on the 13th of December, I received information that a skilfully organised revolution was about to break out in Khelat territory, and telegraphed to you as follows:—"Revolution in Khelat imminent. Noordeen "Mingul working a likely conspiracy in conjunction with Fakir Muhammad, commanding regiment at Khelat, and others. Object to depose Khan, and set up eldest son. "Sarawan Sirdars in communication with Noordeen, but principal ones being in Kutchi "will probably only create disturbance there for diversion. Am proceeding to frontier "to watch events, avoiding all interference. Sandeman in Murree Hills, by last accounts. "Have told him of above, and instructed him to be most careful to avoid any communication with Brahooee Sirdars or people, and on no account to go beyond Murree Hills "towards Bolan, Seebee, or Kutchi." This revolution was what I had expected must occur sooner or later, and what I understood should be allowed to run its course, if the Sirdars chose to enter upon it. The only part that concerned us being the protection of the British border from disorder or injury. Your reply to that telegram, dated 16th December, was—"Policy of non-interference approved;" but there was no remark on the orders I had sent to Captain Sandeman. On the same day as the telegram, the letters giving the intelligence of the projected rebellion were forwarded to you under my endorsement, No. 966.

35. On the 17th December I heard that Captain Sandeman had left the Murree Hills and entered Kutchi. I telegraphed to you—"Captain Sandeman is stated to have visited "Seebee and Dadur, and communicated with Brahooee Sirdars. This is directly contrary "to my orders; would be highly objectionable at any time, but at the present moment most "improper and embarrassing. Any appearance even of separate political action from " that I have been ordered to carry out cannot be too carefully avoided. Have sent " express to Captain Sandeman to return at once to his districts, and I would beg he " may be kept there. Papers by post." Believing strict non-interference in Khelat affairs was still the policy of Government, I considered Captain Sandeman's entry on the scene particularly unsuitable. He must either appear to be siding with the rebellious Sirdars, or check them in the course they had adopted of their own free will, and which they had been left to follow; whichever of these happened, his presence amongst them must raise expectations, which, judging from the orders I was working under, I conceived Government did not wish to acknowledge or support; it would more seriously complicate matters and cause the tangled web of Khelat affairs to become more and more confused, and more difficult of readjustment hereafter. From what has since been learned, Captain Sandeman would appear to have adopted the second plan, viz., stopped the outbreak, and letters were sent by the Sarawan Sirdars to Sirdar Noordeen Mingul and the Jalawans to hold their hands too. Captain Sandeman, in letters from Quetta (Shalkote), dated 23rd and 25th December, acknowledged to Colonel Loch receipt of my orders to return to his districts; but stated he could not comply with them, as he was acting under the orders of the Government of India. This was the first intimation I had received from him that he considered himself under orders independent of mine. Up to this day I have not been furnished by him with any acknowledgment of my instructions of the 25th November having reached him. To insure their doing so they were forwarded to him by several routes from Jacobabad, and some time previous to the orders which he did acknowledge from Quetta.

36. Your telegram of the 20th, in reply to mine of the 17th, was—" While directing " Captain Sandeman not to interfere in the troubles apparently impending between " Khan and his subjects, you should take care not to interfere with Sandeman's execu- " tion of orders he has received from Government of India, and particularly not to be " too hasty in condemning his conduct before he has explained it. Sandeman's move- " ments amongst Murrees should not be interfered with." I had not in the least attempted to interfere with Captain Sandeman's movements among the Murrees, on the contrary, I had impressed on him he should confine himself entirely to their hills; and as regards the orders of the Government of India, I felt clear he must be going beyond them altogether. I replied therefore on the 22nd: —" I do not understand, and cannot sup- " pose Sandeman has orders for what he is doing, as it is directly contrary to policy " laid down by Government of India, and gravely insubordinate to me. He has not " only visited Seebee and Dadur and held communications with Brahooee Sirdars, but has " sent Imam Buksh Mazari and others with letters to Khan of Khelat. He has also " entered Bolan accompanied by Sirdars. The whole of this is directly contrary to " instructions given him by me—most indiscreet and unbecoming. Must make present " relations with Khan and Khelat affairs more embarrassing, and make all parties doubt " in reality of Government policy and its good faith. You may be sure Sandeman will " not be finally condemned by me unheard; but above speaks for itself, and I must beg " his being kept at Dera Ghazi Khan and his own legitimate duties."

37. The above telegrams and the different memoranda at the same time added by me in submitting letters detailing Captain Sandeman's proceedings will, I trust, be considered certain proof that I never for a moment imagined Captain Sandeman either was or could be regarded as carrying out orders of Government in the way he was acting, and that in all I did I was honestly and bonâ fide endeavouring to carry into effect what I believed to be the wishes of his Excellency the Viceroy. These, inculcating non-interference in Khelat affairs had been communicated to me, but nothing since to show they had been abrogated. Non-interference was not the policy I had ventured to recommend; I had urged that the Khan should be forced to act up to his obligations. The course I followed then was not my own, but what I was told was desired by the Government of India, until such time as the Khan showed a willingness and ability to perform the duties of a good neighbour, and I steadily adhered to it.

38. Finally, I would respectfully ask, has not my forecasts of events been exactly fulfilled? Captain Sandeman has all along been misled by the belief that he had only to get within the circle of Khelat politics to be able to arrive at once at the centre, and set all things to rights. But, as I have repeatedly pointed out, he really knew little of the character of the Khan of Khelat, or of the true merits of the case between the Khan and his Barons, therefore he was not able to judge how it could best be adjusted. His arrival in Kutchi stopped a revolution which promised to bring about the adjustment of affairs which Government was waiting for. These proceedings of Noordeen Mingul showed more judgment and careful combination than he had ever displayed before, and had for their object immediate movement against the Khan himself. The communications sent from Seebee, or Dadur, after Captain Sandeman had joined the Sarawan Sirdars, induced Noordeen to suspend his measures against the Khan, and he afterwards paid his respects at Khelat when guaranteed safety by the Khan pledging his oath on the Koran, and induced to do so by the persuasion of Atta Mahomed Wuzeer and the Khan's sister, the Bibi Futteh Khatun. The Sarawan Sirdars went readily with Captain Sandeman to Khelat, but as I knew must be the case, nothing came of it. They would not be satisfied without guarantee from us that the Khan should keep his promises better than he has done, and the Khan, judging from the letters received from divers sources, does not appear to have satisfied Captain Sandeman. The most unfortunate event of all, however, has been the treacherous behaviour of the Khan so immediately after the visit of Captain Sandeman, in having Noordeen Mingul attacked and killed in spite of the safe guarantee. If the breach between the Khan and Sirdars was wide before, it is infinitely so now, and quite uncloseable, while grave disturbances must follow. They have already been begun by Gohur Khan, head of the Jalawans. The people give a variety of reasons for the Khan's reckless behaviour. But the latest report is, I think, the correct one, that one of his bad advisers told him Noordeen and Atta Mahomed were plotting to kill him (an absurd thing as they were then situated), but he determined to anticipate their action by killing them. The above is briefly what has occurred lately, and I leave it for the consideration of Government.

39. I have endeavoured to give, step by step, the principle that has guided me throughout, and the reasons for all I did, and I confidently hope that what is now laid before his Excellency in Council will lead to my being absolved from the grave imputation which before this explanation has appeared to his Excellency to lie at my door, and that the supposition may no longer be entertained that I ever contemplated for a moment deviating in the least from a sincere desire to carry out the views of his Excellency and Government. I would also most respectfully trust that the severe condemnation which has been passed may be removed, so that it may not remain on the records of Government as reflecting so seriously on the reputation of a public officer who has always endeavoured to show that obedience to orders, faithful discharge of duties entrusted to him, and cheerful devotion to the public service were the guiding motives that have always actuated him.

40. Before bringing this letter to a close, and as consequent on the late decision of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council directing me to be relieved of the political duties on this frontier, I would beg to be allowed to submit for his consideration the following observations on the causes which have led to the present state of affairs, and what my experience of many years in connexion with the locality and people would prompt me to recommend for the future.

41. I think I may safely and justly state that a careful review of the events of the past 10 years will go to prove that the difficulties experienced in maintaining peace and good order in the country lying to the north of Sind have been largely increased by the view held that it was inadvisable to alter arrangements made on the adjacent portion of the southern frontier of the Punjab with the hill tribes of Belooch, whose lawless acts were complained of from Sind in respect to the first mentioned locality, but who showed more orderly demeanour towards, and who abstained from committing outrages in British territory in the Punjab. The two tribes principally concerned are the Murrees and Boogtees, the former in a pre-eminent degree and for the whole time, the latter much less so, and only in recent years.

42. It has been repeatedly represented that while the good behaviour of these tribes towards the Punjab was in a measure owing to the personal influence exerted over them by the district officers, at the same time the satisfactory result was greatly due to the fact that it was to the interest of the tribes (the Murrees especially) to keep on good terms with the officials in the Punjab, because they derived regular and palpable benefits therefrom, while no restrictions were imposed on their lawlessness and disorderly practices elsewhere. Restrictive measures were advocated from Sind, but as it was considered these might cause the Murrees to break with the Punjab, and recommence outrages there, the point was not pressed; but, instead, it was endeavoured to extend the friendly managing system which had been so far successful in the Punjab, and try its effect in producing similar control on the other side. By this means it was hoped that the two systems which had hitherto prevailed might be avoided. The above was decided on in 1871, the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazi Khan for these purposes being placed under the Political Superintendent and Commandant on the frontier of Upper Sind. I venture confidently to assert that every possible facility and assistance was afforded by the officers on the Sind side to make this plan successful, but it did not answer. The Murrees still showed themselves unruly, continued their aggressions on the inhabitants of Kutchi, and wilfully disobeyed the orders of the Political Superintendent. Their conduct all this time towards the Punjab was shown to be most subservient, and all that could be desired. This was easy enough for them, for they were in receipt of regular pay, and treated with high favour there, while they could indulge their liking for plunder and deeds of violence elsewhere without any restraint being imposed on them. The insolence of the Chief was so marked in 1873, and the plunderings of the tribe so frequent that year and the following, that I again urged punitive measures should be adopted and these Murrees brought under proper control once for all. It was shown there would be no difficulty in doing this. The country had become well known to our officers, and there was no escape for the tribe. Their hands had been so continuously against every one else, no one would give them refuge, and from long success they had become so powerful and arrogant, all other tribes desired to see them humbled and brought back to their old position.

43. Advisable though it appeared that these wild freebooters should be made to respect other people's lives and property, still, in the hope that they might yet be restrained by other than forcible measures, and military movements beyond the frontier being disapproved by his Excellency the Viceroy in Council, it was determined by his Excellency that one more effort should be made to win the tribe over by leniency and liberal treatment. The Murree and Boogtee tribes were placed solely under the control of Captain Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazi Khan, who was to deal with them direct, irrespective entirely of their real ruler the Khan of Khelat, and to leave the promise of reward and punishment in his hands for the conduct of these tribes towards their neighbours, Kutchi being specially included. The policy and object of Government was to be fully explained to the Murree Chief, so that he might know exactly what was required of him. To leave the executive more untrammelled he was separated from the Political Superintendent on the Sind Frontier, and placed directly under the Commissioner in Sind. This plan succeeded no better than the other. The behaviour of the Murrees has been far worse during the last year than it has ever been known to be before. The avowed policy of Government was openly disregarded by them, and the outrages committed in Kutchi were more frequent and more bold than ever; altogether their conduct was most defiant, yet no check was imposed upon them. In October last his Excellency the Viceroy in Council was pleased to rule that interference in protecting Kutchi was not called for from the Government of India, as it was territory belonging to the Khan of Khelat, with whom relations had been broken off. The last plan then has succeeded no better than the first, and I would respectfully draw attention to the repeated opinions I have expressed for years past, that with such characters as the wild Belooch measures which depend for success on coaxing, petting, and pecuniary adjustments can never answer. These people must be taught and made to obey implicitly. Then treat them with every kindness, but it must still be conjoined with just firmness. Captain Sandeman will have informed Government of the demeanour of the Murrees during his late visit to and passage through their hills. If the reports that have been received here, and are current throughout the country, are true, it was anything but proper or such as his long kind treatment should have commanded.

44. Neither the dual nor the quasi-dual, nor the supposed direct and single management of these tribes has succeeded, and it has become necessary that a different course should be adopted. I would therefore beg to lay before Government what has long appeared to me to be the real and only practical remedy for existing difficulties. I mentioned it in discussion with Sir Henry Davies at Mittunkote in 1871, but did not press it then or since, because the desire appeared so strong to give the officers of the Dera Ghazi Khan district full opportunity of testing their plan, and to prevent any sign of hostilities on the southern portion of the Punjab Frontier.

45. Where interests and people are assimilated, or nearly so, the management in connexion with them should unquestionably be only in one person's hands. To have proper administration on the border the question should be viewed territorially, ethnologically, and philologically also. In this respect the frontier line from Peshawur to the sea is naturally, and happily divided into two distinct sections. The northern one, where Pathan tribes almost exclusively face our border. The southern, where Belooch and Brahooee, with certain Mahomedanised Rajpoots, called Sindees, are the only people we have to deal with. The first extends south as far as a little below the latitudes of Dera Ghazi Khan. The second from that point to the sea. The entire length from Peshawur to the sea would be large for the control of one man, unless he had special powers and was placed in much the same position as the Warden of the Western Marches used to hold in England, and for this a person with very special qualifications would be required. But the charge may be most safely and advantageously taken by two people in the divisions nature has given.

The first division I may leave to others better informed as to its details, so will confine myself to the second, with which I have been so long connected.

The Belooch element may be said to commence at Hurrund, some 60 miles south-west of Dera Ghazi Khan and 90 miles north-east of the Sind border near Kashmor. The Khetrans and Bozdars run north of that line it is true, but neither of these belong to the Belooch confederacy, are independent, and come within the Pathan circle. The first are really Pathan, and having a rich country are peaceably disposed, and would readily remain quiet if left alone. The latter are an offshoot of the Rhind Belooch, but have been long quite apart from the others. From Hurrund down to the sea west of Kurrachee, 490 miles, Belooch or Brahooees live on either side of the border. It has, I know, been much the habit to regard the Sind border as the small portions along the northern part from Kashmor to Khyra Ghari, but this is only an insignificant piece. The whole to the sea, over 400 miles, must be considered, and its well-being will always be matter of the first importance.

On the three grounds then mentioned by me, the bit of frontier of 90 miles from Hurrund to the present Sind boundary near Kashmor should be confined to Sind and form part of the lower division of a frontier administration.

The Belooch and Brahooee clans would then be under one management. All the important passes into the Murree and Boogtee (the real refractory tribes now) Hills would be under one and the same system of guarding, while those tribes having only one authority to look to would be more careful how they risked his displeasure, and when they misbehaved would be promptly and firmly dealt with.

The general management and control of the lower division of the frontier must, I would respectfully urge, rest in the hands of the Commissioner in Sind, or chief authority there, whoever he may be, all that passes beyond or on that frontier must materially affect matters within, and the administration of the province could not be safely conducted by two different people. It would be two men trying to drive the same team in a coach, there must be an upset sooner or later. The troops now on the frontier of Sind would be sufficient to take up the extra outposts, Khelat affairs being settled. The affairs of Beloochistan (Khelat,) &c. should also be under the same authority as they have hitherto been, and no one else should be allowed to interfere. Asiatics readily detect the existence of two systems, and quickly take advantage of them. Had I still the honour of the confidence of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General and Government, as I formerly believed I had, I would guarantee with my life the perfect success of this system, and that the line of route from Kurrachee to Quetta should become safe and regularly frequented as from Calcutta to Allahabad, and I have never yet promised a thing that I have not done.

The northern frontier from Hurrund to Khyra Ghari should be under a Political Superintendent and Commandant, as now, with sole command over the troops throughout, seeing to and being responsible for their proper disposal. The tract of country below Hurrund between the hills and the river would be transferred to Sind, and for this purpose a line drawn from Hurrund to Mittunkote, or thereabouts, would perhaps make the best territorial divisions, but that could be settled at any time, being merely a detail; if the principle was once allowed, communication with all people beyond the frontier, Belooch, Brahooee, or what, should be conducted solely through the Political Superintendent, whose position should be maintained and his influence supported as much as possible on all occasions.

Government have now on the frontier a most distinguished and most excellent officer, a man of high honourable feeling, cool courage proved in much service, and while firm in right and when duty compels him to be so, most patient and conciliatory when suitable to those brought in contact with him, while in zealous devotion to his duty and careful attention to orders given him he has always been conspicuous. It will be matter of most extreme regret to me if this frontier should lose his services just now, and that it should be because he faithfully carried out the orders he had received from me. I trust that this may not be the case, and that he may yet remain where no one could be better trusted.

No. 71.

No. 91, dated Camp Jacobabad, 22nd January 1876.

From Colonel Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I. and C.B., Commissioner in Sind, to C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 53P. of the 7th instant, and in reply to state, for the information of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, that I trust my letter of the 21st instant will have proved to his Excellency that I have only endeavoured in all true faith to carry out his Excellency's orders and instructions as given both before and in Government Resolution No. 2819 P. of the 16th October last. Reading that Resolution by the light of the orders I was carrying out, and simply according to the letter thereof, I venture respectfully to say there was nothing to lead me to believe it was the wish of his Excellency that Captain Sandeman's mission should extend beyond the Murree Hills into which he was directed to proceed, and which were a part of his recognised charge. If there was another spirit intended apart from that which such reading would convey, I confess it was quite unnoticed by me, and I can only offer the expression of my extreme regret that, not being favoured with the exact nature of his Excellency's wishes, I failed to perceive that entirely new views were entertained as is now shown to me. Had I been so favoured this unfortunate misunderstanding on my part would certainly never have occurred.

2. My instructions to Captain Sandeman were despatched to him on the 25th November, and copy of them was forwarded to you with my first report on the subject. I did not think certainly of sending copy to you at once, because they were based on the orders I had received in regard to Khelat affairs, and I never dreamed they could be other than would be in accord with the wishes of his Excellency in Council..

3. As before stated by me, the restrictions I imposed on Captain Sandeman's movements were grounded on the orders of Government, that all communications should, as far as possible, cease between British officers and the Khan of Khelat, his Sirdars, or people, and that Khelat affairs should be left strictly to themselves. I laid these restrictions the more particularly on Captain Sandeman, because I had observed a very untoward tendency on his part to engage in affairs connected with the Khelat State which were not in his charge, with which he could have no just concern, and which I knew well would be very gravely complicated if he had anything to do with them, by reason of the double action which such engagement on his part would lead the Khelat people to believe was intended. This tendency has, I regret to say, been in existence for some time and has proved very embarrassing. As far back as the autumn of 1872 endeavours were made from the Rojan division of the Rajanpur district to open direct communication between Captain Sandeman and his Highness the Khan. To what extent and in what form they have since been conducted that officer will be best able to inform Government. I only know that during the time Captain Sandeman has been under my orders, or was under those of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, no official reports were made by him to either as to his connexion in any way with the ruler or people of that State, or of his having had any communication with them. If he had, no comment I am sure is necessary from me on the indelicacy and impropriety of such a proceeding. It was, moreover, contrary to orders repeatedly given him by me. If he had not, recent events require yet a new light to be let in on them.

4. My orders to Captain Sandeman to return to his district were sent because I thought he was exceeding the powers vested in him, and I can only again express my regret that the reading of the Government Resolution of the 16th October did not convey to me that extra powers had been entrusted to him. The only communication made to me by that officer was that he was leaving for the Murree Hills; no reports of progress or diaries were ever sent by him to me, so that I was completely in the dark as to his procedure until I heard from others of his having descended into Kutchi.

5. With regard to the caution alluded to in your telegram of the 20th December, I would respectfully observe it does not tell me of Captain Sandeman having any special orders for what he was doing; and your previous telegram of the 16th December saying "policy of non-interference approved" the more assured me Captain Sandeman was overstepping bounds.

6. The country was on the verge of a civil war when Captain Sandeman appeared. It was, however, a revolution the people had been purposely left to, if they chose to enter on it; and, as I reported at the time, offered the most likely solution of existing difficulties that had yet occurred, and it certainly promised to cause the least disorder in the country. Had Nordeen Mingul's proposed movement on Khelat succeeded, which seemed very probable, and the Sarawan Sirdars managed to keep their people in Kutchi tolerably in hand, as they have done so well hitherto, a change of ruler would have been effected with a comparatively small amount of bloodshed and disturbance. The outbreak Captain Sandeman checked then would have been trifling to what will follow now (unless the British Government interferes with the strong hand, sees justice done, and order restored); and the results which have so unhappily followed his visit to Khelat cannot, I think, be too greatly deplored.

7. The enthusiastic reception described in Captain Sandeman's telegram of 1st January was merely the exhibition of hopes that he must have come with power to adjust the grievances of all. The Sirdars thought they would be righted, and the Khan, who was then in a most desperate position, caught a gleam of hope that there might be safety for him yet, and that he might get his desire over his enemies. The reaction now following the results of Captain Sandeman's visit cannot fail to be very injurious to our prestige and most damaging to the cause of order.

8. Captain Sandeman acknowledged receipt of orders to return, in letters from him dated Shalkote, 23rd and 25th December, so he had received them in good time, and it would, I cannot help saying, have been better for the peace of Beloochistan, and our future connexion with that country, had he then retraced his steps.

9. In conclusion, I can only repeat that I cannot too deeply deplore not merely having misunderstood what it seems now were the real wishes of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, but that I should have lost that trust and confidence which I had hoped I possessed, and which, had it been continued to me, placed where I was, might have led to the averting of much of what has so unfortunately occurred.

No. 72.

No. 824P., dated Fort William, 30th March 1876.

Observations.—The Governor-General in Council deems it desirable to place on record the circumstances under which it has been found necessary to relieve Sir William Merewether, the Commissioner of Sind, of the political management of the Sind and Khelat frontiers and to place the same in charge of the Commissioner of the Derajat Division of the Punjab.

2. At the time when the Resolution No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875, was issued, it had been found necessary to distinguish more clearly than had previously been done the duties and obligations of the British Government in respect to raids committed within the British frontier, and raids committed by the nominal subjects of the Khan within the territories of Khelat. The principles then laid down and the instructions issued for the guidance of the Commissioner in Sind and of the other frontier officers of the Government, may be summed up as follows:—

First.—That we should afford complete protection to the lives and property of our own subjects and suppress outrages within the Sind and Punjab frontiers by force if necessary.

Second.—That while we may reasonably expect our troops stationed in the Sind outposts to afford some protection to life and property in Khelat territory immediately adjoining the Upper Sind Frontier as far as their power can reach, we should not accept responsibility for the protection of life and property in the territories of the Khan of Khelat.

Third.—That the frontier officers of the British Government should use their influence and good offices for the promotion of peace and order and for the settlement of disputes, whether among the tribes of Khelat, or between the tribes and the people of Seebee or the Government of Khelat.

3. In pursuance of the policy thus explained, Captain (now Major) Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan, was directed to proceed into the Murree Hills in order (1) to procure all the information he could respecting local feuds and quarrels among the Murree and Boogtee tribes, or between them and the Afghans, or between them and the Brahooees; (2) to endeavour to settle amicably such quarrels; (3) to report on such quarrels as he might not be able to settle; and (4) to report on the general relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes and the Khan's Government. Captain Sandeman was also to inquire and report whether anything could be done for the protection of trade viâ the Bolan, and whether a system of fixed tolls could be arranged, the proceeds of which would go to the tribes interested in the protection of the route; and in respect to all or any of these objects Captain Sandeman was invested by the Governor-General in Council with discretion to make any arrangements he might think advisable within the total sum sanctioned at the Mittunkote Conference, viz., Rupees 66,960 a year. It was added, in paragraph 29 of the Resolution, that should the measures now authorised be successful in affording reasonable security to trade through Khelat territory, and should his Highness the Khan show an earnest desire to co-operate towards this end and to return to a proper sense of his duties, it would afford the Governor-General in Council great pleasure in receiving an expression of regret for what has occurred to restore the former subsidy and re-establish the old friendly footing between his Highness' Government.

4. Under these instructions Captain Sandeman was competent to take such steps as he might consider necessary for adjusting the quarrels between the Murrees and Boogtees, the Afghans, the Brahooees, and the Government of Khelat, and for collecting information on the subject of the general relations between the tribes and the Khan's Government, and even for opening the way for the re-establishment of friendly relations between the British Government and the Khan. The scope of Captain Sandeman's action was intentionally made wide enough to admit of the full and free exercise of his good offices and influence for the purposes above-mentioned.

5. After the Resolution of 16th October 1875 had been issued, the Governor-General in Council received a report from the Commissioner in Sind, No. 816, dated 21st October 1875, and subsequently a letter from the same officer, dated 29th October. In the former the Commissioner commented unfavourably on recent proceedings of the Khan of Khelat and severely condemned the conduct of the Murrees. In the latter he remonstrated against the policy adopted by the Government of India in respect to the Murrees, renewed his complaints of their misconduct in raiding upon Kutchee, pointed out the importance of Kutchee from a commercial aspect, and recommended that in the ensuing cold weather he should be authorised to protect Kutchee against the inroads of the Murrees. This recommendation was inconsistent with the instructions that already had been issued by the Government of India. It was received when the Governor-General was on tour, and his Excellency saw no ground for modifying those instructions.

6. The next news of importance received from the Khelat frontier was the telegram from the Commissioner in Sind, dated 13th December 1875, informing the Governor-General in Council that a revolution in Khelat was imminent, that Noordeen Mingul was the leading conspirator, and that the Sarawan Sirdars were in communication with him. The Commissioner stated his intention to avoid interference, adding that he had instructed Captain Sandeman to be most careful to avoid communication with the Brahooee Sirdars or their people, and on no account to go beyond the Murree Hills towards the Bolan, Seebee, or Kutchee. On the supposition that a revolution was about to take place the Government of India had no wish that the British officers in Sind should interfere in the crisis or interpose actively between the parties, and therefore the Commissioner was acquainted by telegram No. 3309P., dated 16th December 1875, that a policy of non-interference was approved. Nothing, however, was said to justify the supposition that his Excellency in Council had altered his views as to the action which Captain Sandeman had been authorised by the Resolution of 16th October 1875 to take.

7. The intention of the Government of India in this respect was made clear by the Foreign Secretary's telegram No. 3343P., dated 20th December 1875. The Commissioner in Sind had reported in his telegram of the 17th December that Captain Sandeman was stated to have visited Seebee and Dadur, that this was contrary to the Commissioner's orders, objectionable, and embarrassing, and that he had been ordered to return at once to his district, where the Commissioner begged he might be kept. The Commissioner was thereupon instructed, while directing Captain Sandeman not to interfere in the troubles apparently impending between the Khan and his subjects, to be careful not to interfere with Captain Sandeman's execution of the orders he had received from Government, and particularly not to be hasty in condemning his conduct before he had explained it. It was added that Captain Sandeman's movements among the Murrees should not be interfered with.

8. The Governor-General in Council had not then been made acquainted by the Commissioner in Sind with the instructions he had issued for the guidance of Captain Sandeman in consequence of the Resolution of 16th October 1875. The fact that such instructions had been issued was first reported in the endorsement from the Commissioner, No. 983, dated 17th December 1875, accompanying the Khelat Diary, No. 47, for the week ending 12th December 1875. The precise nature of the instructions has now been ascertained from the Commissioner's letter No. 13, dated 7th January 1876. From this it appears that they were dated the 21st of November 1875, and that after directing Captain Sandeman to proceed into the Murree Hills for the purposes contemplated by the Resolution, the Commissioner added—"You may possibly be able to "amicably adjust for a time some of the quarrels between the Murrees and Boogtees, "and perhaps with the Afghans, but any feuds that may be supposed, or may be stated, "to exist between the Murrees or Boogtees and Brahooee tribes should be first fully "and thoroughly reported to me before any action is attempted as regards the Brahooee "side of the question." And again—"No arrangements should be entered into with "any of the tribes to the westward of the Murree and Boogtee countries, until I have "had an opportunity of judging on the nature of your proposals." It further appears from the Commissioner's letter to Captain Sandeman, No. 917A., dated 25th November 1875, that, whereas the Government of India had directed Captain Sandeman to report upon the general relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes and the Khan's Government, the Commissioner directed that "the idea of any terms being discussed or "come to between the Khan and those tribes should not be entertained."

9. These instructions to Major Sandeman, both in their particulars, and in their whole tenor, are in the opinion of his Excellency in Council opposed both to the letter and to the spirit of the orders which were contained in the Resolution of the Government of India of the 16th of October 1875.

10. By Sir W. Merewether's telegram of 22nd December 1875, his Excellency in Council was informed that the Commissioner considered Captain Sandeman's action to be directly contrary to the policy laid down by Government and gravely insubordinate; that Captain Sandeman had not only visited Seebee and Dadur and held communication with the Brahooee Sirdars, but had sent Imam Buksh Mazaree and others with letters to the Khan; that he had entered the Bolan accompanied by the Sirdars, and that the whole of this was "most indiscreet and unbecoming, must make present relations with "Khan and Khelat affairs more embarrassing, and make all parties doubt in reality (of) "Government policy and its good faith."

11. The endorsement from the Commissioner in Sind No. 1,005, dated 22nd December 1875, on Khelat Diary No. 48, contained further expressions of strong disapproval and condemnation in reference to Captain Sandeman. His efforts to carry out the instructions of the Governor-General in Council were denounced as a direct assumption of political power which was "most unbecoming and improper." The desire of the Government of India that a policy of non-interference should be followed in a particular crisis, viz., the revolution supposed to be impending, was appealed to by the Commissioner as a ground for severe disapproval of proceedings taken by Captain Sandeman under general instructions from the Governor-General in Council. Finally, though the Commissioner had been warned by the Foreign Secretary's telegram No. 3343P., dated 20th December 1875, not to interfere with Captain Sandeman's execution of the orders he had received from Government, or with his movements among the Murrees, the Commissioner informed his Excellency in Council that instructions had been sent to Captain Sandeman to return forthwith to his own district, that is to Dehra Ghazee Khan. These orders recalling Captain Sanderman were again referred to in endorsements from the Commissioner, No. 1021, dated 27th December 1875, and No. 1036, dated 29th idem, with further remarks conveying severe animadversion on Captain Sandeman's proceedings.

12. The endeavour being made by Captain Sandeman to settle the disputes which he found to exist in Khelat seemed to be so completely in accord with the views of the Governor-General in Council that his Excellency in Council could only account for the Commissioner's reports and proceedings by supposing that he had not properly understood the instructions contained in the Resolution of the Government of India No. 2819P., dated 16th October. He was accordingly informed by the Foreign Secretary's telegram No. 39P., dated 7th January 1876, and letter No. 53P., of the same date, that the restrictions placed by him on Captain Sandeman's proceedings were not in accordance with the letter or spirit of the Resolution of 16th October; that the Governor-General in Council could see nothing in those proceedings inconsistent with Captain Sandeman's instructions, or in excess of the powers expressly vested in him by his Excellency in Council, while the Commissioner's orders to Captain Sandeman to return to his district appeared opposed to the policy and directions of his Excellency in Council as set forth in the Resolution of 16th October. It was added that under the circumstances the Governor-General in Council was reluctantly compelled, for the purpose of preventing further complications, to place Captain Sandeman while on his tour under the direct orders of the Government of India.

13. At the same time Captain Sandeman received orders by telegram No. 50P., dated 7th January 1876, to act upon the instructions of Government Resolution

No. 2819P., dated 16th October, but to be careful not to exceed them, or to interfere with questions between the British Government and the Khan of Khelat. He was told to exercise his own discretion as to his return to the Punjab, but not to protract his stay in Khelat territory. And it was arranged that his reports should be submitted to the Government of India under flying seal through the Commissioner in Sind when possible, the Commissioner in other cases being kept fully acquainted with Captain Sandeman's proceedings. Captain Sandeman during his tour was to receive instructions from the Government of India.

14. These arrangements having been completed, the Governor-General in Council received a telegram from the Commissioner in Sind, dated 9th January 1876. In this telegram the Commissioner stated that he did not understand that the duties confided to him were to be entered upon independently by a comparative stranger to the country and people; that while he (Commissioner) was carefully following a policy of non-interference, a junior officer of less experience and knowledge of the subject should come in without reference to him, actively interfere, and upset arrangements; that Captain Sandeman knew well the Commissioner's strong objection to his engaging in Khelat affairs, and should have addressed the Commissioner before doing so; that to adjust matters quickly interference must have been exerted for or against the Khan; that Government declined to interfere, and the decision to wait patiently was about to be rewarded, when Captain Sandeman's appearance spoilt all; that when the policy of non-interference was approved Captain Sandeman was then directly meddling, and, as would be approved in the end, most mischievously initiating a double policy; that if interference was intended it should have been exerted through him (Commissioner), who could point out the best time and mode, and that he (Commissioner) trusted to the result for rectification.

15. The telegram summarised in the foregoing paragraph left the Governor-General in Council no alternative but to take immediate action for securing unity of policy in the conduct of the relations of the British Government with Khelat. If the Commissioner had read rightly the orders conveyed in the Resolution of 16th October 1875, and supported Captain Sandeman, there would have been no risk of a misapprehension of the views of the Government of India, and for any misapprehension that has arisen, as indicated in the Commissioner's letter No. 13, dated 7th January 1876, and the telegram quoted in the preceding paragraph, the responsibility rests entirely with him. If the Commissioner had felt doubts regarding the proper interpretation of the orders of the 16th October, he should have asked by telegraph for instructions from the Governor-General in Council before taking upon himself to order Captain Sandeman to abandon the work entrusted to him and return to his district. Instead of the course which he actually followed he should have made known the contents of the orders of 16th October 1875 to those of the tribes with whom the Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier was in communication, and so paved the way for Captain Sandeman's negotiations.

16. As it seemed impossible to expect that the control of affairs could be satisfactorily carried on through the Commissioner in Sind, whose opinions and conduct had been found to be irreconcilable with the views expressed and the policy enjoined by the Government of India, the Governor-General in Council was compelled, with great regret and reluctance, to relieve the Commissioner in Sind from all responsibility for Khelat affairs, and to entrust the political charge of Khelat to Colonel Munro, Commissioner of the Derajat Division of the Punjab. This measure was carried into effect by the orders noted on the margin.

17. In his letters, No. 55, dated 21st January, and No. 91, dated 22nd January, the Commissioner seeks to vindicate the action taken by him, and prays to be absolved from "the grave imputation that he ever contemplated for a moment deviating in the least "from a sincere desire to carry out the orders of his Excellency or Government." The Governor-General in Council gladly accepts Sir William Merewether's disclaimer of any intention to act in deliberate opposition to the instructions of Government, but both his letters are principally directed to a recapitulation of the opinions which he had previously expressed upon Khelat affairs, and upon the mode of dealing with the Murrees. Those views had already been considered by the Government of India with all the attention Sir William Merewether's character and position entitled them to receive, but they were not approved. Nothing has now been advanced by Sir William Merewether to lead the Government of India to modify the opinion they have expressed that his manner of dealing with Major Sandeman was at variance with the instructions of the 16th of October. The difficulty of the attempt to manage the affairs of Beloochistan, partly from the Punjab and partly from Sind, has long been felt. Recent events have compelled the Government of India to transfer the responsibility for frontier affairs to Colonel Munro, an officer serving under the Punjab Government, and Sir William Merewether's duties will be confined to the civil administration of Sind.

Government of India. Foreign Department. Political. (Extract.)

To the Most Hon. the Marquis of Salisbury, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

My Lord Marquis, Fort William, 31st March 1876.

In continuation of our Despatch No. 6, dated the 14th January, we transmit, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, copy of the accompanying correspondence.*

2. On receipt of Sir William Merewether's letters, No. 55, dated 21st January, and No. 91, dated 22nd January 1876, we again reviewed the circumstances under which we were constrained to relieve that officer of all responsibility for Khelat affairs and place them in charge of Colonel Munro, Commissioner of the Derajat. We have embodied our conclusions in a Resolution, copy of which accompanies this Despatch.

3. While we readily accept Sir William Merewether's disclaimer of any desire to act in deliberate opposition to the orders of the Government, we are of opinion that he failed to carry out the instructions contained in our Resolution of the 16th of October, and that the correspondence shows that it was impossible to expect that the duty of carrying into effect the policy which we had deliberately adopted, but which was not in accord with his opinions, could with advantage be replaced in his hands.

Memorandum from Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

Has the honour herewith to submit for information copy of a murasila, despatched to his Highness the Khan of Khelat on receipt of Foreign Secretary's telegram of the 14th instant.

* Nos. 70 to 72.

2. This is the first opportunity the undersigned has had of communicating direct with the Khan, who is stated to be in anxious expectation of a reply to his letter from the Viceroy and Governor-General.

3. The announcement that a reply is to be sent in due course will tend probably to assure the Khan of the earnest nature of the attempt which is again about to be made, and it will also apprise him of Major Sandeman's second visit to the Bolan for the purpose of passing through all the caravans detained at Shikarpur. The opportunity afforded thus for fairly discovering to what extent all the contending parties are desirous of accepting our renewed offers of mediation is a good one, and Major Sandeman is sanguine of success.

Enclosure 1 in No. 74.

Translation of a letter from Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, to the address of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, dated 15th March 1876 (corresponding with 18th Saffar 1293 A. H.)

I beg to inform your Highness that owing to the disagreement of the Sirdars in the ilaqa of Khelat and consequent absence of peace in that country, I am appointed, under orders of the supreme and liberal Government of India, to witness and ascertain the state of the affairs relative to the boundaries from Derajat to Kurrachee, and have accordingly arrived at Jacobabad in order that both those boundaries may be supervised by one officer, and that Government may possess an accurate knowledge of what may occur.

I did not before this address you separately on the ground that your correspondence (with Government) was carried on through the highly exalted Major Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazi Khan, to whom your Highness delivered, on the occasion of his interview with you at Khelat, two letters, one addressed to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, and the other to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The above-named gentleman laid those letters before me, and I sent them directly to the addresses. I have been waiting for replies to those letters, being anxious to know what answer may be issued by Government. I received intelligence yesterday that a reply to your letter had been issued by the Government of India, so that it will shortly arrive here. On its arrival I will lose no time in sending it to your Highness, and you will learn from it all particulars.

I beg to add that on the occurrence of disputes between the Brahooee Sirdars, Jalawan and Sarawan, the British Government always looks to your Highness for the adoption of measures for the suppression of the disturbances and restoration of peace, and the said Government is anxiously considering whether all events which have occurred have been previously disclosed to it, truly and accurately, according to the actual facts of the case.

I beg to inform your Highness that in consequence of these disturbances and the insecurity of roads in the country of Khelat, the caravans cannot travel to and from Candahar, and a great number of merchants, whose return to their native country is absolutely necessary, have become restless, being obliged to stay here longer; and that Major Sandeman being informed of all these circumstances, and relying on the words which your Highness was pleased to express to him on the occasion of his meeting with you at Khelat, is taking along with him the caravans, accompanied by a sufficient force in order to escort them through the Bolan Pass, that they may safely reach their respective places of residence. It is very probable that the above-named gentleman will, in a courteous and friendly spirit, directly make an intimation to your Highness about his arrival in your territories, either soon after or previous to it.

I trust that your Highness will consider me as your well-wisher, and gratify me from time to time with friendly letters.

May welfare constantly attend your Highness.

No. 705P., dated Fort William, 20th March 1876.

From F. Henvey, Esq., for Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty.

My telegram of the 14th March conveyed to you the orders of the Government of India regarding the action to be taken in reference to Major Sandeman's report of his proceedings in Khelat, forwarded with your letter No. 20, dated 12th February, and the events reported in subsequent diaries and telegrams.

2. I have now the honour, by direction of his Excellency in Council, to forward, for your information and guidance, copy of a Resolution in this Department, No. 671A.-P., dated 14th March 1876, setting forth in further detail the views and orders of the Government. The letter from his Excellency the Viceroy to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, referred to in paragraph 12 of the Resolution, is sent herewith, together with a Persian translation.

3. In transmitting the above, I am to request that you will convey to Major Sandeman an expression of the satisfaction of the Government of India at the manner in which he carried out the instructions contained in this office Resolution No. 2819P. of the 16th October 1875. The acknowledgments of the Government are also due to Captain H. Wyllie and Dr. G. Thomson, who accompanied Major Sandeman.

4. The conduct of the Belooch Chiefs of the Dera Ghazi Khan District who attended with their followers is highly appreciated by his Excellency in Council, and you are authorised, in recognition of their services, to confer upon them, on his Excellency's behalf, khilluts of the value noted in the margin.

5. The services of Wali Muhammad, Subadar, and the native detachments of cavalry and infantry will be acknowledged in the Military Department.

6. With reference to paragraph 50 of your letter on the subject of office establishment, I am to request that specific proposals be submitted for the consideration of the Government of India. Meanwhile you are authorised, as a provisional arrangement, to entertain such additional office establishment as may be absolutely necessary.

No. 76.

Dated Fort William, 20th March 1876.

From his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, to his Highness Begular Begee Mir Khodadad Khan, Wali of Khelat.

I have received your Highness' letter in which you communicate your wish to remain under the protection of the British Government, and your urgent desire to offer explanations in order to prevent a severance of the friendly relations which long existed between Khelat and the British Government.

My friend! the British Government has always desired the maintenance of friendly relations with the Khelat State, and I would remind your Highness that the suspension of those relations, which has unhappily continued for nearly three years past, is the result of your Highness' own conduct.

Nevertheless, I am willing to accept your Highness' communication as evidence of regret for the past and a desire for reconciliation. I have accordingly determined to authorise Colonel Munro, the officer now in charge of Khelat affairs, to depute Major Sandeman, an officer who possesses my full confidence and with whom your Highness is already personally acquainted, for the purpose of conferring with your Highness upon the affairs of Khelat, and if possible effecting a settlement of all disputes.

I take this step in the expectation that your Highness will not fail to co-operate sincerely and heartily with Major Sandeman in the adjustment of all existing differences, whether in respect to your relations with my Government or in respect to the Chieftains and tribes of Beloochistan.

By hearkening to Major Sandeman's counsels, and acting in conformity with his advice, your Highness will afford the best proof of the sincerity of your professions, and relieve me from the necessity of taking further measures to secure the tranquillity of the British frontier and the protection of trade.

From T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Lepel Griffin, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of the Punjab.

With reference to the correspondence ending with the telegram from this office No. 679P., dated 14th of March 1876, I am directed by the Governor-General in Council to forward, for the information of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, copy of a Resolution No. 671A.-P. of the same date, setting forth the views of his Excellency in Council as to the policy which should now be followed in respect to the affairs of Khelat.

2. Copies of a letter No. 705P. of this day's date, issuing subsidiary instructions for the guidance of Colonel Munro, and of the letter from the Viceroy to the Khan of Khelat are also enclosed.

3. I am to request that the substance of the orders passed by the Governor-General in Council in reference to Khelat, and a brief statement of the object which the Government has in view, namely, the pacification of the country, may be communicated to the British Agent at Cabul, in order that he may be in a position to acquaint the Amir with the particulars of the case in the event of his Highness seeking for information.

4. A printed copy of the correspondence quoted in Resolution No. 671A.-P., dated 14th instant, is forwarded confidentially for submission to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

No. 78.

No. 707P., dated Fort William, 20th March 1876. Extract.

From T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to C. Gonne, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

In transmitting, for the information and guidance of his Excellency the Governor in Council, copy of Government of India's Resolution in this Department No. 671A.-P., dated 14th March 1876, on the subject of Khelat affairs, I have the honour, by direction of the Governor-General in Council, to call the attention of the Government of Bombay to the marginally noted extract from paragraph 52 of Colonel Munro's letter of the 12th February, and to request that, with the permission of his Excellency in Council, instructions may be issued to the Commissioner of Sind to give effect, without delay, to that officer's recommendation.

"I am given to understand that a considerable body of mounted police, consisting of certain members of reclaimed predatory tribes, some of whom were subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, as Dhoombkees, Jakranis, Khosas, and Boogtees, is maintained in the districts under the designation of 'Belooch Guides.' In so far as the duties of any of these may be connected with frontier administration not strictly military, and separate from those of internal district police, I consider that they should be freely at the disposal, or entirely under the orders of, the Political Superintendent. They must be valuable aids in maintaining communications with the trans-border tribes."

2. I am further to state, with reference to paragraph 14 of the Resolution, that the Government of India will be glad if his Excellency the Governor in Council will instruct the Commissioner of Sind to arrange that the European officers of the Sind Frontier Police be made directly subordinate to the Political Superintendent at Jacobabad (i.e., to Colonel Munro) quoad all communications with the tribes beyond the British Frontier along the whole Sind and Khelat border, and responsible for the speedy conveyance to him of all border intelligence of importance.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 21st March 1876.

16th March.—A letter was received from Shikarpur dated the 15th instant, bringing to notice "that the caravan people here are very anxious to return to their country." It further states that some of the merchants "had been put to such straits that they "had actually sold their goods to support themselves, and that their entreaties had " compelled " the writer to again address the Political Officers on the subject. It was ascertained that the caravans detained at Shikarpur and Jacobabad numbered 3,000 to 4,000 camels.

2. 20th March.—News from Seebee is to the effect that his Highness the Khan's troops were preparing to march. It was expected that they were to go to Khorassan, as it was currently stated that the Khan had ordered them there to oppose the Jalawans.

3. From the Boogtee Hills news was received that the Massuri Boogtee leader, Hyder Khan, with his son and 26 followers, had been killed in an encounter with the Zarkhan Pathans. It would appear that the Pathans attacked the Boogtees when cooking, and had thus the advantage from the first. The Boogtees were at the time on their way back from a raid into the Zarkhan Pathan country.

4. In diary for the week ending 21st February 1876 notice was taken of a letter from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan in which he stated that he could arrange that the Jalawans should join the Sarawans in the event of the British Government permitting an officer to mediate between the Brahooees and his Highness the Khan. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed was requested to write further regarding this. A letter in reply from the Sirdar to Major Sandeman has been received. In it the Sirdar sends an original letter from Sirdar Azaad Khan of Kharan to the address of the Sarawan Sirdars. The contents of this letter are as follows: That it was now necessary that there should be no division amongst the Sirdars. Both factions should become of one mind and act together. It was not possible that the Jalawans could come to Kutchi to the Sarawans, but the latter should join the former in Khorassan. They could then arrange to make a combined attack on Khelat. The writer said that if Sirdar Moolla Mahomed was in communication with the British authorities, and were it possible to arrange through them for the settlement of the dispute between his Highness the Khan and Mir Khan, Jam of Lus Beyla, and other similar cases, it was right and proper for all the Sirdars, Jalawan and Sarawan, to accept the mediation of the British authorities. Should there appear no hope of this, then the only resource left was for the combined Brahooee Sirdars to settle their affairs by fighting with his Highness the Khan.

5. 21st March.—News from Khelat is to the effect that his Highness the Khan had released the ex-Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed Khan, from prison, and had fixed for his maintenance and that of his family Rupees 60 a month and 32 maunds of atta. The ex-Wuzeer's wound was progressing favourably, and he had been allowed to go and live with his family. The story of the death of the Wuzeer's wives as given in a former diary was untrue.

6. Naib Pir Jan of Nasirabad reports that matters are perfectly quiet in Kutchi. The Brahooee Sirdars had forbidden their followers from plundering and thieving in Kutchi. His idea is that this has resulted from the fact that the news had spread everywhere of the intention of the British Government to send Major Sandeman to open the Bolan Pass to traffic. The news had created rejoicing in every household, and all now hoped that peace and quiet would be restored to Khelat. The Naib was sure that no one would more truly rejoice at getting the news than his Highness the Khan himself.

From Lepel Griffin, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I am desired to forward, for the information of the Government of India, copy, with translation of a murasila from the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor to the Khan of Khelat, in reply to the letter from his Highness which accompanied Major Sandeman's report, forwarded to your address with my letter No. 3C. of the 24th February last.

Enclosure 1 in No. 80.

Translated copy of a murasila from the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

I have received your Highness' letter in which you express your good wishes towards the British Government and myself. Your letter which accompanied it to the address of his Excellency the Governor-General of India was duly forwarded, and a reply has been despatched to you by his Excellency.

I have been gratified to hear from Major Sandeman, an officer serving under the Punjab Government, of the kind and courteous manner with which your Highness received him when he visited Khelat in November and December last. And I sincerely trust that on the occasion of the visit which he is now about to undertake to your territory in accordance with the instructions of the Government of India, he will be able to lend such support to your Highness' endeavours to give satisfaction to the Sirdars and people of your territories as may render them successful in establishing peace and prosperity, and may renew friendly relations between the British Government and your Highness.

Be assured that I am always your sincere well-wisher, and desire nothing more than the prosperity of your Highness and the Khelat State.

No. 81.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 28th March 1876.

During the past week no event of any importance has occurred either beyond the frontier, in Khelat, or on it.

2. 24th March.—The Brahooee Sirdars of Sarawan sent a letter to Major Sandeman expressing their sincere pleasure at hearing he was about to proceed to the Bolan Pass, accompanied by the return caravans, with a view to sending them in safety through the Pass. The Sirdars express their earnest desire to co-operate in this work, and will meet Major Sandeman at Dadar, or any other place he may name, on being informed of the probable date of his arrival at the place he may appoint for the meeting. They state they will bring with them the Chiefs of the Minguls, Kakars, and Murrees, but it is desirable that a meeting between Major Sandeman, the Sirdars, and Chiefs should take place before the kafilas enter the pass.

3. With regard to the Jalawan affairs, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed is of opinion that Mir Ibrahim Khan, Mir Gohur Khan, and Jam Ali will gladly join in any satisfactory arrangement for the peace of the country that Major Sandeman may propose. He (Sirdar Moolla Mahomed) since the traitorous conduct of the late Noordeen Mingul became known has avoided close contact with the Jalawan Chiefs; but, for all that, he is in a position to state that he believes they will follow his advice. He further states directly he (Sirdar Moolla Mahomed) meets Major Sandeman he will place fully before him the true position of Sarawan and Jalawan affairs. For the future the Sarawans will carefully abstain from causing further injury to the country; but their difficulties are great, as on account of their disputes with his Highness the Khan, they and their followers are debarred from entering the towns to get supplies.

4. 26th March.—Captain Wise, District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee, reports as follows:—

"The frontier continues quiet, and the only report during the week is one from Sub-Inspector Sirdar Jubbal Khan, dated 19th March, stating that Jan Muhammad Choota was trying to raise the Jamalis and others against his brother, and another from Sub-Inspector Ali Muhammad reporting that a Pathan kafila from Kurrachee with 1,000 camels and 500 men had passed safely along our frontier and through Saheb Khan Choota and Jubbal Brahooee's raj (jurisdiction). The former had given them a letter to Noordeen's brother asking a safe passage for them, but that on arrival further up country a body of Mingul Brahooees had collected to plunder them, and were following them for that purpose. The Pathans are strong in number, and are armed, and I think will be able to hold their own; but the passes are all reported to be closed, and they are likely to have to fight their way through.

" The Sirdars on the frontier in our service are still anxious regarding the course his Highness the Khan will take regarding them, as they consider he is displeased with them for keeping the frontier quiet and kafila roads open, and they look to us to speak in their behalf."

5. 27th March.—A letter was received from the Officer Commanding at Jacobabad, proposing that on account of the improved aspect of affairs on the Sind frontier, the outposts of Rojhan, Khyra-Ghurri and Digri, which had been established last year in Aprion account of " the turbulent state of the frontier," should be withdrawn.

6. 28th March.—News from Sibi is to the effect that the Sarawan Sirdar Moolla Mahomed is in the Murree Hills. It was proposed by turbulent people to raid in Kutchi. This the Sarawan Sirdars refused to permit, it having become known that Major Sandeman was soon to proceed to Dadar to endeavour to re-open the Bolan Pass to traffic. The Brahooees and Murrees are at peace together, and have remained so since it was established between the two by Major Sandeman in January last.

7. A report had been received in Seebee that his Highness the Khan's troops were preparing to march for Khorassan. It had been arranged by the Brahooees to attack them in the Bolan Pass, but this intention had now been abandoned. The Naibs had also decided to cause no further injury to the Brahooees.

8. Another account from Seebee is to the effect that the Sarawans have been reduced to great straits; that it was with much difficulty the Sirdars prevented their followers, on account of their impoverished state, from committing excesses in the country. Many of the Brahooees had returned to Khorassan for the hot months. Muhammad Said Khan, Agent to the Governor of Candahar, was still at Seebee. He had experienced much difficulty in collecting arrears of revenue from the Khajjaks.

9. 28th March.—Letters were received from the Naibs of Nasirabad, Bagh and Dadur expressing in his Highness the Khan's name their great pleasure at hearing of Major Sandeman's intended visit to the Bolan Pass with the object of re-opening it to trade. They profess their anxiety to aid in every way, and ask permission to come and meet Major Sandeman with the object of giving it.

No. 116, dated 1st April 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, Jacobabad, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of my No. 80 of 17th ultimo, I have the honour herewith to forward a letter in original (with English translation) from his Highness the Khan of Khelat in reply to my communication of which a copy was sent to you under cover of the docket above referred to.

2. It will be observed that his Highness the Khan does not appear much to appreciate Major Sandeman's opening of the Bolan Pass route to the outgoing caravans, but would prefer, if possible, their going by the much more circuitous and difficult route of the Mulla Pass, which has, until lately, to some extent been under his control.

3. The Khan's objects doubtless are that this last-named Pass, which has recently been the scene of disturbances and of the plundering of caravans, should be securely re-opened through Major Sandeman's intervention, and that his own exclusive receipt of fees should be maintained.

Enclosure 1 in No. 82.

Translation of a letter from his Highness Mir Khodadad Khan, Khan of Khelat, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, on special duty, Jacobabad, dated Khelat, 2nd Safar 1293 (=23rd March 1876).

I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter informing me of your arrival in Sind, and that you were placed by Government in charge of the Sind and Khelat frontiers. You also stated your reasons for not having written me sooner, which were that replies have not come to my letters addressed to his Excellency the Viceroy and the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, Punjab; but as these were then on their way to me, you wrote to announce the fact.

For a long period it has been the custom, when a change of British officer took place on the frontier, for the newly appointed officer to announce the event to me. I was on the look-out, therefore, for a letter from you, and am much pleased that one has come.

I consider myself as the subject of the British Government, and believe you are my friend. Your appointment to the charge of this frontier will greatly benefit myself and the public.

I note what you say about Major Sandeman's escorting the kafilas through the Bolan Pass. Major Sandeman knows my views on this point, as I personally explained them to him.

I tried to keep open the Mulla Pass, and to punish the evil-designed persons infesting it. With this object I occupied the Pass with my troops, but on account of the Brahooee (Sarawans) insurrection in Kutchi, I had to move them to Bagh. I do not think Major Sandeman should trouble himself about opening the Bolan, and escorting kafilas through that Pass. Please instruct the kafila people to proceed to Gundava and Kotri. On their arrival there I will send orders to my troops and officials to escort them through the Mulla Pass. Should the kafilas have started with their escort, I will help to ensure their safety through Khelat by aiding with my troops, and will send these to meet them.

No. 125, dated Jacobabad, 4th April 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat, on special duty, Jacobabad, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I have the honour to report that Major Sandeman marched from Jacobabad this morning in progress to the Bolan Pass; in the first place, to afford a safe passage through that defile to the numerous caravans which have lately been detained here and at Shikarpur; and, secondly, to ascertain, without further possibility of doubt, whether the Khan of Khelat and the principal Chiefs of all parties, Jalawans and Sarawans, are ready to accept his arbitration for the purposes set forth in the Government Resolution of the 16th October last.

2. I enclose copy of a letter of instructions addressed by me to Major Sandeman when handing over to him the letters from his Excellency the Viceroy and from his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab to the Khan of Khelat, with a copy of the Resolution above referred to, for his information and general guidance, and I trust that these instructions may be approved.

3. In exercise of the discretion allowed to me, I have deemed it to be advisable that the troops composing Major Sandeman's escort should be taken from both the frontier forces of the Punjab and Sind, as per marginal detail in my letter of instructions to Major Sandeman, who has also been granted the services of Captain Wylie and the surveying party which accompanied him on his last mission to Khelat.

4. Funds to the amount of Rupees 25,000 for the general purposes of the mission have been advanced to him by me, as drawn from the Shikarpur Treasury, under the sanction of the Government of India duly conveyed through the Government of Bombay.

5. For some little time past there has been a comparative cessation of hostilities in Khelat territory. Ever since the announcement that Major Sandeman would effect a safe passage through the Bolan to the caravans returning from Hindustan, the contending parties appear to have suspended hostile operations, in anxious expectation of some effective interference, and the Sarawan leaders have been in direct communication with Major Sandeman, earnestly professing their desire for a final settlement. The Khan's sentiments regarding the opening of the Bolan to the returning merchants may be judged of from his late letter to me, a copy and translation of which were forwarded to you under cover of No. 116 of 1st instant.

6. The first object, viz., the passing through the Bolan Pass of the caravans, effected, it is probable that Major Sandeman will take up a favourable position at or near Mustung for opening direct communications with the Khan of Khelat and all the Chiefs, whether Jalawan or Sarawan, with the intention of assuring himself of their readiness to accept his arbitration, and of promoting the desire of the Government of India in re-accrediting him to Khelat territory with unmistakable signs of support.

7. The selection of a favourable locality above the passes in a climate much more conducive to the health of the troops forming the escort, and all the officers attached to the mission, than any that could be fixed upon in Kutchi during the hot season now set in, cannot fail, in my opinion, to place Major Sandeman in the best possible position for thoroughly ascertaining the objects and wishes of the various contending parties in the disorganized State of Khelat.

8. Should an encouraging amount of success be secured, and his Highness the Khan of Khelat be found to exhibit that proper spirit which is contemplated by the Government of India in according to him another opportunity for re-establishing friendly relations with the British Government, matters might be put in training for a meeting in Gundava or elsewhere on the plains of Kutchi in October or November next between the Khan of Khelat and the British Commissioner. The information which will be amassed meanwhile regarding the real state of affairs throughout Khelat territory cannot fail to be most valuable. We should be able to deal with the Khan and his Sirdars on such a groundwork of accumulated facts, compared with the fictions of the past, as will effectually obviate misconception on either side, and lead to definite conclusions.

9. The hot season having already set in, an interview with the Khan of Khelat elsewhere than above the passes is precluded. The interval can be turned to very profitable account, however, in collecting information from all sides, and in dissipating long established prejudices, traceable to a vicious system, whereby interested Natives were permitted to have the leading share in complicating our past relations with Khelat, as some recent correspondence as well as certain reports now under submission, regarding the connexion between the late Political Munshi Rassul Buksh and Shahgassee Wallee Mahomed will sufficiently demonstrate.

10. Major Sandeman's further proceedings will be watched with interest. Relieved of the clogs and trammels which impeded him on his first visit to Khelat, he will be free to act within the limits prescribed for him by the Government of India, and I therefore look forward with confidence our obtaining such results, whether favourable or otherwise, from this second deputation as shall leave no room whatever for doubt as to the course to be ultimately pursued.

Enclosure 1 in No. 83.

No. 117, dated Jacobabad, 3rd April 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat, on special duty, Jacobabad, to Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

In continuation of this Office No. 94 of the 27th ultimo, I have the honour herewith to make over to you, for your special information and guidance, as in charge of the mission now about to depart towards the Bolan Pass and Khelat territory, a copy of the printed Resolution No. 671(a)P. of the Government of India, dated the 14th ultimo, which was passed with reference to the reports, as per margin, concerning your former mission to Khelat.

Major Sandeman's No. 8 of 5th February to the Commissioner.
Colonel Munro's No. 20 of 12th February to the Secretary to Government, Punjab.

2. Your particular attention is drawn to paragraphs 11 and 12 of the Resolution, and you will be specially guided by what is laid down in paragraph 12 in your further communications with his Highness the Khan of Khelat and the Sirdars of that State, whether of the Jalawan or Sarawan factions.

3. I am aware that circumstances have hitherto prevented you from forming so confident an estimate of the motives and objects of the Jalawans as your personal intercourse with the Sarawan leaders has induced. It will be all the more necessary, therefore, that you embrace the earliest and best opportunities available for making yourself acquainted with and ascertaining the real tendencies and desires of the Jalawan leaders, so that no doubt may be permitted to remain regarding those when you are submitting to me such proofs as are demanded by the Government of India of the readiness of the Khan and principal Chiefs of all parties, including Jalawans and Sarawans, to accept your arbitration in view to a settlement of the disputes which have so long rent the distracted State of Khelat, and to the re-establishment of friendly relations between his Highness the Khan of Khelat and the British Government.

4. It is unnecessary for me to impress upon you the great importance of the duties now entrusted to you. None of the impediments which clogged your progress on the first occasion will, on this your second mission, be permitted to interfere with your freedom of action.

5. You will be accompanied by a military escort of the strength noted in the margin, which has been considered by me to be sufficient both for your protection and dignity, in regard to which the Government of India are solicitous. The escort is composed of troops partly taken from the Punjab Frontier Force and partly from the Sind Frontier Garrison at Jacobabad. You have also sought for and obtained the services of Captain Wylie and his surveying party, who accompanied you on the former occasion, and his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab has consented to place the services of Captain Anderson of the 3rd Punjab Cavalry at your disposal. You have, moreover, been supplied with necessary funds, under authority of the Supreme Government, and been inspirited by what must be deemed the strongest incentive to an officer placed in your position, viz., an expression of confidence in yourself by the Government of India, zealously, yet discreetly and judiciously, to discharge the important political functions which are now entrusted to you.

Two mountain guns.
Wing—Regiment of Sind Horse, and two companies of Jacob's Rifles, from the Garrison at Jacobabad.
100 Sabres of 4th Punjab Cavalry.
Three companies of 4th Sikhs, from Punjab Frontier Force.

6. You will also have with you, under command of their tribal leaders or native officers, 150 of the Belooch Guides, maintained hitherto for police and other purposes in the Upper Sind Frontier District, and lately made over for employment in the Political Department. Some of these, Jakranis, Dhoombkees, and others who are themselves natives of Kutchi, will doubtless be of much use to you as messengers and purveyors of intelligence.

7. You will be the bearer to his Highness the Khan of Khelat of the letter from his Excellency the Viceroy, received with the Resolution of the Government of India, as also of a letter from his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab (copies and translations of which are forwarded for your information), in reply to the communications which his Highness addressed through you to these high authorities.

8. Should an opportunity offer itself to you for presenting the letters in person, you will doubtless do so in the most appropriate manner, paying due respect to these communications by such ceremonious display as the means at your disposal will admit of.

9. Should circumstances necessitate your transmitting the letters referred to by the hands of another person, you will be particular in the selection of the bearer, and cause the presentation to be made with such outward signs of ceremony and respect as the occasion will demand.

10. With these preliminary instructions as to the conduct of your proceedings, I make over to you the letters for his Highness the Khan. Your first concern will be to effect a safe passage to the congregated caravans proceeding in the wake of your party, through the Bolan Pass, and you will be good enough to report how this has been effected. That duty accomplished, you will possibly take up a suitable position above the passes for prosecuting the main objects of your deputation on this important service, bearing in mind, when doing so, the necessities and wants of the troops composing your escort in all respects, whilst the protection of the people of the Khelat State from even the smallest exactions or oppressive acts of any kind at the hands of your escort or camp followers, must be with you a paramount duty.

11. I have arranged that the officer commanding the escort shall not be senior to you in military rank; and although it is not intended that you should in any way interfere with the strictly military duties of officers commanding the whole or portions of the escort, you will understand that the precaution which I have taken in this matter is intended to leave you unfettered as the officer at the head of the expedition, and primarily responsible, should any cause for exceptional action on your part arise.

No. 84.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 4th April 1876.

1st April.—Nothing of great importance has occurred during the week. The Brahooee Sirdars are watching events and are encamped with their followers in the Murree Hills, to the right of the Bolan Pass.

2. A news-letter from Dadar states as follows:—The true number of men killed in the late fight on the side of the Khan, as well as on the side of the Brahooee Sirdars, has not been correctly reported. The writer hears that Major Sandeman is shortly to be at Dadar, and will on his arrival give him a correct account of the affair. This he prefers to do to writing it. News has reached Dadar from Khelat that his Highness the Khan and the Commandant of the Khelat Garrison have had a bitter quarrel. The Khan told Sirdar Mosun to give up the plunder taken from the ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed's house. The Commandant, in reply, said that it was quite impossible to recover it from the sepoys; moreover, such an order if issued by the Khan would be very unpopular, and consequently it was impolitic to give it. The result of this dispute is that there is no confidence now between the Khan and his troops. The Commandant has removed his family from Khelat to Mustung.

3. The Khan is greatly disappointed at the result of the late fight with the Brahooees. He has written very severely to his Naibs of Dadar and Bagh, saying they allow the Brahooees to plunder the country, and do not use the troops for its protection. He has severely taken the Naibs to task, and directed them to at once attack the Brahooees, and punish them for the Barshori and Kasim Shah-ki-jok affairs. It appears that the Naibs reported that in the late fight the Khan's troops were victorious; but his Highness having received a true account of the affair from another source is greatly angered against Naib Faiz Muhammad of Dadar for not having fought better, as the attack on the Sirdars had been directed by him and by his advice.

4. It is rumoured that there has been a fight in Lus Beyla between Jam Ali and the Jamotes, in which the latter were victorious. The Jalawans are at present in the Palari Hills, and state they intend, as the season advances, to again commence plundering in Khorassan.

5. 3rd April.—The Barozai Chief of Seebee, Sirdar Sher Zaman, has written to say that the Khan's Naibs of Dadar and Bagh threaten to attack him with the Khan's troops and guns if he does not turn out of Seebee Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's family, who are residing there. This Sher Zaman says he has no power to do, as Sirdar Moolla Mahomed resides in Seebee by permission of the Amir. This statement is true, for Sirdar Moolla Mahomed showed Major Sandeman when lately at Seebee an order of the Amir allowing him to reside in Seebee. Very lately letters were accidentally brought to Major Sandeman addressed to Sirdar Moolla Mohamed from the Amir of Cabul and Syud Nur Muhammad Shah.* The statement of Sirdar Sher Zaman, as given above, is declared by the Khan's Naib Pir Jan not to be true. He says the Khan's order to the troops was to attack the Sirdars in the Murree Hills, but no order was given to attaek Sher Zaman in Seebee.

* Sirdar Moolla Mahomed told Major Sandeman that the Amir said he w uld authoritatively settle the Sirdar's dispute with that kingdom were it not for fear of the British.

6. A letter from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed states that he and his confederates are most anxious to preserve the peace of the country. That after much trouble they have entirely put a stop to plundering. The Sirdar states that he will join Major Sandeman with the Bolan and Murree Chiefs, including the Mingul and Dumar-Kakar Pathan Sirdars, directly he arrives at Dadar. He states that the Brahooees are badly off for supplies; hence it has been with great difficulty that plundering has been entirely put a stop to.

7. 4th April.—Major Sandeman and escort, composed of one wing 3rd Sind Horse, 100 sabres 4th Punjab Cavalry, two companies Jacob's Rifles, three companies 4th Sikh Infantry, and two mountain guns, arrived on the 4th instant at Rojhan, 10 miles from Jacobabad, in Khelat territory. The Khan's Naib, of Nasirabad, by his Highness the Khan's orders, accompanies Major Sandeman. The Naibs of Bagh and Dadar and Naib Abdul Latif, of Shawlkot (Quetta), have written to ask permission to visit Major Sandeman in camp to pay their respects.

8. At Rojhan a caravan, composed of 1,500† camels and donkeys, is encamped. Many respectable merchants are with it, and their numerous tents are pitched alongside their merchandise. They came directly from Kurrachee. The kafila-bashis were loud in their expressions of gratitude at permission having been given them to follow with their caravan one march in rear of the escort. They said that the benefit to all merchants on account of the re-opening the Bolan Pass to traffic is very great. They expressed this in the strongest language and most demonstrative way, their happy and expressive faces and gestures testifying to the truth of what they said and evidently felt.

† Besides this large kafila, there are two others en route from Shikarpur. It is estimated that 4,000 to 5,000 baggage animals and 6,000 to 7,000 persons are waiting a passage through the Bolan Pass. —R. G. S.

Major Sandeman halted at Rojhan to enable the baggage camels of the escort to be thoroughly examined, as many of them were reported unfit for a long march. This was absolutely necessary, as the next march is across the desert, a distance of 32 miles. The escort marches this evening at 6 p.m. The nights are still pleasantly cool; days rather warm.

From Lepel Griffin, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I am desired to forward copy of a letter addressed to the Commissioner of Peshawur, No. 5, dated 25th ultimo, communicating the substance of the orders passed by the Governor-General in Council with reference to the affairs of the Khelat State, together with copy of letter (and English translation thereof) addressed by the Commissioner of Peshawur to the Native Agent at Cabul.

Enclosure 1 in No. 85.

No. 5, dated 25th March 1876.

From Lepel Griffin, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, to Colonel Sir F. R. Pollock, K.C.S.I., Commissioner and Superintendent, Peshawur Division.

I am directed by the Lieutenant-Governor, in accordance with the instructions of the Supreme Government, to forward to you a statement of the substance of the orders passed by the Governor-General in Council with reference to the affairs of the Khelat State, together with a brief statement of the object which the Government has in view in the action now taken by them with a view to your communicating the same to the British Agent at Cabul, in order that he may be in a position to acquaint the Amir with the particulars of the case, in the event of his Highness seeking information.

2. The policy of the Government of India with reference to the Khelat State as laid down by them in the month of October last, and in accordance with which Major Sandeman was deputed to the Murree Hills, was to use the influence and good offices of frontier officers to promote peace and good order, and to settle disputes, whether among the tribes or between the tribes and the people of Seebee or the Government of the Khan, although the responsibility for the good government of the country and the maintenance of order was not held to devolve upon the British Government.

3. Major Sandeman's mission into the Murree Hills in November 1875 was with the object of obtaining all the information in his power regarding local feuds and quarrels among the Murree and Boogtee tribes, between them and the Afghans, or between them and the Brahooees; to endeavour as far as possible to bring about an amicable settlement of these quarrels; to report for the information of Government his views of such as he was unable to settle, and to furnish Government with a further report on the relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes with his Highness the Khan. Major Sandeman was further to inquire and report regarding the measures which might with the greatest advantage be adopted for the protection of the Bolan trade route and the safety of caravans.

4. Major Sandeman was unsuccessful in settling the disputes between the Murrees and Boogtees and the Brahooees, but the result of his mission showed that all parties in Khelat were desirous of availing themselves of the mediation of the British Government. By all parties the British officer was received with the greatest friendliness and respect; and although since Major Sandeman's departure from Khelat occurrences have taken place, and notably the death of Noordeen, the Chief of the Minguls, to disturb any new feeling of confidence between the Khan and his Chiefs, still his Excellency the Governor-General in Council has not considered that these occurrences are of such a nature as to forbid the hope that Major Sandeman may be able under more favourable conditions to bring to a successful termination the disputes which have reduced Khelat to a state of anarchy.

5. The Viceroy has accordingly, placing the political charge of Khelat affairs under Colonel Munro, the Commissioner of the Derajat Division of the Punjab, authorised Major Sandeman, with an escort sufficient for his protection and dignity, to meet his Highness the Khan and his Sirdars at Kutchi or elsewhere, as may be convenient, and make a renewed attempt to carry out the objects of the Government as before stated in this letter; that is to say, to make a general settlement of the differences of the tribes between themselves and between them and the Khan; and further, should his Highness show a desire to act sincerely in furthering the policy which the Government of India have approved, to re-establish friendly relations between him and the British Government.

Enclosure 2 in No. 85.

Extract from Translated Copy of a Letter, dated 29th March 1876, from the Commissioner and Superintendent, Peshawur Division, to the British Agent at Cabul.

I have to inform you that I have received to-day a letter, dated 25th March 1876, addressed to me by the Secretary to the Punjab Government by direction of the Government of India, containing the substance of the previous orders passed by the Governor-General of India with reference to the affairs of the Khelat State, together with a brief statement of the object which the Government has in view on the action now taken by them, in order that you may be in a position to acquaint the Amir with the particulars of the case in the event of his Highness seeking for information. The object of the Government of India with reference to the Khelat affairs as explained by them in the month of October last, and in accordance with which Major Sandeman was deputed to the Murree Hills, was to use the influence and good offices of frontier officers to promote peace and good order, and to settle disputes, whether among the tribes or between the tribes and the people of Seebee or the Khan of Khelat, although the responsibility for the good government of the country and the maintenance of peace and order did not lie on the British Government. Major Sandeman was sent to the Murri Hills in November 1875 with the object of obtaining all possible information as regards local feuds and quarrels among the Murree and Boogtee tribes, between them and the Afghans, or between them and the Brahooees; to endeavour as far as possible to settle these quarrels himself; to report for the information of Government his views of such as he was unable to settle, and to furnish Government with a further report on the relations between the Murree and Boogtee tribes, and between them and the Khan. Major Sandeman was further requested to report regarding the best measures which might be adopted for the protection of the Bolan trade route and the safety of caravans. Major Sandeman did not succeed in settling the disputes between the Murris and Bugtis and the Brahooees, but the result of his mission showed that all parties in Khelat were desirous of availing themselves of the mediation of the British Government, and by all parties the British officer was received with friendly feelings and the greatest respect; and although since Major Sandeman's departure from Khelat there have been occurrences, especially the death of Noordeen Mingul, which affects the new feeling of confidence between the Khan and his Sirdars, still his Excellency the Governor-General in Council has not considered these occurrences of such a nature as to forbid the hope that Major Sandeman may be able, under more favourable circumstances, to bring to a successful termination the disputes which have reduced Khelat to a state of anarchy. The Viceroy has accordingly placed the political charge of Khelat affairs under Colonel Munro, the Commissioner of Derajat Division of the Punjab, and authorised Major Sandeman, with an escort sufficient for his protection and dignity, to meet his Highness the Khan and his officials at Kutchi or elsewhere, as may be convenient, and make a renewed attempt to carry out the objects of the Government as detailed above; that is to say, to make a general settlement of the differences of the tribes between themselves and between them and the Khan; and further, should his Highness show a desire to act sincerely in furthering the policy which the Government of India have approved, to re-establish friendly relations between him and the British Government.

With the above-mentioned view I have written these accounts for your information.

No. 86.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 14th April 1876.

7th April.—Major Sandeman and escort marched into Makhan Beyla, and here the Khan of Khelat's Naibs of Shawlkot and Bagh met Major Sandeman. The Naibs stated they had orders from his Highness the Khan to attend on the mission, and to render willing aid in the escort of the kafilas. Fifty Pathan sowars of his Highness the Khan were placed by his order in attendance on Naib Pir Jan.

The line of march from Kunda to Makhan Beyla passed by the villages of Manju, Kushal, Waji, and Marorpur. The lands of these villages were said to be very rich, and to be highly cultivated. The zemindar had merely to irrigate the land and throw the seed on the surface and a good crop was certain. Ploughing was unnecessary. Near to Makhan Beyla is Jhok Kasim Shah which had recently been plundered by the Brahooees.

In the evening a Durbar was held by Major Sandeman, at which the Naibs of Bagh and Shawlkot were present. The orders of his Highness the Khan to these Naibs and to the Wakil Pir Jan to render the mission every assistance were read out by Pir Jan. The Brahooee Chief, Samandar Khan Lehri, attended the Durbar.

2. 8th April.—Marched to Bagh, distant 20 miles. About 5 miles from Bagh Major Sandeman, in accordance with previous arrangements, was met by the Commandant Fakir Muhammad of his Highness the Khan's troops. The Commandant informed Major Sandeman that his Highness the Khan's troops, numbering 800 horse and foot, were drawn up outside Bagh, and were prepared to receive Major Sandeman, who at once rode and inspected the troops.

The escort, on approaching his Highness' troops, was brought to attention, and the latter, who were accompanied by two bands of music, saluted it in passing. In the afternoon a Durbar was held, and at it the state of affairs in the country was fully discussed.

The town of Bagh is the capital of Kutch Gundava, and was at one time considered a place of considerable importance. It now contains 300 shops, managed by Hindus, and 1,200 families. During the reign of the great Nusseer Khan the Naib of Bagh was Governor of the country as far as Harrand in the Punjab. The Harrand Dajil ilaqua was then included in his Naibship. Free intercourse and considerable commerce then existed between the people of Bagh and that portion of the Punjab known as "Harrand Dajil." The books of the Bagh and Dadar merchants still in existence prove this. Major Sandeman recently traversed the road from Lehri viâ Boogtee Dera to Harrand Dajil, and it is perfectly open and easy. Lehri from Bagh is distant about 15 miles, the road being open and straight, and directly across the plain of Kutchi. In Bagh itself his Highness the Khan of Khelat has generally a garrison of his regular troops. Were peace established in Kutchi, the prosperity of this place is capable of great development. It is situated on the Nari River; the lands are first class, and here and in its neighbourhood the famous "Bagh-Nari" bullocks are bred.

3. 10th April.—The mission marched for Haji-ka-Shahr, distant about 15 miles. The previous evening a water-carrier had been taken ill with what appeared to be cholera, and died this morning. Inquiries were at once instituted as to whether the disease was in the neighbourhood or not; but, even on the spot, so apathetic are the Natives regarding affairs of this kind, that it was difficult to get reliable information. A late Munshi of the Political Superintendent's Office, Jacobabad, paid his respects to Major Sandeman, and on that officer asking him if there had been cholera lately in Bagh, he said did not know for certain, but that a good deal of sickness had existed some weeks previously. On arrival at Haji-ka-Shahr the fact of cholera having broken out amongst the troops was placed beyond a question. A special report regarding this has been submitted.

No further cases of cholera have occurred in camp. The disease is believed to be over. The sick are doing fairly well. Already many are convalescent.—R. G. S. 16.4.76.

4. 11th April.—Mission marched to Pir, a village situated at the entrance to the Bolan Pass. Here the Khan of Khelat's Naib of Mustung met Major Sandeman, informing him that he had orders from his Highness the Khan to render every aid. A party of Brahooee horsemen from the Brahooee Sirdars also joined Major Sandeman's camp.

5. 12th April.—Mission marched 22 miles to Kirta, inside the Bolan Pass. Kirta is a deserted village, which was lately destroyed by the Murrees. The reason for their so acting is connected with the quarrel between his Highness the Khan and his Sirdars. A detailed account of this would take up too much space to admit of its being recorded here. Kirta occupies a very important position in the Pass. It commands the entrances to the Murree country from the Bolan, and covers Bibi Nani. To protect this portion of the Pass from Murree inroads his Highness the Khan used to garrison Kirta with 500 regular troops. This day was devoted to arranging for the escort of the kafilas through the Pass, as cholera had rendered it quite impossible for the troops to do this, excepting at great risk. It had been ascertained that cholera had broken out amongst the kafila people, rendering it doubly desirable that the troops should be separated from them as much as possible. The task was, however, no easy one, as a panic seemed to have seized our own Belooch and Chiefs. Several of the former at once started for their homes.

6. 13th April.—The Brahooee Sirdars of Sarawan (accompanied by messengers from the Jalawans), Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, Alladina Koord, Shadi Khan, Bungulzai, Said Khan, Shawani, with 500 sowars, to-day joined Major Sandeman. They were at once associated with Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, and Jamal Khan, Lughari, in the protection of the kafilas. The Jakrani guides and Murree and Boogtee sowars also aided in escorting the kafilas. These arrangements having been completed, the caravans numbering 4,000 camels more or less, and an innumerable number of donkeys and animals of all sorts, were allowed to move to Bibi Nani. Major Sandeman went to Bibi Nani from Kirta to meet the Chiefs and superintend matters. The only apparent danger to be met with was what might result from a quarrel breaking out between the Belooch and Afghan merchants. The former numbered about 1,000; the latter about 6,000. The merchants made the appearance of the cholera an excuse for not paying their transit dues, saying it would take a fortnight to do this according to custom, as the property they had with them amounted to a very large sum. It was finally arranged that the amount due should be settled by estimate and the proper sum taken by the Naib of Shawlkot (Quetta) on the caravans arriving there.

7. 14th April.—Major Sandeman, escorted by the Sind Horse and Punjab Cavalry, went again this day to Babi Nani. The Cavalry were taken as much for change of air as to show the merchants that Major Sandeman was determined they were to behave and pay the transit dues to the officials appointed to receive them. It may be here noted that never before were such large caravans collected together. The merchants alone numbered, as said above, over 6,000 souls, and the kafilas, according to the estimate given by the merchants themselves, valued from 6 to 7 lakhs of rupees. It has, in considering this, to be remembered that the Bolan Pass has been closed to traffic for the last three years. All passed off well. The merchants to-day were perfectly reasonable, and paid up at once. The caravans started about 3 in the afternoon for the head of the Pass, the Brahooee and Belooch Sirdars with their followers alone escorting them.

A consultation was held by Major Sandeman with the Belooch and Brahooee Sirdars, with the object of arranging for the future protection of the Bolan Pass from inroads by robbers; also, to prevent the Murree clan from raiding during this hot weather into Kutchi, or until permanent arrangements can be come to in concert and communication with his Highness the Khan for the protection of the Pass and Kutchi. The result of the deliberations then come to will be communicated in next week's diary.

A letter from Major Sandeman to his Highness the Khan was despatched to-day.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 21st April 1876.

In last week's diary intimation was given that on account of cholera having appeared amongst the kafila people, the transit dues would be levied by estimate. In pursuance of this, a uniform rate of Rupees 3 per camel-load and Rupee 1-8 per donkey-load was levied. The kafilas were then allowed to start up the Pass, escorted by the Brahooee and Belooch Sirdars and their followers. The merchandise of which the caravan was composed consisted of cloth, metals, sugar, and indigo. Sirdars Imam Baksh Khan and Jamal Khan, with the Belooch guides, were directed not to return to the camp after the arrival of the caravans at Quetta, but to go to Mustung and remain there until further orders. This order was given as a precautionary measure on account of the outbreak of cholera.

2. 16th April.—Dr. Duke rejoined the camp from Pir. Cholera had nearly disappeared, and the account given of the cases left at Pir was very hopeful. Asad Khan, eldest son of Sirdar Mulla Muhammad, and Sirdar Alladina Kurd arrived in camp, with 50 sowars, to remain in attendance on the mission. Jemadar Mannu Khan Brahui, with 10 sowars, was this day despatched to Kahan, to aid the Murree Chief in preventing inroads on Kutchi during the hot months.

Intimation of this arrangement was sent through Pir Jan, the Khan of Khelat's Wakil in attendance on the mission, to the Naibs of the Khan stationed in Kutchi. A report was received that the late Wazeer Atta Mahomed Khan with his two sons had fled from Khelat to Kharan. His wives and the rest of his family had remained in Khelat. The flight of the ex-Wuzeer was believed to be the result of treachery.

3. 17th April. No fresh case of cholera reported. Kenchi Khan, Chief of the Mazarani or Bolan Pass Murrees, arrived in camp; reported Sherdil, the other Chief of this section of the Murrees, to be ill, and unable in consequence to come to camp. The Mazarani Murrees are at present residing on the Dusht plain with the Brahooee Koords. A letter was received from Muhammad Hussein from Bagh that the Khan of Khelat's troops stationed there were on the point of starting for Khelat when an order came from his Highness the Khan directing them to stand fast. The weather was hot, and the Commandant of the infantry and Ressaldar of the cavalry had gone into the town to live. There was no sickness at Bagh either amongst the troops or people.

4. 18th April.—No fresh case of cholera reported to-day. In the afternoon his Highness the Khan's Wakil Pir Jan waited on Major Sandeman and asked permission to read two letters he had just received from his Highness. He said it was his Highness' wish that the contents of the letters should be made known to Major Sandeman, who at once gave Pir Jan permission to read them. Their contents were as follows:—His Highness wrote that he was most anxious for the friendship of the British, whose greatness he fully respected and admitted. He earnestly desired a meeting with Major Sandeman, who ought to come to Khelat for the purpose. The Commissioner, Colonel Munro, had informed his Highness of Major Sandeman's mission to Khelat territory. The Commissioner had written to his Highness to say that Major Sandeman, on his arrival in Khelat territory would write to him, but up to date no letter had been received by his Highness from Major Sandeman. It was his Highness' intention on hearing from Major Sandeman to invite him to come to Khelat.

Pir Jan was directed in the letter to inform his Highness of all that went on in Major Sandeman's camp, who the Sirdars and Chiefs were who joined the camp, &c. He was also to inform Major Sandeman that his Highness had directed his troops to cease from injuring the Brahooee Sirdars or their people. His Highness had directed his Naibs and Jah-Nashins to render Major Sandeman every assistance and to obey his orders. Wakil Pir Jan then read a letter from his father stating that the flight of the ex-Wuzeer was true. He had gone off with his two sons, and he (the writer) at the time was security to the Khan that this should not occur. Pir Jan's father expressed great anxiety at what had occurred.

5. 19th April.—No fresh case of cholera. The disease has clearly left the troops. The convalescents from Pir and Haji-ka-Shahr had all arrived, with the exception of six, who were still at Pir, for want of carriage to bring them on. A Jemadar was sent with camels and kajawahs to bring them into camp. The doctors reported the convalescents generally to be in a highly satisfactory state. On account of the heat (thermometer in tents in the daytime 114°), and with the object of obtaining a change of air for the escort, it was decided that the main body should march for Abigam, 20 miles higher up the Pass, at an elevation of 3,500 feet above the level of the sea. The convalescents were to be escorted by Captain Scott, who was left for the present with a first class Native doctor at Kirta and three companies of Punjab infantry, 25 Mazarani (Bolan) Murree footmen, and Sirdar Alladina Koord, with some Brahooees. Captain Scott received orders to rejoin the camp with all the convalescents on the 23rd. The Murree Chief of Kott-Mundai was sent for to camp with a view to settling his quarrel with the people of the village of Kirta, now deserted on account of it. They entreated Major Sandeman to do this, saying it only required some one to get in the Murree Chief, who was quite willing to settle with them, when they would be able to return to their village and to the cultivation of their lands. The Brahooee Sirdars, it is believed, will be able to arrange amicably this quarrel.

6. 20th April.—The escort, with the exception of the troops named above, marched to-day to Abigam, 20 miles. On arrival a report was received from the Brahooee and Belooch Sirdars intimating the safe arrival of the caravans at Quetta. The weather is much cooler than at Kirta. It is believed that the health of the troops composing the escort will greatly benefit by the change.

7. 21st April.—The mission halted to-day. Reports were received from Dadar and Bagh from the Naibs stationed there that they had received notice of the arrangements made for the protection of Kutchi during the hot months from Murree inroads, and that they would actively co-operate in putting them in force. All notices of intended raids by Murrees received from Jemadar Mannu Khan would be at once attended to, and every precaution taken to be prepared for them.

No. 173P., dated 3rd May 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I have the honour to submit copy of a letter (No. 92 of 21st ultimo) from Major Sandeman, giving details of his measures for securing a safe passage through the Bolan Pass to the caravans which accompanied him from Sind, and announcing the result as entirely successful.

2. The hearty co-operation of the Brahooee and Belooch Chiefs at a time when cholera had shown itself both amongst the troops composing Major Sandeman's escort and the numerous body of caravan people is a gratifying feature, and it is satisfactory to find that the epidemic had disappeared from both camps some days before the report was written.

3. Major Sandeman's arrangements for keeping the Bolan Pass open, and maintaining his own communications with Upper Sind undisturbed, are confessedly temporary, but they appear to be well calculated to secure the object in view.

P.S.—A letter to your address from Ressaldar Daud Khan, the Candahar news-writer, received with Major Sandeman's letter, is enclosed.

Enclosure 1 in No. 88.

No. 92, dated Camp Abigam, Bolan Pass, 21st April 1876.

From Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty.

I have the satisfaction to report that the large caravans numbering 4,318 camels, 520 donkeys, and valued, when taking transit dues, at Rs. 5,66,000, arrived safely at Shawlkot (Quetta) on the 17th instant, escorted by the Sarawan and Belooch Sirdars and their followers as per margin. From thence they started on the 19th instant for Candahar. As already reported, I was obliged, on account of the severe visitation of cholera, which very unexpectedly attacked my escort, to entrust the entire duty of escorting these very large and valuable caravans through the Pass to the Belooch and Brahooee Sirdars named above.

Sirdars Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, Shadi Khan, Bungulzai, Yar Muhammad, son of Alladina Koord, Junda Khan, Shawani, and Said Khan, Muhammadshahi, with 300 horsemen. Sirdar Imam Buksh, Mazari, with 30 horsemen. Sirdar Jamal Khan, Lughari, with 30 horsemen. Jakrani guides, numbering 120 horsemen. Shadi Khan, Boogtee Duffadar, with 8 Boogtee sowars. Duffadar Jalla Khan, with 8 Murree horsemen.

2. The willing way in which the Brahooee and Bolan Chiefs agreed to aid our own Belooch Sirdars in securing the safety of the route through the Pass was very marked. When undertaking the duty they showed a most excellent spirit, which was all the more conspicuous because of its having been accepted during a time of difficulty and danger; for the Chiefs themselves were more or less greatly depressed at the outbreak of cholera, it having also appeared amongst the kafila people. It was not, however, so severe with them as amongst the troops. I am informed by those in charge of the caravans that out of the large numbers of people, numbering in all about 6,000 souls, only from 45 to 50 fatal cases occurred. Amongst the troops and camp followers, numbering from 1,800* to 2,000 souls, about 67 fatal cases occurred out of 137 seizures. These figures are given approximately.

Camp-followers with escort	-	584
Police with stores -	-	21
Belooch	-	290
Total	-	1,803

3. I have taken advantage of the excellent spirit exhibited on this occasion by the Bolan and Brahooee Chiefs to arrange to put in force tentatively the provisions of section 27 of the Government of India Resolution No. 2819P. of the 16th October last, and hope soon to have settled with the Chiefs and Sirdars of the Bolan Pass to re-open the Pass to traffic under their protection. I am also arranging, in as far as is at present possible, to secure the plains of Kutch Gundava from Murree inroads.

4. The Murree clan, as you are aware, are Sarawans, and in some degree they acknowledge the Raisani Sirdar, Moolla Mahomed, as their feudal Chief. I have placed him for the present in charge of the Pass arrangements, and he and the other Brahooee Sirdars have written a joint letter to Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan, warning him for the future not to raid on Kutchi, and a Jemadar and 10 Brahooee sowars, with Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan's consent, have been placed on duty at Kahan, the Murree head-quarters. These are, in addition to the Murree sowars, in my employ there. Their duty will be to aid Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan, should he show a willingness to join in the protection of Kutchi, to start off horsemen to warn the Khan of Khelat's Naib's stationed there of any collection of the Murree clan made with a view of committing a raid into Kutchi. This is only a temporary arrangement entered into until I can find the opportunity of settling the Murree clan's affairs in concert and communication with his Highness the Khan of Khelat. The Sarawan Sirdars coming forward in so marked a way, however, and speaking so plainly to the Murree clan, is politically at the present time of great value. It not only tests the sincerity of their desire for peace, but it actually places them on the side of order, for the Brahooee tribes combined, were they at peace with the Khelat Government, have the power to protect Kutchi and the trade routes from Murree inroads. This fact the Murree clan themselves fully admit. When his Highness the Khan of Khelat coerced the Murree clan in 1858, his army almost entirely consisted of the Brahooee clan and a few Belooch.

5. In order to keep open the Bolan Pass in the way described above, I am arranging through the Sirdars and Chiefs to place at the deserted village of Kirta (in the Bolan Pass) 5 Brahooee sowars and 15 Murree footmen. At the Sari Bolan (head of the Pass) the Bolan Chiefs are to place on duty there 15 Mazarani Murree, 15 Mingul (Brahooee), 15 Koord, and 15 Dumar-Kakar Pathan footmen. These arrangements when completed will be, as said, merely tentative. Permanent arrangements will be made hereafter, and I see every reason to hope that I shall be able to induce his Highness the Khan to cordially aid me in making them.

6. A reference to this Office No. 8 of the 5th February last will show that when I was lately in Khelat his Highness was perfectly agreeable to my making, of my own accord, arrangements for the safety of the Pass. The action now taken in the present position of affairs was necessary to enable me to keep open my communications with Jacobabad. I may point here to one excellent result of my intercourse direct with the Bolan Chiefs and tribes, viz., that I have already been able to settle the disputes between the Minguls (Brahooee) and Murree tribe, through their Chiefs, to which disputes the unsafe state of the Pass was of late years to some extent due.

7. During our stay in the Pass, so safe has its transit been, that in marching to this from Kirta I was able to send on ahead the tents and heavy baggage of the escort, to the great convenience of the troops composing it. I may add that I have now been eight days in the Bolan under circumstances which rendered the co-operation and friendship of the tribes in securing a passage through it of the greatest importance. I have felt perfect confidence in their friendship, and have allowed in consequence the baggage animals to graze undisturbed all over the hills, and not an animal has been reported to me as missing. Our postal communications have been kept open and entirely uninterrupted.

8. These circumstances will of themselves demonstrate the excellent spirit with which the Brahooee Sirdars and tribes have hailed my advent amongst them. Verbally all have assured me of their desire to be guided by me in arranging their present differences with his Highness the Khan of Khelat's Government.

9. I have halted here for the present to allow of arrangements to be made to bring the cholera convalescents, of whom there are a good number, to this from Kirta. To-day's accounts state they are all doing very well. On account of the want of carriage we could not all march together. In a very few days they will have joined us, when we march for Siriab in the valley of Shawl. I may notice here that subsequent inquiries have proved the report of cholera being at Shawlkot to be unfounded.

Directly I receive Dr. Duke's report of the cholera outbreak, as promised by him, I will submit a letter in continuation of this Office No. 88, dated 12th instant, showing the progress of the disease, its termination and results to those it attacked. I am, however, very happy to be in a position to state that our forced marches on "Kirta" had the desired effect, cholera having entirely disappeared four days after our arrival there. The diminished severity of the few cases admitted into hospital during the four days after our arrival showed that the entire change from the plains of Kutchi to the hill air of the Bolan Pass was attended with the result hoped for by me when I, in consultation with Captain Newberry and the medical officers, decided on, if possible, gaining it before halting to battle with the disease.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 28th April 1876.

2nd April.—The mission halted at Abigam in the Bolan Pass. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, after having seen the returning caravans in safety to Quetta, rejoined the camp. The Sirdar brought news of the flight of the ex-Wazir Atta Mahomed Khan from Khelat.

2. 23rd April.—The Mingul headmen, Haibat Khan, Kotub Khan, Rawat Khan, Russel Khan, and Malik Rahim, with 26 horsemen and 276 footmen, arrived in camp to pay their respects to Major Sandeman. The Dumar-Kakar Chiefs Bahawal and Dinan, with 65 footmen, also arrived in camp with the same object.

Major Sandeman was anxious for the mission to-day to continue its march through the Pass, but this was found not to be feasible, as some of the cholera patients were too weak to bear moving from Kirta. The mission therefore halted.

3. 24th April. To-day a Durbar was held, at which the representatives of all the Bolan tribes were present. All expressed their desire to keep open the Pass to trade and their ability to do so, were the quarrel between the Sirdars and his Highness the Khan once arranged.

The Dumar-Kakars occupy the hills to the right of Shawlkot (Quetta), and number about 400 fighting men. They are intermarried with the Koord Brahooees, who live on the Dasht-ba-Daulat and the Maro plain. The Mingul Brahooees number about 2,000 fighting men, and are entirely subordinate to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. The result of the conference left no room for doubt as to the anxiety of the tribes to keep open the Pass. But on account of the positions held by the Khan's troops at Shawlkot and Dadar, this cannot be done without his Highness' co-operation. It was clear also that without the aid of the Chiefs and Sirdars, his Highness could not, single-handed, secure the safety of kafilas. The Khan's Wakil, who was present, fully admitted this. All agreed that were the old arrangements which were made in the time of Mir Nusser Khan again approved of by his Highness, the Pass would be perfectly safe. The tribes, on service being bestowed on them, would agree to maintain parties of footmen at the dangerous parts of the Pass, to protect trade and travellers when en route through it.

To-day a letter was received by Major Sandeman from his Highness the Khan. It was in reply to Major Sandeman's letter to his Highness sent from Kirta. The contents of the letter were satisfactory. The Khan agreed to permit the Brahooees to cut their crops undisturbed. His Highness expressed an earnest desire to meet Major Sandeman, and asked that the letters from his Excellency the Viceroy and the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor might be sent to him as soon as possible. As the mission was still delayed in the Pass on account of the cholera outbreak, it seemed desirable to comply with his Highness' request, and to send the letters by the hands of Captain Wylie. However, the letters have not yet been forwarded, as in reply Major Sandeman considered it desirable first to suggest to his Highness that he should come to Mustung to meet him there and to receive the letters in person. The matter is still under consideration.

To-day Naib Pir Jan waited on Major Sandeman with a letter from his Highness the Khan to the Naib's address. Pir Jan said it was the desire of his Highness that the contents of the letter should be read by Pir Jan to Major Sandeman. Permission being granted, the letter was read. It was to the following effect:—That his Highness wished for peace, and invited Major Sandeman to address the Jalawans, who were supposed to be inclined to create a disturbance. His Highness further wrote that he was quite prepared to send an army into Jalawan, did Major Sandeman desire it. The Khan also requested Pir Jan to arrange with Major Sandeman to send some Khelat kafilas, now blocked at Gundava, in safety through the Bolan to Khelat.

To the first part of the letter Major Sandeman replied that he quite concurred with his Highness that were it possible, peace should be made with the Jalawans as well as the Sarawans. The flight of the ex-Wuzeer was then discussed, and Major Sandeman informed Pir Jan that Atta Mahomed had written him on the subject of his misfortunes and recent flight from Khelat. The result of the interview was that Major Sandeman agreed to comply with his Highness' request to address the Jalawan Sirdars, offering in his Highness' name terms of peace. It was also arranged that the Khelat caravans should be escorted by the Brahooees through the Bolan Pass, did his Highness so desire it.

It was clear that the flight of the ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed Khan, and the belief that he had the power to create fresh difficulties about the terms of peace to be arranged between the Khelat Government and the Jalawans, has caused his Highness to ask Major Sandeman to write himself to the Jalawans.

To-day a written agreement was presented to Major Sandeman by the Sarawan Sirdars, the contents of which were to the effect that these Sirdars unreservedly placed themselves in his hands when endeavouring to arrange their quarrel with the Khelat Government. They stated that, with the Khan's approval, they would do service in the Bolan Pass for the protection of the route.

The escort of the 4th Sikh Infantry arrived to-day in camp with cholera convalescents from Kirta. The sick were doing well, and no fresh case of cholera since the 18th, the date on which the disease ceased, had occurred.

Sirdars Imam Buksh, Mazari, and Jamal Khan, Lughari, sent Major Sandeman a letter, in original, from his Highness the Khan to their address. The letter stated his Highness' anxiety to meet Major Sandeman at Khelat, and that he hoped they (the Sirdars) would induce that officer to come there. His Highness would be glad were the Bolan re-opened to trade, did the arrangements come to redound to his honour.

4. 25th April.—The mission marched to-day for Dozan, distant about 13 miles. The place takes its name from a stream running through this small valley. The Mazarani Murrees and Mingul Brahooees reside in the neighbourhood of this place and on the Dusht, which is only six miles off. During the day their flocks and herds in great numbers were brought to water at the spring, which affords a sufficient supply for a force twice the size or more of the escort.

Sirdars Imam Baksh Khan and Jamal Khan, with their Belooch followers, and the Jacobabad Belooch Guides rejoined the mission. They reported that one of the Belooch guide jemadars and three horsemen had died from cholera; that in their opinion the caravan people had not lost from cholera nearly the numbers stated by them. They supposed from 25 to 30 of them had died of the disease.

Arrangements were here made with the Khan of Khelat's Naib Pir Jan to place 100 of the Belooch Guides in Haji-ka-Shahr in Kutchi under a Ressaldar who would co-operate with the Naibs in Kutchi, and particularly with the Haji-ka-Shahr Naib, to keep open the road and forward supplies, &c. to Major Sandeman's camp viâ the Bolan Pass. The three Jacobabad Guide Ressaldars, as per margin, for the good service performed by them in aiding in the escorting of the large caravans to Quetta during the cholera, when it was considered undesirable on account of the disease to employ the military escort on the duty, received, in recognition of their services, an honorary parwana and a khillat from Major Sandeman before starting for Haji-ka-Shahr on the new and important duty entrusted to them.

Malguzar Khan.
Itbar Khan.
Yar Muhammad Khan.

5. 26th April.—The mission halted to-day. It was arranged that the next march should be to Mustung, and not by the Siriab route, which goes in the direction of the Afghan border and Quetta. The distance to Mustung being from 26 to 30 miles over a difficult road, and there being little water en route, Major Sandeman, in consultation with Captain Humfrey, arranged that the infantry should march in the evening 15 miles for the foot of a pass called Surk-Bajo, which had to be crossed, and that they should bivouac there for the night, carrying water with them. A large number of camels were supplied to the infantry on which to carry water. The measure was carried out, and the troops arrived at Mustung without much difficulty. The march was considered not a very severe one. The medical officers report the health of the troops to be on the whole satisfactory.

6. 28th April.—The mission will halt at Mustung for the present, or until the medical officers state that a meeting between his Highness the Khan and Major Sandeman can take place without danger of infection from the recent cholera epidemic which attacked the escort.

To-day Naib Pir Jan waited on Major Sandeman with a letter from his Highness to the Naib's address. As it was his Highness' desire that the contents should be read to Major Sandeman, this was done. They were as follows: That his Highness would fully consent to re-open the Bolan Pass in concert and communication with Major Sandeman. All his Highness desired was that the arrangements, whatever they were, should not be derogatory in any way to the honour of the Khan of Khelat. That he was anxious to meet Major Sandeman, and had directed his Naibs to in no way injure the Brahooees, or interfere with their lands.

To-day Sirdars Moolla Mahomed and Alladina Koord waited on Major Sandeman with a letter from some kafila merchants stating that a caravan of 650 camels had arrived at Dadar. They asked for a Brahooee escort through the Pass. An escort of 200 Brahooees and some Belooch (Mazarani Murrees) were at once despatched to Kirta to bring on the caravan and escort it as far as Shawlkot (Quetta).

No. 90.

Translation of a letter, dated 10th May 1876, from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India.

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your Excellency's kind letter informing me of your welfare. It reached me at a very happy moment, and I have made myself fully acquainted with its contents. I cannot express in sufficiently strong terms how greatly I am indebted to your Excellency for your kind intentions towards me.

In reference to what your Excellency writes, viz., that the breach of friendly relations between the Khelat and British Governments, which has now unfortunately existed during the past three years, is entirely my own fault; in reply, I beg to assure your Excellency that I am your subject, and have ever attended to all orders issued, and have ever remained in subjection to the British Government. Believe me that the unfortunate breach of friendly relations which has taken place is not due to me but to the following cause.

Formerly, officers of the Bombay Presidency conducted my relations with the British Government, who felt kindly towards me and treated me with consideration. My affairs consequently prospered until the date of Captain Harrison's arrival as British Agent at my Court. He was high in favour with Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, who was entirely led by Captain Harrison.

After Captain Harrison's arrival at Khelat, Wullee Mahomed (who is an hereditary slave) was my Wuzeer. He became at enmity with me, and in consequence, through telling evil and false statements to Captain Harrison, turned that officer's mind against me. He believed in the disloyal Wullee Mahomed's statements about me, and in consequence lost all faith in me and considered me to be unreliable.

Since the days of my ancestors the evil-disposed Brahooee clans have continued their bad acts. In my father's time they rebelled and did evil, and at last through their bad conduct he was killed. After his death, the kindly-disposed British Government appointed my brother Mir Muhammad Nusseer Khan as the Ruler of Khelat, but even during his time the Brahooees did not cease from doing evil. From the date that I (aided by the British Government) ascended the Throne of Khelat, the acts of disloyalty and enmity committed by the Brahooee clans against my Government from first to last must be well known to your Excellency.

These tribes, aided by Wullee Mahomed, gained the confidence of Captain Harrison, and tried all they could to injure me. In consequence of this, and out of fear of losing by their evil acts the friendship of the British Government, which is of long standing with my Government, I left Khelat and journeyed to Sukkur to explain to your Excellency the state of my affairs. This I did, and then returned home.

On a second occasion, I went to Shahpore (in Kutchi) to meet Sir William Merewether, and in person I explained to him my desires; but as Captain Harrison was high in his favour and possessed his confidence, what I had to advance in support of my views was never listened to or considered.

After this, Captain Harrison, at the request of my disloyal Wulzeer Wullee Mahomed, took him with him to British territory. The Wulzeer had in his possession my accounts, which he took away with him, and these he has kept in his possession up to date.

The Brahooee after the departure of Captain Harrison up to the present day have never ceased to do evil in the country and to commit raids on my people, to the great loss of myself and them. They have also plundered kafilas, and everywhere created disturbances.

But now that Major Sandeman has come into the country I have been made very happy, as all our affairs will be settled in a way consistent with my honour.

My hope is that the British Government will treat me in a way similar to the one adopted by it with regard to the Amir Shere Ali Khan and the other Frontier Rajas whose authority over their own affairs and subjects is upheld. With regard to myself, I hope the British Government will place the Brahooee clans under me and give me authority over them, and thus maintain my power and dignity.

To Major Sandeman I have written a full statement of my desires, and by the blessing of God I will not fail to settle, in concert and communication with him, all my affairs and those of the country. I will do this in accordance with advice, and know that doing so will redound to my honour and welfare.

In the treaty made by the British Government through General Jacob with my late brother, the sum of Rupees 50,000 was agreed to be given on account of reduction of kafila fees then arranged. This sum I yearly received up to the date of Captain Harrison's departure, although it was not a fair equivalent for the loss sustained by me in the reduction of the fees. I, however, agreed to the proposal, as it was the wish of the British Government that I should do so. Notwithstanding this, and that I still hoped for an increase of the subsidy, although I have committed no fault, what has hitherto been given me for four years has been withheld. I am in hopes that what is due may now be paid to me.

Wullee Mahomed, my ex-Wuzeer, through the influence of Captain Harrison, obtained the imprisonment of Shukur Khan, my Commandant of Troops, Mulla Saleh Muhammad and Gul Muhammad, my Munshis. These men were my faithful servants and had committed no fault. At my interview at Sukker with your Excellency I asked for the release of these men, and your Excellency was pleased to say you would consider my request after the lapse of some time. I have, therefore, hoped for their being set at liberty, but up to date they are still in confinement. Be good enough to release them and permit of their returning to me. My honour is concerned in a compliance with this request.

All is well here. Consider me as your servant, and continue to favour me with your kind letters, &c.

No. 200, dated 22nd May 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, Jacobabad, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In forwarding the enclosed Khelat Diary for the week ending 5th instant, I have the honour to state, with reference to the last entry under date 29th April, that Mr. Bruce, Assistant Commissioner at Jacobabad, received instructions from me by telegraph immediately I became aware of the circumstances to arrange, in concert with the district authorities and the Agent of the Khan of Khelat in attendance upon the Assistant Commissioner, for the safe progress of the caravans arriving thus unexpectedly across the plain of Kutchi to the mouth of the Bolan Pass, communicating by express with Major Sandeman, who would secure them a passage through the Bolan.

2. These instructions were at once complied with, and no mishap occurred. Those additional caravans appear to have given no warning of their late approach, and to have avoided Jacobabad in their route towards the Bolan viâ Khaira-Ghurri (in the lower part of the Upper Sind Frontier District) and Bagh to Dadur.

3. I would beg to draw special attention to the entry under date 4th May, showing how stores in transit to Major Sandeman's camp, through the Bolan, have been escorted by parties of Murrees and Boogtees, once deemed so formidable and untrustworthy.

Enclosure 1 in No. 91.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 5th May 1876.

1. 29th April.—The principal zemindars of Mustung, headed by Mulla Dad Karem, paid Major Sandeman a visit and expressed their great satisfaction at his and the escort's arrival in the country. In fact the demeanour generally of all the zemindars and country people since the arrival of the mission has been very marked and expressive of the highest satisfaction. Up to the present time supplies of all sorts have been easily obtainable. In conversation, the zemindars explained the tenure on which they hold their lands. They are the proprietary body, but pay the Government share (estimated at one fourth) of the produce to the Khan of Khelat, partly in kind and partly in cash. The township of Mustung pays 3,300 maunds of wheat and jowar, and a cash payment besides of Rupees 1,700. The payment made in cash is really a water rate levied on the karezes, which irrigate the valley. These were dug by the zemindars, and are kept in repair at their cost. The entire country round the town is one waving sheet of wheat and barley crop; it is estimated that the valley of Mustung is 18 miles long and 6 miles broad, and of this 6,000 acres of land are under cultivation. The Khan of Khelat possesses some lands in the valley, which are entirely cultivated by his own zemindars. He has also a small stud here. This valley is very favourable to horse-breeding, which is practised to a considerable extent. There is plenty of grain, and lucern crops are extensively raised. After they are cut, large quantities of the grass is dried in the sun and stored for winter use. The orchards and gardens about Mustung are very fine. It is estimated that they number 900 in all, and produce in large quantities grapes, almonds, peaches, mulberries, &c. The townspeople desert their homes in the city during the summer months, and reside in the orchards and gardens. On entering Mustung, it looked deserted; but I found the cause for this was due to what I have just stated.

The climate is perfection. The days not too hot, and the evenings and nights delightfully cool.

To-day a letter was despatched to Mr. Bruce at Jacobabad, requesting him to ask the district authorities to co-operate in preventing caravans leaving Jacobabad for Kandahar without due notice having been sent to Major Sandeman of the probable date of their setting out. Several large kafilas have been allowed to enter the Bolan Pass without any tribal escort, simply because Major Sandeman did not know of their approach until he heard of it from the kafila merchants on their arrival at the mouth of the Pass. Allowing caravans to travel in this way is placing strong temptation in the way of the Murrees, and is too great a risk to run in the present state of affairs. Doubtless the Jacobabad district authorities will heartily aid in preventing its again occurring. On due notice being given, there is now no difficulty in arranging for the safety of the caravans traversing Kutchi and the Bolan Pass.

2. 2nd May.—Naib Pir Jan placed in the Deputy Commissioner's treasure chest Rupees 2,478, the amount of the transit dues realised on the last kafila passing through the Bolan Pass. The departure of this kafila from Quetta to Kandahar was announced. It has been arranged that until the affairs of the Khan and his Sirdars have been amicably settled, the kafila fees will remain in deposit. The tribes are entitled to the "budrakki," or the fees paid for an escort through the pass. The Khan is entitled to the amount due for customs duty.

3. 3rd May.—The Jalawan Sirdars have sent a letter to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, who has made it over to Major Sandeman, saying they will heartily co-operate with him and Major Sandeman in arranging fair terms of peace with his Highness the Khan. Previous to this, letters stating the Jalawan Sirdars' case in full were received by Major Sandeman from them, who has submitted copies to Colonel Munro.

Copies forwarded to Government.—A. A. M.

The Jalawan Sirdars, like their compatriots of Sarawan, are perfectly reasonable in what they ask, viz., honourable terms of peace, and the restoration of lands confiscated by his Highness. Mir Jam Ali, Governor of Lus Beyla, is prepared to be responsible for the safety of trade and good conduct of the other Sirdars of his faction, if the reasonable terms of peace applied for are given by the Khan.

From indirect sources news has reached Major Sandeman that the Belooch Chiefs of Kutchi and the Commandants of his Highness the Khan's regiments have told his Highness plainly that he ought to make peace; that if he does not do so, and his Highness is held responsible for the state of the country by the British Government, he (the Khan) can expect no support from them. It is reported that the Belooch Sirdars said that, in the event of this occurring, they would aid the British and join the Brahooee Sirdars against his Highness. From every direction and from every source information has been received that the Khan's cause is very unpopular with all classes.

4. 4th May.—To-day a report came from the Naib of Dadur, intimating that camels bringing stores for the escort had arrived at Dadur. A tribal Belooch escort, consisting of eight Murri sowars under command of Duffadar Jullu Khan, and eight Boogtee sowars under command of Duffadar Shadi Khan, were at once despatched to escort them through the Bolan Pass to Mustung.

5. 5th May.—Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan, Barozai, of Seebee, reports that a few Murree sowars made a raid into Seebee territory on the village known as Golam Bolaks. Two men of the village were killed, but only two cows were captured, as the people had received notice of the raiders' approach, and in consequence had placed their flocks and herds in safety.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 12th May 1876.

1. 6th May 1876.—His Highness the Khan's Naib Mulla Pir Jan in attendance on Major Sandeman sent that officer a letter from the Naib of Quetta for orders. The contents of the letter were to the effect that the merchants of Quetta and its neighbourhood were anxious to send a kafila to Kutchi conditional on Major Sandeman providing it with a Brahooee escort through the Bolan Pass to Dadur. Major Sandeman, on hearing the contents of the letter, promised the required escort, and directed that the merchants should get ready the caravan.

2. 8th May.—Sirdar Moolla Mahomed sent a letter to Major Sandeman from the Maro Plain, where he is encamped, to ask for an advance of Rupees 1,000 to be paid to the Brahooees on duty in the Bolan Pass. Major Sandeman agreed to make the advance, but it was to be understood that when the division of the kafila's fees took place the sum would be deducted from the "budrakki" due to the Brahooees. The whole of the fees which have been taken from caravans are in deposit, and will be divided hereafter.

Captain Humfrey applied for an escort through the Pass for some camels brought from Jacobabad, which he is sending back there, having engaged camels belonging to this part of the country in their stead. A man of his regiment convicted of theft had also to be sent back to Jacobabad. A Brahooee escort was placed at Captain Humfrey's disposal.

3. 9th May.—Ressaldar Mal Guzar, commanding the 100 Guide sowars of Jakranis and Dumkis stationed at Haji-ka-Shahar in Kutchi, reports the arrival of another large kafila at Bagh. Orders were issued for its escort through the Bolan. Fifty Guides were to accompany it as far as Pir at the foot of the Pass, where a large Brahooee escort would meet it.

Twenty-three camels conveying mess and other stores arrived to-day with their Murree and Bugtee escort at Mustung.

A letter arrived from Jacobabad for Mulla Pir Jan, giving information that cholera had appeared in the village of Jallal Khan and Sini in Kutchi.

4. 11th May.—To-day messengers arrived from Lus Beyla and Wudd from Mir Jam Ali and the other Jalawan Sirdars. They brought letters for Major Sandeman from the Sirdars. The letters stated that the Jalawan Chiefs earnestly desired peace. That they would be guided by Major Sandeman's advice, to whom they had already submitted a full statement of their case. They desired the kind consideration of the Government to their petition for the release of Mir Khan, Jam of Lus Beyla, who is still detained by the British Government in prison.

5. 12th May.—Captain Wylie returned from Khelat after having delivered the Viceroy's and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor's letters to his Highness the Khan. He also brought letters from the Khan for his Excellency the Viceroy, the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor, and for Major Sandeman. Major Sandeman decided that the contents of these letters and the negotiations in connexion with them, which have gone on between him and his Highness the Khan, should be reported to Government in a separate communication, and not recorded in the Diary.

Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, and Jamal Khan, Lughari, returned from Khelat. They at once sought a private interview with Major Sandeman, and reported that just before leaving Khelat his Highness the Khan had sent for them for the purpose of discussing his proposed visit to Major Sandeman at Mustung with the object of settling there with the Brahooees according to the desire of that officer. His Highness said " he " was fully prepared to meet Major Sandeman and to settle the Brahooee case, but before " doing so his Highness wanted Major Sandeman to guarantee him one or two conditions " of peace prior to the meeting." What those one or two conditions are will be reported separately, and are not entered in this Diary. It may be stated here that his Highness' letters and messages were couched in the most respectful terms.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani, of Sarawan, sent Major Sandeman a letter from Sirdar Azaad Khan of Kharan to his (the Sirdar's) address. The contents of the letter asked the news about Major Sandeman's advent into the country, and whether in his (Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's) opinion there was a likelihood of Major Sandeman doing justice between the Sirdars and his Highness the Khan. Sirdar Azaad Khan wrote that if the Raisani Sirdar was satisfied that justice would be done, he would himself, on being sent for, at once come and make his submission to his Highness the Khan and to Major Sandeman.

A letter was sent for Major Sandeman's perusal, addressed by Rahim Khan, Chief of the Minguls, to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, stating he would come in and make his submission on being sent for.

The Khan of Khelat's ex-Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed Khan, addressed a letter to Major Sandeman, asking that officer to intercede for him with his Highness the Khan. The ex-Wuzeer wrote that he was exerting himself in the interests of peace, and would do all he could to preserve it, and trusted his Highness might be induced not to injure his (the Wuzeer's) family, now in prison in Khelat.

The general health of the escort is good. The people of the country are most friendly, and daily show this by their conduct. Supplies are plentiful, and the harvest prospects excellent.

No. 93.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 19th May 1876.

13th May.—Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, reports that he and the other Sarawan Sirdars were about to visit Major Sandeman, but just as they were on the point of starting, a letter reached them from Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, advising them to remain where they were: "that his Highness the Khan did intend to visit Mustung, and "make peace." The Sirdars wrote that they were anxious on this point, as his Highness' troops were expected shortly from Kutchi, and they were not certain whether there was to be peace or war. They sent therefore on their behalf Alladad, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's brother-in-law, to Mustung, to make inquiries as to the true state of affairs. The Sirdars were advised to remain quietly where they were, and to send Alladad to Mustung. They should adopt proper precautions for their individual safety, and to prevent any accident happening, as anything approaching a disturbance would be unfortunate at present.

News from Jalawan states that all is quiet there at present. Jam Ali was ruling in Lus Beyla, and had added to the number of his regular troops. The ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed was said to be at Zehri. Sirdar Gohur Khan had been recognised as the successor of Taj Mahomed.

2. 14th May.—Ressaldar Malguzar, commanding the Guides at Haji-ka-Shahr in Kutchi, reports that he had sent one Jemadar and 40 Guides to escort a kafila en route to Candahar. The sowars had orders to see the caravan as far as the Dusht and Maro Plain, where the Sarawan tribes were encamped. They had got some distance on their way in charge of the kafila, when they were met by a party of Koord Brahooees, sent to relieve them. The Brahooees were under Dost Muhammad's son and Kadir Buksh, the brother of Alladina, the Sirdar of the Koords. The Guide Jemadar made over charge of the kafila to the Koords after taking a receipt. Alladad Khan, brother-in-law of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, reports that a caravan consisting of 1,300 camels had left the Dusht for Quetta.

3. 15th May.—Sirdar Sorab Khan Dhoombkee, resident of Lehri in Kutchi, reports that he sent spies into the Murree Hills to see what the clan Murree were going to do in the present state of affairs in Khelat. They returned and stated that the Murree headmen had collected and held a long consultation. They had decided to do as requested by Major Sandeman and the Raisani Sirdar, and would not allow any of the tribe to plunder for two months. By that time they hoped that the Khan and Major Sandeman would have come to an arrangement for the protection of Kutchi and a settlement of their tribal affairs with the Khelat Government. They were a large tribe, and it was necessary that a settlement should be come to; otherwise they could not of themselves protect the country.

A Notani Boogtee went to plunder in the Murree country, was met, and killed.

About 200 Hadianis made a raid on the Mundani Murrees, killing a man called Bura and 12 others, and plundering some cattle.

A Hindu, by name Gurdit Singh, arrived in camp, and reported himself to Major Sandeman as a spy of the Deputy Commissioner of Kohat, who had sent him to obtain news from Herat. His story was to the effect that after traversing Cabul he arrived at Candahar, and from thence proceeded to Herat. He tried to return to British India viâ the Bolan and Mulla Passes, but found both closed on account of the civil war, and had remained three months in Khelat. Regarding what had gone on there, he said he arrived in Khelat a fortnight after Sirdar Noordeen was killed. He had mixed freely with the people of the place, and it was well known that the Wuzeer Atta Mahomed and Sirdar Noordeen had conspired against the Khan, who was made aware of the conspiracy in time to prevent its execution by himself directing Noordeen's destruction. At the time this event took place Atta Mahomed, the Wuzeer, was wounded and all his property plundered by the troops under Commandant Mosun. After this event the Khan directed Mosun to restore the plunder taken from the Wuzeer's house. This the Commandant would not do and threatened to kill the Wuzeer. To save his life the Khan put a heavy fine on the Wuzeer, and said until the sum was paid his life must not be taken. This was only a trick of the Khan to save the Wuzeer. His Highness is very much afraid of his troops, and therefore did not press the Commandant much to return the plunder.

The troops under Mosun number from 600 to 700 fighting men, but one half of these are at Bagh in Kutchi. Most of them are Pathans from the Peshin valley and Candahar, Mosun himself is a resident of Peshin, and it is said he has lost confidence in the Khan since the attack on Sirdar Noordeen and the plunder of the Wuzeer, and believes that some day the Khan, on opportunity offering, will be revenged on him for the plunder of the Wuzeer's house. The Peshin soldiers are all on the side of the Commandant, and will do exactly as he tells them. His power over the others is not so certain. This Gurdit Singh heard from other soldiers in Khelat, several of whom are residents of Peshawur and Hazaar.

A careful examination of Gurdit Singh raised doubts as to whether he was stating the truth or not regarding his being a spy of the Deputy Commissioner of Kohat. He was carefully examined about Herat, and his answers were not satisfactory, so much so indeed that it was believed he had never been there. His story about Khelat was spoken freely and without hesitation, and had the appearance of truth. A telegram was despatched to Deputy Commissioner, Kohat, inquiring as to whether or not Gurdit Singh was in his employ. Pending reply he was detained in camp.

4. 16th May.—Duffadar Mannu Khan Girani-Brahooee, who was sent to Kahan, the Murree head-quarters, with letters from Major Sandeman, the Brahooee Sirdars, and Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan Mazari to the Murree Chiefs, returned to camp with a letter from Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan, Murree Tomandar. The Sirdar wrote that he would do his best to prevent raids by the Murree clan into Kutchi-Gundava, and he stated, on service being restored to him for the protection of Kutchi, he was prepared to be responsible to prevent for the future Murree raids in the Bolan Pass and Kutchi.

Duffadar Mannu Khan brought with him the diary of the news-writer stationed at Kahan, the Murree head-quarters. The following is the abstract of the intelligence it contained :

On the 11th April 400 Boogtees, led by Fatteh Khan Notani, made a raid on Kolu on the Zerkhan Pathans. Intimation had been given of the approach of the raiders, who returned empty-handed, but after losing four of their number killed. This raid was made in revenge for the death of the Mussuri Boogtee leader Hyder Khan, who was killed by the Zerkhan Pathans some months ago.

On the 25th of April 14 camel-loads of wool were sent by the Hindu merchants of Kahan to Rojhan, the Mazari head-quarters, for sale. The wool was valued at Rupees 1,200.

5. 17th May.—A letter was received to-day from his Highness the Khan of Khelat intimating that his Highness agreed to Major Sandeman's request that he should come to Mustung. His Highness wrote that in his letters to his Excellency the Viceroy and the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor he had stated his views and wishes; but as it was Major Sandeman's desire that he should at once come to Mustung to talk over matters, he would do so, and would leave Khelat on the 25th May, that day being the first day of the new moon.

The Inspector of Police, Nawab Khan, reported his return from Shawlkot. The kafila referred to above had arrived there, but only consisted of 168 laden camels and 24 donkeys. Sirdar Alladina had realised Rupees 55 on account of Budraki fees in the Bolan, and the Naib of Shawlkot had collected Rupees 621-1-6 as customs duty. The money was placed in deposit pending orders, or until after a settlement of the dispute regarding the division of the fees had been come to.

Letters were received from Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan Mazari and Jamal Khan Lughari from Khelat. They wrote that his Highness the Khan was to leave Khelat on the 25th for Mustung, and that they would remain in attendance on him until then, accompanying him to camp.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 26th May 1876. (Extract.)

20th May.—Letters were submitted by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed from Sirdar Gohur Khan of Zehri and the other Jalawan Chiefs, who wrote that they forwarded for perusal letters from his Highness the Khan to one Mussa Khan and Mussamut Naz Bibi, in which the Khan said that it was his intention to send his troops against Sirdar Gohur Khan and the Jalawans on their arrival at Khelat. The Jalawan Sirdars desired the Khan to keep his troops in Kutchi until a truce had been properly arranged. They did not consider it safe under present circumstances to permit the troops to march through the Mulla Pass without a guarantee that they would not on reaching Khorassan attack the Jalawans They said they had lost confidence in the Khan since the death of Sirdar Noordeen.

The letters forwarded addressed to Mussa Khan and Naz Bibi stated that an expedition would be organised against Zehri on the arrival of the troops at Khelat. Inquiry proved that the Khan, after the death of Sirdar Taj Mahomed of Zehri, had been in the habit of levying the Sirdar's share of the produce of his (Taj Mahomed's) lands, but that since the destruction of Sirdar Noordeen the Jalawans had positively refused to give it for the future.

On rece ipt of the above news, a letter was sent to Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan Mazari and Jamal Khan Lughari, now with his Highness the Khan in Khelat, telling them to inquire of his Highness regarding this matter, and to report without delay.

2. 22nd May.—The Sirdars above named replied to the letter referred to, and stated that they had at an interview talked the matter over with his Highness, who said that since Major Sandeman's arrival in Bagh he had made peace with the Brahooees; that his troops had not yet left Gundava; that there was no chance of their reaching for two weeks, and that his Highness was to leave Khelat for Mustung on the 28th May, reaching Mungucher on the 29th and Amanala on the 30th.

The Sirdars wrote that they were anxious for Captain Wylie and Dr. Duke to meet his Highness at Mungucher, and that Major Sandeman should come himself to Amanala.

A reply was sent to the Sirdars to say that Captain Wylie was with a survey party in the district, but that Dr. Duke and Captain Shepherd, with an escort of cavalry, would meet his Highness as requested at Mungucher. Major Sandeman and Captain Humfrey, commanding the escort, would proceed on the 31st to a distance of three miles from Mustung, and there meet his Highness and escort him to the Palace (Miri) of the Khans of Khelat in the town of Mustung. The Sirdars were directed to assure his Highness that every care would be taken to maintain his honour and dignity during his Highness' stay with Major Sandeman.

A reply was sent to the Jalawan Sirdars advising them to do their utmost to prevent further disturbances in the country; that on the arrival of his Highness the Khan at Mustung, where he was shortly expected, the passing of the troops through the Mulla Pass would be discussed, and that Major Sandeman had advised the Khan not to march his troops at present, until he had come to a permanent arrangement with the Sirdars of Jalawan and Sarawan.

4. 25th May.—Sirdar Sher Zaman Shah Barozai, Chief of Seebee, wrote offering his services on any duty the British Government would employ him. He stated that the Kakar Afghans had raided the Murree clan and the Wanichi Pathans, killing three Murrees and one Wanichi, and that they had carried off some cattle. In retaliation the Murrees and Wanichis had made a combined raid on the Kakars, who were defeated, losing 30 of their people killed. The Murrees recovered the plunder that had been taken from them by the Kakars. The Seebee Sirdar also stated that a Murree named Jullah had arrived in his village from the Murree Hills, and stated that their Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan had sent to all the Murree Chiefs to tell them to prevent Murrees from raiding in Kutchi; that if any one did so at present, he would be made over a prisoner to the British Government.

5. 26th May.—Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the other Sarawan Chiefs sent Alladad, the former's brother-in-law, to Mustung, with a letter for Major Sandeman. Its contents showed that they were all anxious about the proposed movement of the Khan's troops through the Passes, and did not see how, under present circumstances, they could permit it, as the Khan threatened to attack the Jalawans; and the cause of all the Sirdars being one and the same, if the Khan did this, they (the Sarawans) would, in accordance with agreement, join the Jalawans and oppose the troops. A reply was sent to the effect that the Khan's troops were still at Gundava, and his Highness himself was soon to be at Mustung, when the matter of the march of the troops would be discussed. It was very desirable at present that no disturbance of any kind should take place, and the Sirdars should do their best to keep the peace.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed reports that Naib Faiz Muhammad of Dadar, with a company of the Khan's infantry, had asked a safe passage through the Bolan Pass, as he was en route to Mustung by the Khan's order. The Sirdar said he did not like the idea of allowing troops to come through the Pass at present. Major Sandeman, in reply, wrote that one company of infantry could do no harm, and that Naib Faiz Muhammad and the troops with him should be allowed to come to Mustung unmolested, as ordered by his Highness the Khan.

News was received to-day of the departure of a caravan numbering 650 camels, and carrying merchandise valued at several lakhs of rupees from Jacobabad en route for the Bolan Pass and Candahar. Arrangements were at once made for its safe transit through the Pass to Quetta.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 2nd June 1876.

27th May.—His Highness the Khan's Naib Pir Jan reported that the Brahooees living in the neighbourhood of Mustung had refused to send in grass and fuel for the use of the Khan and his followers, who were shortly expected at Mustung. The headmen of the Shahwani and Muhammadshahi Brahooees, who reside near Mustung, were called in through the Agent, Mir Jungi, of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed. After discussing the matter with the headmen and the Khan's Naib, Duffadar Mannu Khan Brahooee was sent with the Janishin of Mustung to see that the arrangements for supplies being sent into Mustung for the use of his Highness were carried out. The Brahooees did not object to give the usual supplies. All they said they could not agree to give was more than they were according to sunnud obliged to furnish. It was found, however, that certain Brahooees had purchased lands, and they wanted to be exempt from the amount these would have been obliged to give had the original zemindar-proprietor still possessed the land. The dispute was amicably arranged.

2. Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan wrote from Khelat to say that at his Highness' request they had sent messengers to Sirdar Gohur Khan and ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed Khan to ask them to allow the Khan's troops to pass up the Mulla to Khelat without opposition. They reported that his Highness' heavy baggage had left Khelat for Mustung, and that the Khan himself would leave on the 28th.

Ressaldar Daud Khan, the Government news-writer, to-day arrived in camp from Candahar. He stated that matters were going on very well in Candahar, and that he had written to the Amir of Cabul to say he was asked to visit Major Sandeman at Mustung, and had received a letter from his Highness telling him to do so. He had been supplied by the Governor of Candahar with two sowars as an escort. Daud Khan described the country as perfectly quiet between this and Candahar; that the arrival of the kafilas from Shikarpur and Kurrachee had given great satisfaction to all the Candaharis, and especially to the Governor, who was glad to get the customs fees, &c.; that large caravans, consisting of wool, &c., were still blocked at Candahar, but would start for Kurrachee directly the weather was cold enough to enable them to travel. The news-writer gave much interesting information about Sirdar Yakub Khan's imprisonment, but as it is not in any way connected with Khelat affairs, it is omitted from the diary.

3. Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan forwarded letters from Khelat which were sent by the Jalawan Sirdar Gohur Khan and ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed in reply to the letters mentioned in paragraph 2 of this diary. The contents of these letters were to the effect that the Jalawans would not allow the Khan's troops to come through the Mulla Pass; that they had certain information that the Khan would send his troops against Zehri directly they arrived in Khelat, and to this, under present circumstances, they would not submit; therefore the troops, if they came through the Mulla Pass, would have to force a passage. They trusted that Major Sandeman would request the Khan to direct the troops to stand fast until the terms of peace had been settled and agreed to by both sides. That they desired peace was quite evident, for since the arrival of Major Sandeman's mission in Khelat territory they had ceased to cause injury to the country, and were anxious for a permanent peace to be arranged, which it was in the Khan's power to agree to if he also desired it. Major Sandeman had reason to believe that the Khan did intend to send the troops on arrival in Khelat to Zehri to enable his officers to collect the Sirdari share of Taj Mohomed's lands, which since the death of that Sirdar the Khan had appropriated. He therefore wrote to his Sirdars in Khelat on the subject, asking them to obtain particulars as to his Highness' intentions regarding this, and report for Major Sandeman's information.

4. 28th May.—Ressaldar Malguzar Khan of the Jacobabad Guides, commanding the Haji-ka-Shahr post in Kutchi, wrote to say that a large kafila had arrived there. He at once sent notice of this occurrence to the Brahooee Sirdars, who despatched Alladina's son, Dost Muhammad, with a Brahooee and Murree escort, to see the kafila in safety through the Bolan Pass. That day Dost Muhammad had reported his arrival with the escort half-way between Pir and Haji. The kafila would therefore be at once started en route to Candahar, accompanied by 50 Jakrani and Dhoombkee Guides. Nawab Khan, Ressaldar of Police, was directed to proceed at once to Shawlkot (Quetta) to aid the Naib there to realise the kafila fees on its arrival.

5. Malguzar Khan, commanding the Guides at Haji-ka-Shahr, to-day reports that information had been received by him to the effect that the Murrees were preparing for a raid, but where or on whom was not known; that he had sent word to Sorab Khan Dhoombkee and others of the intention of the Murrees. A letter was sent in reply to the Ressaldar directing him to first send some of his men to Dadar and elsewhere to ascertain the truth or otherwise regarding report of this nature before he spread and acted on them. This he ought to experience no difficulty in doing, as he and his men were all natives of that part of Kutchi where he is now stationed.

6. 29th May.—A letter arrived from Sirdars Jamal Khan and Imam Buksh Khan intimating that his Highness the Khan had that day left Khelat en route for Mustung, was encamped at Girani, and would be at Mungocher on the 29th, Amanwala on the 30th, and Mustung on the 31st.

7. 30th May.—A letter was received from Mungocher from Dr. Duke telling of his Highness the Khan's arrival there, and that matters, as far as he could judge, seemed to promise well for a satisfactory solution of the Khelat difficulty. The Murree Duffadar Jullu Khan reported his return from escorting the kafila named in No. 4 through the Bolan Pass to the Dusht Plain, where it had arrived in safety. Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan had deputed his brother Mirula to Kot Mundai to keep the peace and prevent Murrees raiding in Kutchi or in the Bolan Pass, but the Duffadar stated that the Murree Chiefs were all very anxious that a permanent arrangement should be come to between them and his Highness the Khan for the protection of the Bolan Pass and Kutchi.

Mir Alla Dad and Mir Zangi, the Agents of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, reported that a quarrel had taken place between the Brahooees and the sepoys with the Ja Nashin. They thought the sepoys were to blame. The Naib Pir Jan said the fault lay with the Brahooees, one of whom had seized a sword and wounded a sepoy. Investigation proved that the Naib's statement was quite correct. The Khan's officials were not to blame; the offending Brahooees were therefore placed in arrest until his Highness the Khan and the Sirdar's arrival at Mustung, when the case will be disposed of according to the law of the Khelat State.

8. 31st May.—His Highness the Khan arrived at Mustung and was received with all the honours due to his rank and position. In the afternoon Major Sandeman and Captains Humfrey, Reynolds, Scott, and Shepherd paid him a visit of ceremony at the Miri.

9. 1st June.—To-day his Highness the Khan was received in full Durbar. A description of his reception is given in this office letter No. 114, dated 2nd June 1876, to the address of the Commissioner, Colonel Munro.

We shall be obliged by being favoured with some information as to the fate of the memorial.

No. 97.

No. 10K., dated Simla, 10th June 1876 (confidential).

From L. H. Griffin, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, to T. H. Thornton Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I am directed by the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor to submit the following observations on the state of affairs in Khelat for the consideration of his Excellency the Governor-General in Council.

2. The intelligence which has been received within the last few days from Major Sandeman, in charge of the expedition, to endeavour to arrange matters between his Highness the Khan and his Chiefs, seems to the Lieutenant-Governor to be satisfactory and re-assuring. From the time that Major Sandeman entered Khelat territory the Chiefs of the several tribes expressed their willingness to await the result of his negotiations and to abide by his advice, and the Khan has now himself left his capital, undertaking the long journey to Mustung where Major Sandeman is encamped, and has there had interviews with him, which, from the telegraphic reports received yesterday, seem to show that he, together with his Chiefs, is willing to accept the mediation of a British officer, and to follow the line of conduct approved by the British Government.

3. Such being the situation of affairs, Sir Henry Davies considers it his clear duty to urge most respectfully upon the Government of India the necessity which, in his opinion, exists for giving to Major Sandeman, who has been deputed on this special mission by the Government of India itself, such prompt and complete support as may strengthen his position in the presence of the conflicting parties in Khelat, and may unmistakeably demonstrate to them that he is supported by the full power of the British Government. In asking that this action may be taken by the Government of India without delay, the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor does not consider that he is in any way over-stepping those limits of political action which, with reference to Khelat affairs, have been prescribed for the Punjab Government. Colonel Munro, Commissioner of the Derajat Division, now in charge of the political relations of Upper Sind, and Major Sandeman, the officer employed on the special mission to Khelat, are both Punjab officers, and the Lieutenant-Governor considers that he would be failing in his manifest duty, were he to refrain from pressing their claims to the full and generous support of the Government of India, when their action seems to him to have deserved such encouragement, when they have acted in every particular in accordance with the instructions of the Government of India itself, and when, without such encouragement, the negotiations so long in progress, and carried on with so much difficulty, must probably break down.

4. The whole circumstances of the Khelat case, the policy which has been followed, and the measures which have been taken by the Government of India to arrange matters in this distracted State, are so intimately known to the Government of India that it is only in this letter necessary to refer to a few points in the arrangements of the last few years to show how specially interested the Punjab Government are in the settlement of the question; how constantly and freely their opinion has been invited and finally adopted; and this is only recalled to the recollection of the Government of India in order to justify the urgent representation which his Honour feels himself now compelled to submit.

5. Immediately on his assumption of the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, Sir Henry Davies was called upon to meet the Commissioner in Sind and other frontier officers at Mittunkote in February 1871, to endeavour to secure more unanimity of action in the treatment of the Murree and Boogtee tribes on the Sind and Punjab Frontiers. This conference was characterised by great friendliness of spirit between the Sind and Punjab officials. Many concessions were made to the Sind view of the frontier and Khelat question, and the arrangements finally adopted were to place the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazi Khan under the Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier, who should alone control the relations of the British Government with the Murree and Boogtee tribes. In addition to a subsidy of half a lakh of rupees paid to his Highness the Khan under the Treaty of 1854, a further grant of Rupees 32,040 was proposed to be annually paid for the entertainment of horsemen belonging to the tribes in question, with the object of maintaining tranquility on the border, and the security of trade routes.

6. The arrangements then made, controlled thenceforth solely by the Commissioner in Sind, were unsuccessful in securing the results desired, and the course of events during the years 1871, 1872, and 1873, have been briefly epitomised in the Resolution of the Government of India, in the Foreign Department, dated 15th October 1875, and need not be recapitulated here.

7. The conduct of the Khan of Khelat was so unsatisfactory that, although his Excellency the Viceroy declined to agree to the recommendations of Sir William Merewether to settle the disturbances of Khelat by means of armed intervention, yet the 7th Article in the Treaty of 1854 was enforced, and the annual subsidy of Rupees 50,000 withheld. The policy of endeavouring to deal with the frontier tribes entirely through the Khan, and of giving them to understand that they were regarded merely as subjects of his Highness, was declared in letter No. 2214 of the 9th October 1874, from the Foreign Secretary to the Government of India to the Commissioner in Sind, to have failed after long and patient trial; and the Governor-General in Council was of opinion that the time had arrived to have recourse to the alternative measure of making arrangements direct with the frontier tribes, and without reference to the Khan.

8. In accordance with the suggestion of Sir Henry Davies, the Government of India directed that the country should be visited by a party of Sind and Punjab officials, and an endeavour made to bring about an amicable settlement with the Murree tribe to carry out the details for the enlistment of tribal levies, and for the general security of the frontier and the safe transit of caravans. The dual system of management on the Sind and Punjab Frontier, in the opinion of his Excellency the Governor-General in Council, was one of the causes of the attitude adopted by the Murree tribe, and it being considered essential that this double management should cease, and the control of the tribes on both frontiers should be uniform, the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazi Khan was appointed to manage the affairs of the Murree and Boogtee tribes in all their branches, but subordinate to the Commissioner in Sind, to whom he was to report through the Political Superintendent all matters affecting those tribes, and through whom he would receive his instructions; copies of such reports and instructions being sent to the Punjab Government for information. Major Sandeman was directed to proceed into the hills as soon as possible to explain to the Murree tribe the policy and resolution of the Government, and to arrange for the restitution of plundered property. This mission was generally successful. Ghuzzan Khan, the Chief of the Murrees, and his minor Chiefs made their submission to Colonel Loch, the Political Superintendent at Jacobabad, and a great portion of the plundered property was restored, or compensation paid for it.

9. The action subsequently adopted, the declared policy of the Government of India, the instructions which Major Sandeman was to follow, and the objects which he was to endeavour to obtain, have been recorded in the Resolutions of the Government of India of the 15th October 1875, and the 14th and 30th March 1876. In the Resolution of the 14th March the Government of India expressed their opinion that after full consideration of the circumstances of the case, the course proposed by Colonel Munro, and supported by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, was the best that could be adopted under the circumstances, viz., that Major Sandeman should be allowed to carry out, under more favourable circumstances, the object for which he was deputed to the Murree Hills. It was clear that he had not as yet had a fair chance of achieving success; present circumstances were not such as to render success hopeless, but on the contrary there was, so far as could be judged, a desire on the part of all for the intervention of the British Government; that therefore until a renewed attempt at mediation should have been made and failed, the Government of India were not prepared to abandon the line of action taken in October 1875.

Owing to irreconcilable difference of opinion which existed between the Government of India and Sir William Merewether, the Commissioner in Sind, the conduct of the affairs of Khelat had, from the commencement of January, been taken from that officer and placed in the hands of Colonel Munro, Commissioner of the Derajat; while his Excellency in Council decided that the portion of Upper Sind known as the Frontier District should be placed under the administrative control of the Punjab Government. The circumstances under which the Governor-General in Council considered it necessary to make these important changes were recorded in the Resolution of the 30th March.

10. Such being the circumstances of the case, the action taken by the Government of India having been that which the Lieutenant-Governor had in a great measure suggested, and which he had systematically maintained; Punjab officers aided by influential Punjab border Chiefs having been selected for the execution of the duty; and notice having been given that the Frontier District of Sind was to be placed under the administrative control of the Punjab Government; Sir Henry Davies trusts that, having received from the Government of India no intimation that the policy thus accepted by his Excellency the late Viceroy has been in any material point changed, or indeed that it was proposed to change it; his Excellency the Governor-General in Council will hold him excused for pressing with some degree of urgency the necessity, as it appears to him, of taking very prompt and decided action to ensure that the negotiations which have been thus far successfully carried on by Major Sandeman, both with the Khelat Chiefs and his Highness the Khan, shall not fail for want of the declared support of the Government.

11. With reference to the kind or the amount of support to be given to Major Sandeman, the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor would only observe that these are of less importance than that the support should be given without delay; and he is further of opinion that the proposals made by Colonel Loch, in his letter No. 4170 of 7th November last, to the address of the Commissioner in Sind, are, at this juncture, well worthy of the consideration of the Government of India. He would strongly recommend that Major Sandeman be empowered to restore to his Highness the Khan, on the ratification of an agreement to observe the prescribed conditions and to follow the policy laid down in the Resolution of the Government of the 15th October 1875, the annual subsidy of Rupees 50,000 which has been for some time withheld from him, and for the restoration of which the re-opening of the Bolan Pass for traffic is a sufficient reason. Sir Henry Davies is also of opinion that it will be necessary to adopt the suggestions of Colonel Loch in the 5th paragraph of the letter above referred to, and to allow a certain annual subsidy to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Raisani and the Murrees for the protection of the caravans coming down the Bolan Pass, or to allow the Brahooee Sirdars a fixed tax levied on all caravans. On this point, however, much must be left to the discretion of Major Sandeman himself, who on the spot can best judge what concessions to the various tribes and Chiefs interested will be required to ensure the due protection of the trade routes.

12. The Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor would respectfully urge on the Government of India that Major Sandeman, so far as he has already conducted the negotiations with which he was charged by his Excellency the Viceroy, has acted with great patience and discretion, and that the success which he has already achieved is eminently creditable to him and to Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan Mazari and Jamal Khan Lugari, and that there is reasonable hope for such arrangements being made for the future as may bring to an end the state of anarchy in which Beloochistan has so long been plunged, and revive friendly relations between his Highness the Khan and the subordinate Chiefs. That the task still to be accomplished is an exceedingly difficult one Sir Henry Davies has no occasion to state. The character of the Khan himself, his conduct in the past, and the extreme suspicion with which most of the Chiefs regard him, are well known to the Government of India; and although it is only fair that his Highness' explanations should be fully heard and considered, yet it is quite certain that the present negotiations can only be brought to a successful issue by making it indisputably clear to all interested, that the entire confidence of the Government of India is with the officer employed on this difficult and delicate mission, and that behind him is the strength of the British Government, resolved to support him in enforcing the policy upon which the Government of India has, after long deliberation, determined.

Telegram, dated 12th June 1876.

From Colonel A. A. Munro, Dera Ismail Khan, to Foreign Secretary, Simla.

Major Sandeman telegraphs that he has had a long interview with Khan of Khelat, who agrees to be guided by his advice in coming to terms with the Sirdars. The Khan will appoint two confidential Agents to be associated with Mazari and Lugari Chiefs in arranging terms of reconciliation. Khan's troops to remain in Cutchi until conclusion of negotiations. Major Sandeman expresses satisfaction at progress of his measures, and is hopeful as to result.

Telegram, No. 1426P., dated 13th June 1876.

From Foreign Secretary, Simla, to Colonel A. A. Munro, Dera Ismail Khan.

Your telegram of 12th received.

You are to convey to Major Sandeman the Viceroy's congratulations on his having obtained the assent of the Khan as well as the Sirdars to the mediation of the British Government. You will also inform him that the Khan's letter has been received; and that the answer to it will be forwarded, together with further instructions, to Major Sandeman, on receipt of the report referred to by Major Sandeman in his letter of the 24th of May.

But you are at the same time to instruct Major Sandeman that he must, in the meanwhile, be scrupulously careful not to commit the Government of India to any line of policy towards either the Khan or the Sirdars.

The Viceroy desires to draw your attention to the fact that Major Sandeman has not yet furnished his Excellency with the details necessary for the formation of an opinion as to the true character of the complaints addressed by the Sirdars in general terms to that officer; and that many of those complaints are founded on statements apparently incompatible with recorded facts which were carefully examined into at the time of their occurrence.

The Viceroy also expects that Major Sandeman will now afford the Khan adequate opportunity to learn and answer the accusations brought against his Highness by his Sirdars, and to lay his own case fully and fairly before the Government of India.

Major Sandeman will doubtless collect with impartiality, and report with fidelity, the statements made to him on both sides; but he will be careful not to commit himself or the Government to any opinion, or to do or say anything which can have the effect of weakening the Khan's authority in the eyes of his disaffected vassals.

On receipt of the complete information which it is now awaiting, the Government of India will form its own judgment, and thereupon take such steps as it may deem expedient in reference thereto.

No. 232, dated 14th June 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, Jacobabad, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I have the honour to submit a letter, No. 114 of the 2nd instant, from Major Sandeman descriptive of the arrival in his camp at Mustung, on the 31st ultimo, of his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

2. The details show that nothing was left undone by Major Sandeman to give éclat to the Khan's arrival, or to make his reception appear to be as cordial as possible.

Enclosure 1 in No. 100.

No. 114, dated Camp Mustung, 2nd June 1876.

From Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty Jacobabad.

I have the honour to report that his Highness the Khan of Khelat, in accordance with agreement, arrived at Mustung on the 31st of May, and was received by me with all the honours due to his rank, a salute of 19 guns from the two mountain guns being fired on his approaching camp. I, accompanied by Captain Humfrey, met his Highness three miles from Mustung, escorted by a troop of the 3rd Sind Horse, and after seeing his Highness to his palace (Miri) situated in the town of Mustung, I took my leave. Two days before the Khan of Khelat's arrival at Mustung, his Highness was met at Mungocher, two marches off, by Dr. Duke and Captain Shepherd and an escort of the 4th Punjab Cavalry.

2. On the afternoon of the day of his arrival, I, accompanied by the officer commanding my escort and the officers commanding detachments of regiments named in the margin, paid his Highness a visit of ceremony. The following day, at half-past four in the afternoon, I received his Highness in Durbar, the whole of the European and native officers of the escort being present to meet his Highness. On his arrival a guard of honour of the 4th Sikh Infantry, numbering 100 rank and file, saluted him. They were drawn up in two rows to the right and left of the Durbar tent, facing inwards, thus forming a lane for his Highness to pass through on entering the Durbar. As he dismounted, he was received by Dr. Duke who conducted his Highness to the door of the tent, where I myself met him and led him to his seat.

Captain Humfrey, 30th Bengal Native Infantry.
Captain Scott, 4th Sikh Infantry.
Captain Reynolds, 3rd Sind Horse.
Captain Young, Artillery.
Captain Shepherd, 4th Punjab Cavalry.

3. His Highness' loyal Mirs, other native gentlemen, and the native officers of his household troops, were then presented to me by the Khan's Wuzeer. After this I introduced to his Highness the European officers of the escort. The officers commanding detachments then presented to his Highness the native officers under their immediate command.

4. Before his Highness took his departure I addressed him to the following effect: I said, "that an impression had gone abroad on account of the delay that had occurred in his Highness coming to Mustung that he had shown an unwillingness to accept my invitation to come here. Nay more, that it had been actually stated as a fact that his Highness had declined to come at all. That the real fact was that the delay in his coming here was quite unavoidable under the circumstances, but as such a report had gone abroad, I thought it well in his Highness' presence to contradict it, thus affording his Highness an opportunity of confirming what I said. I myself could assure all present that, although my intercourse with his Highness had not been one of very long standing still I already knew enough of him to be certain that he was fully aware of the duties of a Ruler of a large State like the Khelat one. That I felt sure his Highness most thoroughly appreciated the motives which guided the British Government in ruling the great Empire of Hindustan, viz., that much is to be gained by conciliation, compromise, influence, and by the recognition of the rights of others coupled with the assertion of one's own. That, as a rule, in most cases a great deal is obtainable from explanation and inquiry conducted in the belief that it is for the interest of all contending parties to settle their quarrels and differences in a satisfactory and peaceful manner. That settling them by force of arms was of course often a very grave necessity, but was only resorted to by Kings and Rulers, who had truly the welfare of their people and country at heart, when every other measure had failed, &c., &c.

5. His Highness, to the above address, most cordially and heartily responded, saying the sentiments I had given expression to were perfectly true ones. That his country and all he possessed belonged to the British Government. That the report that had been spread abroad to which I had referred had been got up by his enemies with the object of injuring him in the eyes of the British Government, whose loyal and obedient servant he was, ever had been, and desired to remain.

6. Shortly after this his Highness took his departure, the same ceremonies being observed as those which were attended to on his arrival.

No. 101.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 9th June 1876.

1. 4th June.—To-day a report was received from Kutchi to the effect that his Highness the Khan's troops had marched and intended to reach Khelat viâ the Mulla Pass, and that the Jalawans and Salawans were collecting in great numbers to oppose the troops. His Highness was at once communicated with on the subject, and orders were issued to the Commandant of the troops to stand fast wherever the order might reach him. It was conveyed to him by the hands of two sowars of the Khan, two Sarawan-Brahooee sowars, and two of Major Sandeman's sowars. The fact of the issue of this order by the Khan was made known to the Sarawans, and arrangements were also made to let the Jalawans know of it to prevent their attacking the troops.

2. 5th June.—Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, on the part of the Sirdars, and the Khan's agents Nawab Muhammad Khan, Abdulla Jan, and Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad, assembled at Major Sandeman's tent to discuss the terms of peace to be arranged between his Highness and the Sirdars. These were recorded in writing and forwarded to his Highness for approval. On receiving the paper containing them, his Highness expressed his satisfaction, stating he would himself visit Major Sandeman and present the paper to him after having affixed his seal to it.

Sher Zaman Shah, the Barozai Chief of Seebee, reports that a dispute broke out between some of his people and some Girani-Brahooees. He went to try and settle it, and during the discussion was accidentally shot through the arm. The wound was not a severe one. All was going on well in Seebee.

The Jalawan Chiefs, Jam Ali Khan, Mir Gohur Khan, Mir Ibrahim Khan, and Mir Chakar Khan, wrote to say that they would be prepared to visit Major Sandeman on being sent for. They were a little anxious on account of the distance and the cost of doing so, but hoped to be able to come directly they were called in.

3. 6th June.—At 4 o'clock in the afternoon his Highness visited Major Sandeman. He presented that officer with the written terms of peace, saying he accepted them with very great pleasure. He said he had never expected matters to end so well, and truly believed that a good settlement would now be come to between himself and his Sirdars. He said he had never felt so happy since he ascended the "guddee." He would do all he could to bring matters to a proper understanding between himself and his Sirdars, and with the aid of the British authorities now present, he believed the negociations now going on would end successfully and to the great benefit of himself and his State. His Highness really seemed to speak as he felt, and to be in earnest. He said a great deal about his desire some day to visit Hindustan, and explained how much he would have enjoyed it had circumstances admitted of his visiting India during the stay of his His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales there.

Nawab Khan, Ressaldar of Police, who went to Quetta (see Diary for last week) to aid the Naib there to realise the kafila fees returned. He brought with him Rupees 1,658–12–3, which sum was placed in deposit with the other accumulated custom dues. A sum of Rupees 280 had been paid to the tribes in the Pass as budrakki. Nawab Khan reported that on his way back from Quetta he halted at Farringabad, near Teri. That the Khan of Khelat's sister, Bibi Alla Dini, wife of the Jam Mir Khan, had arrived there, the village being in her jagir. That this lady sent her agent to him to ask him to tell Major Sandeman how greatly delighted she and all the other Khelat ladies were at the prospect of the quarrel between the Khan and the Sirdars being arranged, &c. She had insisted on entertaining him, and during his stay of one day in the village he remained her guest.

With the consent of his Highness the Khan, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and the other Sarawan Sirdars were summoned from Dusht and Maro plains to Mustung.

4. 7th June.—To-day the Sarawan Sirdars arrived at Mustung.

A report was received stating that a skirmish had taken place in the Mulla Pass between the Khan's troops and the Jalawans, led by Ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed and Sirdar Gohur Khan. A few on both sides were said to have been killed. The order for the troops to stand fast had arrived.

5. 8th June.—At 4 o'clock in the afternoon Major Sandeman took Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to pay his respects at the "Miri" to his Highness the Khan. The Khan rose on the Sirdar entering, and they embraced. The interview passed off very well.

6. 9th June.—To-day it was decided that on account of the fight in the Mulla Pass it was desirable to send Mirulla, son of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and Wudera Shadi Khan Bungulzai, with a party of sowars and a letter from his Highness the Khan, to invite the Jalawan Sirdars not to delay coming here. The letter from his Highness conveyed strict orders to the troops to on no account cause injury to any one, but to stand fast until peace was declared.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed reported the receipt of a letter from Sirdar Azaad Khan of Kharan, asking permission to come to Mustung. Major Sandeman was of opinion that as his case was not connected with the quarrel between the Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan and his Highness, perhaps it would be as well for him to delay visiting Major Sandeman.

Ressaldar Mal Guzar Khan Jakrani, commanding the guide post of Haji-ka-Shahr in Kutchi, reports that cholera is prevalent in Jhal. About 100 Magassie Beelooch had died of it. It had disappeared from other parts of Kutchi.

No. 102.

Khelat Diary for the week ending the 16th June 1876.

1. 10th June.—To-day the Sarawan Sirdars were received by his Highness the Khan of Khelat in Durbar. They were admitted with considerable ceremony, and a long conversation took place. Both sides seemed pleased at meeting. Major Sandeman was present.

2. 11th June.—The Sarawan Sirdars went of their own accord to-day to pay a friendly visit to his Highness the Khan. It was reported that his Highness was greatly pleased at this event taking place, and pointed out how pleasant it was to find the Ruler of the Khelat State's Durbar filled with the nobles of the country according to old usage and custom. The Sirdars made a suitable reply and took their leave.

3. 12th June.—A message was received to-day from his Highness the Khan by Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan to the effect that the Khan was anxious for a day to be fixed on which he could entertain the Sarawan Sirdars at dinner.

4. 13th June.—Dhani Baksh, Ghazni Murree, brought letters from Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan to the address of Major Sandeman. The Murree Chief merely wrote for news, and to ask when arrangements were to be come to about Kutchi. A reply was sent to say that as soon as possible arrangements would be come to for the protection of Kutchi. That for the present Major Sandeman trusted Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan would keep his brother Mirulla at Kott Mundai, and would prevent raids taking place. That up to the present the conduct of the Murrees had been good, and it was to be hoped that such would be continued.

To-day the postal sowars in the Bolan Pass were fired at on reaching the Siri Bolan when in the act of watering their horses, and the mail bags carried off. In the scuffle that ensued a Raisani, who was travelling in company with the postal sowars, was killed. A party of Koords in charge of Kadir Dina, the brother of Sirdar Alla Dina, went off in pursuit of the robbers, who were believed to be Dumar Kakar, the only strange part of the business being that their headmen were then in Major Sandeman's camp at Mustung. The headmen of the Minguls residing in the Bolan Pass were summoned to Mustung to pay their respects to his Highness the Khan.

5. 14th June.—This morning the Sarawan Sirdars, with the exception of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, dined with his Highness the Khan. Sirdar Jamal Khan, Lugari, was also present. Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, was too ill to attend. Rahim Khan, the Zagar Chief of Noshki, and father to the Khan's senior wife (the mother of Mir Mahmud Khan), arrived at Mustung, and was present at the dinner party and took part in it. The party is reported to have gone off well, and that the Khan and the Sirdars entered freely with each other into conversation. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed sent word to his Highness to say he would dine some other day with his Highness after Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan got well and was able to go with him to the Miri and be present at the dinner.

A letter was received to-day from the Ex-Wazir Atta Mahomed telling of the skirmish in the Mulla Pass. He said the Jalawans lost about 10 killed and wounded. He considered that the Khan's troops suffered much more than the Brahooees, but what their loss was he could not tell.

Alladad Khan, sowar (who took the Khan's order to the commander of the troops telling them to stand fast and not to fight, also the letter to the Jalawan Sirdars telling them of his Highness' order), reports that there is no necessity for further anxiety as the Brahooees were returning to their homes and all was quiet.

Mr. Bruce reported that the details of kafilas encamped at Khyra Ghurree and the stores for the officers of the escort had that day started for Haji-ki-Shahr.

A Brahooee escort was at once sent to meet them.

6. 15th June.—Captain Humfrey, commanding escort, and Captain Shepherd, 4th Punjab Cavalry, applied to Major Sandeman to cash for them drafts (pay of troops) on the Shikarpur treasury to the value of Rupees 18,000. This was done by his Highness the Khan, who took the drafts and paid the money in cash. Some other arrangements will for the future have to be come to for the cashing of draft sent for the pay of the escort.

His Highness sent a letter for Major Sandeman's perusal. It was from the Commandant of troops, Fakir Muhammad, who stated that he was encamped at Nukrama near Zehri, and would stand fast and carefully attend to his Highness' orders. Care would be taken to cause injury to no one, and efforts would be made to induce the Brahooees to keep quiet and settle in peace.

Nawab Khan, Inspector of Police, wrote to say that he had joined his Highness' troops and had delivered the Khan's written order to the Commandant, Fakir Muhammad, who said he would carefully attend to orders and not touch a blade of grass belonging to the Brahooees. He (Nawab Khan) would shortly proceed and join the Jalawan Sirdars, and would present to them in person the letters that had been entrusted to him for them.

7. 16th June.—Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, accompanied by Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, went to visit his Highness the Khan. On entering the Durbar-room he made his obeisance according to old rule and formality before the Khan. The Khan rose and then the two embraced. After this the Sirdar took off his sword, which he placed at the Khan's feet, and falling there himself made full submission to the Khan, saying as follows: "Your Highness is the ruler of the country, and I am your subject. "I have come to your Highness for pardon and to place myself in your hands. You "can either kill or pardon me, whichever you please, I am quite at your mercy. I have "been long unfortunate and have remained separate from your Highness, and I have "waged war. Now my sword is at your feet; do with it what you will. Take my "head off with it, or restore it to me."

After the Sirdar had ceased speaking, the Khan seemed greatly moved, and at the same time much pleased, at what the Sirdar had said and done. His Highness took up the Sirdar's sword and returned it to him, saying he trusted yet to live to see the Sirdar use it against his (the Khan's) enemies. The Khan again embraced the Sirdar, saying he was his old Mir, and he trusted that for the future they would remain good friends. A long conversation then took place between the Khan and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, after which the Durbar broke up.

The Inspector of Police, Nawab Khan, and Ex-Wuzeer, Atta Mahomed, write to say that the letters asking the Jalawan Sirdars to Mustung had been received. They accepted the invitation with great pleasure. Mir Ibrahim Khan had been sent for, and they were all busy preparing to start for Major Sandeman's camp at Mustung, where they might shortly be expected.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 23rd June 1876.

1. 17th June.—Major Sandeman having been suffering from fever, his Highness the Khan came to his camp with a few of his officials to ask after that officer's health. His Highness was accompanied by Sirdar Asad Khan (the eldest son of Sirdar Moolla Muhammad of Sarawan) and the other Brahooee Sirdars. The interview lasted for half an hour. The Khan during it expressed his great satisfaction at Sirdar Mulla Mahomed having visited him in private and at his having made full submission. Major Sandeman took the opportunity of mentioning to the Khan that he was desirous of making some changes for the better protection of the Bolan Pass, and that it was proposed to make Sirdar Alla Dina Koord responsible. His Highness in reply said he thought the proposed arrangements very suitable, and was glad that Sirdar Alla Dina was to have a fair trial. His Highness had evidently taken Sirdar Alla Dina into favour, who had gone several times to visit his Highness and make his submission to him. After the interview was over his Highness directed his Mustaufi, Fakir Muhammad, and Wakil, Nawab Muhammad Khan to arrange to give the usual daily allowance to the Sarawan Sirdars.

In consultation with Sirdars Jamal Khan and Moolla Mahomed a list was prepared showing the daily allowance each Chief should receive. It was then sent for submission and approval to his Highness the Khan.

2. 18th June.—Nawab Muhammad Khan, the Khan's Wakil, and Naib Faiz Muhammad of Mustung, were sent by his Highness the Khan to ask Major Sandeman to arrange the dispute between his Highness and the Sarawan Brahooees regarding the share of the rich lucern grass, which is here cultivated like regular crops, that the Khan ought to receive from the Brahooees. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed was sent for in order that the matter might be discussed before him. The Naib of Mustung said that the old lands which the Brahooee Sirdars possessed about Mustung were exempt from the tax, but that the newly purchased lands were not so exempt, and ought to pay exactly as if they were in possession of the old zemindari proprietors. The tax was levied according to a measure called a trangar, and each karez was bound to give one trangar every fourth day. In addition the zemindars were bound to supply gratis lucern daily sufficient for the Khan's horses and troops during his stay at Mustung. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed was of opinion that the zemindars should divide amongst them the quantity of lucern daily required for the Khan and his troops, and should give it, although it was a heavy tax on them to do so, on account of the Khan having of late years so largely increased the number of his troops which had necessitated a large number of baggage animals being daily provided for. Regarding the other tax of a trangar of lucern from every karez every fourth day, the Sirdar said this was an entirely new tax, and was imposed to provide for his Highness' troops, during the winter months. That its imposition was one of the chief causes which had led to the long civil war between the Khan and his Sirdars. It was finally arranged that the matter should be fully discussed between the Khan's advisers, Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, and then referred to his Highness for decision.

3. 19th June.—The arrangement for the better protection of the Bolan Pass was to-day discussed at Major Sandeman's tent between Sirdars Moolla Mahomed, Alla Dina Koord, Imam Buksh Khan, and Jamal Khan. It was arranged that, for the present, Sirdar Alla Dina Koord should accept the responsibility of the protection of the Pass, as he and his tribe reside on the Dusht and in the Pass, and are intermarried with the Dumar Kakars. That it was necessary to keep men always on duty at Kirta and the Siri Bolan, as previously arranged by Major Sandeman. That the Sirdar responsible for the protection of trade must also be responsible for the safety of the mail bags, &c. Sirdar Alla Dina agreed to take over entire charge of the Pass arrangements. The following men are always to be on duty in the Pass:—

Dost Muhammad, son of Sirdar Alla Dina.
Nubbee Buksh, Headman of Kirta.
Tail Khan, „ „
1 Headman, Bingu Murrees.
1 „ of the Kott Mundai Murrees.
1 „ „ Mazerani Murrees.
60 Murree and Koord footmen.

Siri Bolan.

Yar Muhammad, son of Sirdar Alla Dina.
4 Headmen belonging to the Dumar Kakar and Sumalani Minguls.
40 Mingul footmen.

It was further arranged that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, although not in immediate charge of the Pass, should superintend all that went on, and report whether the Koords and others under Sirdar Alla Dina acted up to their agreement. These arrangements were in continuance of those already made under the provisions of section 27 of the Government of India Resolution No. 2891, dated 16th October 1875. The Khan sent a parwanna addressed to the headmen of Kirta in the Pass, telling them that they had permission to re-occupy the village and cultivate its lands.

His Highness the Khan sent a paper to Major Sandeman by the hands of his Mustauti Fakir Muhammad, with a view to demonstrate that since the treaty of 1854 the Khans of Khelat have lost in custom dues a lakh of rupees yearly on account of having reduced the custom dues from 1 rupee per maund to 8 annas. As this is a very old grievance of his Highness, and has frequently been represented to Government, now that it has been again brought forward, Major Sandeman decided to thoroughly investigate the matter, and make it the subject of a separate reference to Government, with a view to its final disposal.

Sirdar Asad Khan and the other Sarawan Sirdars to-day visited his Highness in Durbar according to old State usage.

4. 20th June.—Wakil Muhammad Khan, Naib Faiz Muhammad, Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Jamal Khan, and Moolla Mahomed, assembled to discuss the lucern tax. It was decided that lucern should, at once, be supplied for the daily use of his Highness and troops; but that the tax of the trangar supply for winter use should be referred by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed in person to his Highness the Khan for decision.

The Jalawan Chiefs, Mirs Jam Ali and Ibrahim Khan, wrote to say that they had arrived at Saikran, two marches from Zehri, and would shortly join Major Sandeman's camp, but were anxious that the Khan should call his troops into Khelat, as they desired to avoid the chance of a collision with any of them. A reply was sent to say that his Highness the Khan had ordered his troops, as requested by them, to march at once for Khelat, and that they might proceed to Mustung with every confidence, as the troops had received strict orders that they were to molest no one.

5. 21st June.—Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to-day went alone to pay a visit to his Highness the Khan. They entered freely into conversation with each other, the Khan telling the Sirdar that he would cause him no further injury. In reply the Sirdar said that if his Highness would act up to his promises, he (the Sirdar) would serve and obey him. The conversation about the lucern was not very satisfactory. The Khan agreed to let off the trangar tax for this year, but would say nothing about future years. The Sirdar did not think it advisable to press the matter, and asked Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan to go with him the next day to his Highness with a view to the question being discussed with them by his Highness.

6. 22nd June.—Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Jamal Khan, Moolla Mahomed, Nawab Muhammad Khan, Wakil, Naibs Faiz Muhammad and Pir Jan, again assembled to discuss the question of the lucern trangar tax. The discussion demonstrated that during the reign of the late Khan, Nusseer Khan, no difficulty about the lucern tax existed, as no regular army was kept up in those days by the Khans of Khelat. But since the reign of the present Khan, he had raised an army, and had in consequence many horses and camels, and had taxed the zemindars and Brahooees to maintain these. This led to the last rebellion of the Brahooees, as the Khan had levied the trangar tax by force; moreover the trangar measure was not a fixed one, and might mean a camel load of two maunds or four maunds according to the fancy of the collector, who used this fact as a means of oppression and to extort money from the poorer class of zemindars and Brahooees. After a great deal of discussion the Mazari Sirdar, Imam Buksh Khan, was of opinion that a compromise should be made. That the Khan should reduce the present tax by one half, and fix the trangar measure at a certain number of maunds. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed reluctantly agreed to the proposal, but was very desirous that the tax should be levied in cash and not in kind, and would agree to pay any fair sum to be fixed by arbitration in lieu of the trangar lucern tax. The Khan's officials were of opinion that his Highness would never agree not to take in kind, but they hoped that he would be induced to reduce the amount of lucern to be realised, and that he would fix the size of the measure called the trangar at a certain number of maunds. It was finally arranged that the question should be again referred to his Highness the Khan, who could alone arrive at a final decision in his capacity of ruler of the country, and Sirdars Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan, Imam Buksh Khan, and Jamal Khan should wait upon him with a view to obtaining his Highness' decision, which, it was hoped, would be of such a nature as to prevent future trouble regarding the levy of this tax. The Sirdars then visited his Highness, who gave much the same reply as on the former occasion to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, saying that this year he would remit the tax altogether.

7. 23rd June.—Nawab Muhammad Khan, Wakil of his Highness the Khan, waited on Major Sandeman by his Highness' orders, and asked that officer to decide regarding the amount of lucern the Brahooees should pay his Highness yearly. In reply, Major Sandeman said that the question was one that could only be properly decided by his Highness himself, and that he hoped that the Khan would do so in consultation with the Sirdars, and that a fair decision, after considering the necessities and requirements of both sides, would be arrived at. The Wakil took his reply to his Highness, who, it is believed, will, in consultation with the Sirdars, settle the question in a way satisfactory to both sides.

Letters were received, dated the 20th June, from the Inspector of Police, Nawab Khan, who is now with the Jalawans. He forwarded letters from Mir Gohur Khan and the Ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed Khan, who wrote to say that Mirs Jam Ali and Ibrahim

Khan had arrived at Anjira, four or five miles from Zehri. That all were anxious about the position of the Khan's troops, and were desirous for his Highness to direct them to march to Khelat. The Wakil of his Highness was informed of the contents of these letters, and after a little delay he reported that in consequence of the request contained in them, his Highness had issued orders to the Commandant of the troops to march for Khelat. That his Highness would also write to the Jalawan Chiefs to come to Mustung. His Highness accordingly wrote a letter addressed to Mir Jam Ali, and another addressed to Mir Ibrahim Khan and the other Jalawan Sirdars, telling them to march at once for Mustung, and that they could do so without the least fear. These letters were forwarded by Major Sandeman with his own letters addressed to the Jalawan Sirdars sent in reply to those referred to above.

No. 244, dated Dera Ismail Khan, 30th June 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I have the honour to submit a report, No. 122 of the 14th instant, with Appendices A. to J., from Major Sandeman, now on special duty in Khelat territory, giving details of his proceedings to date, and also enclosing a kharita from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, in acknowledgment of the letter from the late Viceroy and Governor-General of India, which was received as per paragraph 12 of the Government of India Resolution No. 671 (a) P. of the 4th March last, and duly forwarded.

2. I have from time to time conveyed to you by telegraph intelligence of Major Sandeman's progress and proceedings as received from him in the same manner through Jacobabad.

3. The appendices to the report consist chiefly of translations of letters which passed between the Khan of Khelat and Major Sandeman anteriorly to the Khan's arrival at Mustung in the end of May. The Khan had evinced considerable reluctance to leave Khelat for the purpose of meeting Major Sandeman and discussing the objects of that officer's second deputation to Khelat territory. Various influences appear to have operated to induce the Khan's first displayed hesitation to leave his capital and to visit the British officer at the place which the latter had selected for sojourn, in pursuance of the instructions which he had received; considerations of personal dignity and a disinclination to meet the disaffected Sarawan Sirdars, under the protection as it were of a British officer, being the most powerful incentives to that hesitation.

4. Major Sandeman in these circumstances deemed it advisable to forward the letters of which he was the bearer to the Khan through Captain Wylie, one of the officers attached to the mission, who was accordingly deputed to Khelat with a proper escort to deliver to the Khan in person the letters from his Excellency the Viceroy and his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. A report from Captain Wylie, descriptive of his reception at Khelat, and of his performance of the duties entrusted to him, forms one of the appendices (F.) to Major Sandeman's.

5. The prevalence of various rumours throughout the country, of a nature unfavourable to the objects of Major Sandeman's mission, had induced that officer to send two Belooch Sirdars in his confidence—Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, and Jamal Khan, Lugari—with Captain Wylie, for the purpose of more thoroughly testing the popular feeling and bringing authentic intelligence of the state of affairs at Khelat. On their return these Sirdars communicated privately to Major Sandeman the information given in paragraph 8 of his report, on which I do not feel called upon to comment. Major Sandeman very properly would make no promise or would enter into no engagement; but he sent the Khan a general reply, which had the effect of causing the Khan's joining the camp at Mustung on the 31st May, as already reported.

6. In paragraphs 10 to 14 inclusive, Major Sandeman relates the course of proceeding immediately after the arrival of the Khan of Khelat at Mustung. A paper embodying certain terms and conditions (Appendix J) was drawn up by five delegates, three of whom were nominated by the Khan and two by Major Sandeman, these latter being the Sirdars already named. The Khan expressed a readiness to abide by the terms agreed upon by the delegates, and it was resolved thereupon to summon all the principal leaders of the two disaffected factions, Sarawan and Jalawan, to Mustung to discuss those terms. The Sarawan leaders, being in the neighbourhood, arrived the following day; but the Jalawan Sirdars, who were at a distance, had not joined up to date of the report, though they were then expected to arrive at an early date. They had not reached Mustung at time of despatch of Major Sandeman's last telegram to my address, but their arrival was then daily looked for.

7. The reference in paragraph 15 of the report to a balance of compensation said to be still due to certain caravan merchants who were plundered in the Mulla Pass in 1872 concerns a matter which has already been the subject of correspondence and inquiry through the Punjab Government, and I can see no objection to Major Sandeman being authorised to make the further inquiries desiderated by him.

8. In regard to what is advanced in paragraphs 16 to 21 of Major Sandeman's report, I have to observe that previously to my return from Jacobabad in April, I received instructions from your office covering a memorial which had been submitted to the Bombay Government concerning the exiled and imprisoned Jam of Lus Beyla, to report upon that Chief's case. I was unable at the time to do so, because the correspondence in the Jacobabad office was incomplete, and that which had been ordered to be placed at my disposal by the Commissioner in Sind was not received until some time afterwards, when I directed a careful and confidential abstract of the correspondence regarding the Jam of Beyla from first to last to be prepared by the Assistant Commissioner placed at my disposal by the Punjab Government for special duty. The abstract is announced to be nearly completed, and on its receipt I shall be in a position to report fully on the Jam's case.

9. The incidents related in the concluding paragraph were unfortunate: the plunder of the post-bags in the Bolan Pass by a party of marauders, supposed to be of the Dumar-Kakar Pathan tribe, and the untoward results of the pursuit, are to be regretted. Such occurrences are perhaps unavoidable in an unsettled country like Khelat, but Major Sandeman expects to recover the stolen bags and to obtain punishment of the thieves.

10. The instructions contained in your telegram of the 14th instant for Major Sandeman's guidance have been duly conveyed to and acknowledged by him.

11. The second enclosure to Major Sandeman's report, viz., the Khan of Khelat's reply to the letter addressed to him by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, has been transmitted through the Secretary to the Punjab Government.

Enclosure 1 in No. 105.

No. 122, Camp Mustung, dated 14th June 1876.

From Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

I am now in a position to place before you a detailed account of my proceedings up to date. I did not feel able to do so sooner, as I wished first to satisfy myself that his Highness the Khan of Khelat, whose arrival here I reported in this office No. 114, dated 2nd instant, was really and truly anxious to act up to his professions. What I have to relate will, I trust, demonstrate this to be the case.

2. On the 14th April 1876, from Kirta in the Bolan Pass, I addressed a letter to his Highness telling him of my arrival there and the progress of the mission. A copy of my letter and his Highness' reply is annexed (Appendices A. and B.)

3. These letters do not require much comment from me, as they show exactly what his Highness and I were aiming it. I desired the Khan to come to me at Mustung. He, on the other hand, anxiously requested that I should go to Khelat. As I was determined not to do this, I sent him a letter decidedly saying so, and again I urged him in it to come here. This letter is marked Appendix C.

4. To this letter his Highness sent a reply (Appendix D.); and although he by no means refused to come, still he asked me to appoint a place nearer Khelat for our meeting; I, therefore, for considerations I will now enter upon, decided to forward at once to the Khan his Excellency the Viceroy's and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor's letters. I was induced to do this because I was given to understand that all manner of rumours were afloat as to the objects of this mission. The Khan was said, did he come here, to dread being made on arrival a state prisoner, &c. There was also a party amongst his confidential advisers who told him that the greater the difficulty he made about complying with what I wanted, the greater consideration would be shown him by me hereafter. My own idea was, that the Khan, knowing the Brahooees were in large bodies round and about Mustung and its neighbourhood, which is their own country, did really fear to come here without some decided assurance from me. There were, however, more substantial causes for his not at once yielding to my request, which I shall notice further on in this letter.

5. Having made up my mind to send his Excellency's letter to his Highness, I decided, as directed by you in your No. 117, dated 3rd April 1876, paragraph 9, to do so with every outward form and dignity. I entrusted it to Captain Wylie, 1st Punjab Cavalry (on special duty, surveying the country), and Dr. Duke, and I sent with them Captain Shepherd and 90 sabres, 4th Punjab Cavalry, as an escort. I also sent another letter (Appendix E.) from myself to the Khan, pointing out again why I could not under any circumstances come to Khelat. My instructions to Captain Wylie were simply to deliver the letter and to refer his Highness to my letters already alluded to for any information he desired to know.

6. Captain Wylie proceeded to Khelat, and his report of what passed there (Appendix F.) is attached. He performed the duty on which he was employed in every way to my satisfaction. The Khan received him with all honour, and he forwarded through him replies to the letters he took to him from his Excellency the Viceroy and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor. These letters I have now the honour to submit for whatever notice they may be considered worthy. Captain Wylie also brought another letter to my address from his Highness (Appendix G.) It is not necessary to notice it here at length on account of what I shall presently relate. Suffice it to say, the Khan agreed to do anything required of him, saying an order conveyed by an ordinary messenger from the British Government to him was sufficient to ensure his compliance with it. But the contents of the letter had much more of true reasonable complaint than I was at first inclined to believe. How this came to light I will now explain.

7. When sending off Captain Wylie with his Excellency the Viceroy and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor's letters, I directed Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, and Jamal Khan, Lugari, to accompany him. My instructions to them were merely to watch events, and to give me a true and reliable account of the state of affairs in Khelat.

8. These to Sirdars on their return asked me for a private interview. To this I at once admitted them. They said that the Khan's state was as follows: That his Highness had called them into his Durbar and had held a private interview with them; that his mind was distracted by doubts and fears; that his Highness (they asked to be excused for repeating this, as perhaps it showed disrespect) said that from the commencement of his reign he had ever taken advice, that it was through taking the advice of the British officers that his affairs with the Sirdars were now so complicated; that at Sir William Merewether's request he had occupied Beyla, and in fact that officer had made him a present of the province of Lus; that he had gone to great expense to secure the safety of the province and had put the traiterous Noordeen there as Naib; that at first he got real help from the Commissioner, who had imprisoned his enemy Mir Khan and his son Jam Ali; that shortly after this his Shahgassee, Wullee Mahomed (a nominee of our own), had picked a quarrel with him (the details are too long to tell); that this quarrel had been taken up by Major Harrison and Sir William Merewether, who supported the Shahgassee, who was taken away from his Court by Major Harrison; that prior to this, a greater indignity had been put on him by the imprisonment, at the Shahgassee's request, of his senior military commandant, Shukur Khan, and two trusted Munshis, Gul Muhammad and Saleh Muhammad; that he had gone to Sukkur to meet the Governor-General, but as he could not talk English he could not explain all he had to say, and had returned to Khelat hopeless; that he met the Commissioner in Kutchi, but he would not listen to any request he had to make. After this the Political Agent had left him, and Jam Ali and Mir Ibrahim Khan had escaped from Hyderabad at a time when his affairs were very desperate; that Sirdar Noordeen (the brother of Ibrahim and uncle of Jam Ali) had at once rejoined them; that they had bribed over the Beyla troops and seized the revenue, and were thieving goats and sheep up to the walls of Khelat; that he could prove, if necessary, that the occupation of Lus in the first instance was the result of the advice he received. Another point was that in the settlement made by the Commissioner in 1872 it had been decreed that the Brahooee Sirdars were to pay for the plunder of the kafilas in the Bolan, and had also to reimburse the ryots for their losses accruing from the rebellion of that year; that neither of the conditions had been fulfilled, and he had to pay for the kafilas Rupees 90,000 out of his own treasury; that his treasury was empty, and he felt very hopeless, but that if I would guarantee him fair treatment and terms based on the peace of 1872, he would come to Mustung at once. The Sirdars, in conclusion, said they had agreed to take him back my answer.

9. In reply to the Sirdars I said that I had already heard a good deal of what the Khan had asked them to convey to me when in Khelat in the cold weather; that they were perfectly at liberty to say to his Highness that I would submit to the Government any reasonable views and requests he had to advance, but that I could make no promise of any kind. I told the Sirdars to tell his Highness what the Jalawan Sirdars said in their petitions, copies of which were sent you under cover of this office No. 112, dated 24th ultimo. The Sirdars started for Khelat next day, and two days afterwards I received a letter (Appendix H.) from his Highness stating that he would leave Khelat for Mustung at an early date. He did so on the 29th of May, arriving here on the 31st of that month, as reported in this office No. 114, dated 2nd instant.

10. After the reception of his Highness, as described in the letter above referred to, I paid him a private visit at the Miri (palace); my two Sirdars were with me—Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan. With the Khan were his confidential advisers—Nawab Muhammad Khan, Mustoufi Fakir Muhammad, and Abdulla Jan. The latter is a merchant and a friend of the Khan's; he seemed to me a quiet, pleasant, sensible man.

11. We had a great deal of conversation about the past. His Highness was very strong in his remarks about Lus Beyla, saying over and over again he had been directed to occupy the country; that from the commencement of his rule to the present day he had never neglected our advice and did not intend to do so now. It would not be profitable to record all that passed. I will merely add that the interview ended satisfactorily by his appointing Nawab Muhammad Khan, Mustoufi Fakir Muhammad, and Abdulla Jan to discuss with my two Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan the terms of peace to be offered to the Brahooee Sirdars. This was to be done next day in my camp, and they were all to assemble there for the purpose.

12. The next day the native gentlemen named in the margin assembled at my camp and drew up a paper in which very fair terms of peace were entered, and such as I thought all parties ought very willingly to agree to. This paper was then taken to his Highness the Khan for approval.

Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Jamal Khan; Nawab Muhammad Khan, Mustoufi Fakir Muhammad, Abdulla Jan.

13. The Khan took some time to consider the contents of the paper. During the following day he sent to say that in the afternoon he would pay me a visit and present it to me himself.

14. That afternoon his Highness came to my camp, and at our interview presented the paper marked Appendix J. He said he agreed to the terms very willingly, and once they were arranged between him and his Sirdars he would use his utmost endeavours to prevent their being broken. That evening the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars were summoned to Mustung. The Sarawans, being quite near, they joined next day, and on the terms being read to them, they accepted them. I will now remark on the contents of the paper containing the terms of peace.

15. Proposition No. 1 asks the Government to settle about the plunder taken from the kafilas in the Mulla Pass. There are papers with me ending with your No. 144, dated

11th April 1876, showing that Government has already agreed to pay a portion of the money due. This portion is due for the kafilas of 1872. The whole sum, I believe, is not a large one. I would therefore solicit permission to inquire carefully into the total amount due to the merchants, and this done, the bills should be audited by you and paid to the merchants. My reasons for holding this opinion are as follows:

16. If the correspondence of 1872 is examined, there is clear and substantial proof to show that the mediation then effected did not, for the reasons then given, include the Jalawan Sirdars. In fact, the Commissioner's report, No. 340, dated 5th April 1872, shows that they were purposely excluded from it. At that time Mir Khan, Jam of Beyla, his son Jam Ali, and Mir Ibrahim Khan were in confinement by our order. The Government of India approved of the exclusion of Sirdar Noordeen from the mediation, provided the Commissioner was assured that his Highness the Khan had the power to coerce him.

17. But how did it all end? The Khan was not able to keep order in Lus Beyla or along that frontier. For these and other reasons he fell under the displeasure of the British and our relations with him ceased, and our authorities recommended an army should be sent to depose him. In 1874 his enemies Jam Ali and Mir Ibrahim Khan escaped from Hyderabad, and were at once joined by Noordeen (uncle of the former and brother of the latter), who had been appointed by the Khan Naib of the province of Lus. At one stroke, therefore, so to speak, the Khan lost his dearly-acquired new acquisition. Moreover, I am of opinion that a perusal of the correspondence detailing these events will leave no manner of doubt on the mind that the Khan was acting throughout according to instructions he received from the British authorities. I do not intend to quote from the old records in support of this, as it would lengthen this letter very much to do so; but a perusal of these and his Highness' own letters written to the British authorities at the time show that he is entitled, in my opinion, to the fullest and most careful consideration being given to all that then occurred to enable a just view to be taken of his Highness' position and the true state of his affairs at the present time. I may, however, here again add that I believe the kafila money claimed in addition to what the Government has already agreed to give is only a few thousand rupees. The money might be taken from any sum the Government felt inclined to present to his Highness under the provisions of Foreign Secretary's letter, No. 8 C. P., dated Delhi, 11th January 1872, para. 4, should these still be considered applicable to the present position of affairs. That they are so I feel there ought to be no doubt, as the settlement come to in 1872, to use the Khan's own words, was one "that could not stand, nor could the Sirdars, or their children's "children" have fulfilled its conditions.

18. That this was truly so will be found from a reference to the Commissioner's decree given in paragraph 23 of his report, No. 340, dated 5th April 1872, to the address of the Hon. the Governor of Bombay. Therein it was directed that the Brahooees should give up the property plundered from the kafilas, and "that all property seized during "the late rebellion by the Sirdars and their followers from the ryots of Beloochistan, "whether in Khorassan or Kutchi, be restored."

19. This last condition was a most important one. In fact, both conditions were so. Regarding putting in force the first condition, the Khan says, in order to do so, he (not the Sirdars) was mulcted in Rupees 90,000. Regarding the second, putting it in force was a physical impossibility, as the whole of the chief towns fell for the time being into the hands of the rebels and their hungry followers, and were plundered and their contents scattered to the four winds of heaven. Shawl Kot (Quetta), Mustung, Dadar, Bagh, Gundava, and Kozdar, all fell into the hands of the rebels. When they were called upon to pay up, they were found to be so poor, they could only pay for a portion of the injury done to kafilas, and nothing for that done to the ryots, leading to his Highness the Khan's remarks given above.

20. These conditions might have been considered necessary ones, but the Khan's complaint is, that although he was guided by our authorities in all he did, not only were the conditions imposed on the rebellious Sirdars ignored by these very authorities, but he states he himself was partly held responsible for them by the officer who decreed them.

21. In reference to the Khan's remarks in paragraph 2 of his memorandum about the cost of the war with the Jam and what led to it, I have already to some extent gone into the latter question, and now leave the matter with you, as I am fully aware the whole case of the Jam from first to last is under your consideration. I will only add that the Khan seems to have no very ill feeling towards the Jam, and would, as said in his memorandum, willingly see him released on his guaranteeing to keep the peace. Of course, he should be required not to wage war on the Khan or the Khan on him, and any attempt by either side to do so should be discountenanced by us. That this was the old policy maintained in the days of Mr. Mansfield, Commissioner in Sind, will, I think, be gathered from a perusal of his No. 617, dated 26th June 1865, to the address of the Political Superintendent. The other requests contained in the Khan's memorandum, on which the basis of a permanent peace as proposed by him should be made, do not seem to require further comment by me.

22. The Khan since his arrival here has been receiving daily all the elder sons—in fact, all the Sarawan Sirdars but Sirdar Moolla Mahomed—in Durbar. They are to-day dining with him. Pride keeps Sirdar Moolla Mahomed a little aloof for the present. I do not doubt, however, that this will after a few days be easily arranged. Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan, like myself, has suffered much from fever during these transactions, and I have felt the temporary loss of his services very much. To-day he is reported better.

23. In conclusion, I desire to state that the only contretemps of any kind, as far as I am aware, that have occurred since this mission started on the 4th of April last for the Bolan Pass are—(1.) the skirmish in the Mulla Pass reported in this office telegram of the 10th instant, but which turns out to have been an affair of no importance; (2.) the plunder in the Bolan Pass by some Dumar Pathan thieves of my dâk, which they carried off. The plunderers were followed by my people in the Bolan, who came up with four men. A fight took place and three out of the four were killed, and on their bodies being examined, they proved to be Murrees. This is unfortunate, but it is just one of those things incidental to the position and must be remedied, which I shall at once set about doing. The plunder of the dâk is quite unaccountable, as the two Dumar-Kakar headmen were with me here in camp at the very time it occurred. It is evidently due to some local quarrel, and will, I doubt not, be easily remedied. I have every reason to believe I shall recover the missing dâk and be able to punish the thieves. I am taking greater precautions for the safety of the mail-bags for the future. So safe have things hitherto been, that the mails went from chauki to chauki accompanied by only two horsemen.

Appendix A.

Translation of a letter, dated Camp Kirta, 14th April 1876, from Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

The Commissioner, Colonel Munro, informed your Highness that I was about to proceed to the Bolan Pass to re-open it to the kafilas returning from India to Khorassan. I arrived here with the caravans two days ago, and your Highness will be glad to hear that they are being escorted in safety through the pass by the tribes themselves. I should have informed you of this fact before, but I have been much occupied on account of cholera having appeared amongst the troops. I am very happy to be able to tell you that the disease has almost disappeared, and there is every reason to believe it will do so entirely within the next few days.

Your Highness' Naib, Pir Jan, has been with me during my march, and has given me great satisfaction by the way he has executed your Highness' commands in at once attending to all requisitions for assistance made upon him by me since I entered your Highness' territory.

I forward this letter through Naib Pir Jan, and it is with the highest satisfaction I have to inform your Highness that I am the bearer of letters from his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor, Punjab, to your Highness' address in reply to your letters sent through me to these exalted personages. Be good enough to inform me whether it is your Highness' wish and pleasure that these letters should be sent to you direct, or whether I will retain them until I can present them in person when we meet in pursuance of the terms arranged between us when I visited your Highness in Khelat in the cold weather.

I will be delighted to meet your Highness either at Quetta, Siriab, Mustung, or any other place most convenient for your Highness. I myself am most anxious that our meeting should take place at Mustung, and trust that your Highness will be able to arrange to meet me there.

In consultation with Naib Pir Jan I have asked the Naib of Dadar not to interfere with the Brahooees cutting their crops, telling him I would be responsible to your Highness did he comply with my request.

Receive the expression of my high consideration for your Highness, and believe me to be your Highness' sincere friend.

Appendix B.

Translation of a letter, dated 21st April 1876, from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter informing me of your arrival at Kirta with the caravans, and that you could not write me before as you were much occupied on account of cholera having appeared amongst the troops, but that the disease had now almost disappeared.

I have perused your letter, and am highly pleased with its contents. I was expecting its arrival for some time, as Colonel Munro in a letter he sent me told me you would write. Now you have written from Kirta, and I am heartily glad to hear of your arrival there. I hope, by God's blessing, you will soon get free of the cholera, and that He will in His mercy grant this. It is a great pleasure to me to hear of the good conduct of my servant Naib Pir Jan. I placed him in attendance on you to comply with your wants and orders. It is very gratifying to me that he has done so well, and hearing of it has delighted me and made me happy.

With reference to what you write telling me that you are the bearer of letters from his Excellency the Viceroy of India and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor to my address, and to your asking whether you should send them to me direct or present them yourself when we meet, in reply I beg to state that the news has made me very happy. Be good enough to send the letters direct to me at your earliest convenience.

With reference to your query as to where we should meet, at Siriab, Mustung, or elsewhere, in reply I beg to say that I am very anxious to meet you, but on account of the appearance of cholera in your camp, it is only right and proper to delay our meeting until the danger of infection is passed. Khelat territory is your own property. Please encamp at Mustung, Quetta, or elsewhere for a short time, or until all danger from the cholera is passed, and if you will then proceed to Khelat I shall be very glad, as it is a very convenient place for us to meet.

I notice what you say about the caravans having been escorted to Shawl Kot (Quetta) by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, and the other Brahooee Sirdars. I would have preferred had troops escorted the caravans, as it is due to the folly of the Brahooees that the Bolan Pass has ever been closed to trade.

In reference to what you say about the produce of the Brahooee lands, and that you and Pir Jan discussed the point, and that you agreed to be responsible to me if the Brahooee lands were not interfered with, I have attended to your wishes in the matter and confirmed them, and have directed my Naibs not to interfere with the Brahooee lands in any way, although I should have preferred waiting before giving the order until after we had met, because you are aware of the bad conduct of the Brahooees and the injury they have done to Kutchi.

All is well here. Consider me always as your friend, and continue to correspond with me.

Enclosure 4 in No. 105.

Appendix C.

Translation of a letter, dated 26th April 1876, from Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

I have received your Highness' letter and have taken time to consider its contents before replying, as I am greatly disappointed to find that your Highness hesitates coming to meet me according to our agreement made when I was in Khelat. I was in hopes that your Highness would be so highly gratified at hearing of my mission and of the high consideration of the British Government for your Highness in sending it into the country, that on being made aware of its approach your Highness would have shown your great appreciation of its objects by readily appointing Mustung, as proposed by me, for our place of meeting.

Your Highness must be aware that your coming to meet me as proposed is quite in accordance with precedent, and was the course adopted by your predecessors on the occasion of officers of my rank being deputed by the Supreme authority to confer with the Khans of Khelat on weighty matters connected with the interests of the two Governments. Your Highness must be perfectly aware that the object of the mission I am conducting is pregnant with results connected with the welfare of the Khelat State, and that before rejecting my proposal naming the place where we should meet, you should give the subject your Highness' most complete and careful consideration.

The letters to your Highness' address from his Excellency the Viceroy and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor cannot, your Highness must be aware, be sent by the hand of an ordinary messenger. I did think of deputing Captain Wylie, with a suitable escort, to take them to your Highness and deliver them with proper respect, and, after doing so, to return with your Highness to my camp; but now there is some doubt as to where we are to meet, I will retain them until I hear from you again.

Enclosure 5 in No. 105.

Appendix D.

Translation of a letter, dated 29th April 1876, from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

I desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter informing me of your good health and that we should meet at Mustung. I have made myself fully acquainted with its contents.

On hearing of your appointment by the Supreme Government on your present duty I felt very happy, and issued orders to my Naibs and officials to pay you every respect and attention and to provide you with supplies.

But I am sorry to find that since your arrival in the country you have allowed the disloyal Brahooees, who do not wish my Government well, to join you, and that you have treated them with every consideration.

When such is the case and these disloyal men are with you, how can I with any degree of happiness come to Mustung to meet you? But notwithstanding what I say I am still happy to do as you desire. I know you are my friend, and my hopes are all centred in you. The whole of Khelat, Mustung, and Shawl Kot belongs to you. There is no difference between these places; I hope therefore you will march from Mustung for Khelat, and permit me to meet you at the place called the Zearut or at Kurk. These places are one march from Khelat.

As we are to meet, the best plan is for you to present to me yourself the letters from his Excellency the Viceroy and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor.

All is well here. Be comforted from my side. Consider me your friend, and continue to correspond with me.

Enclosure 6 in No. 105.

Appendix E.

Translation of a letter, dated 1st May 1876, from Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

I have received your Highness' letter of the 29th April, and am grieved to find that your Highness still hesitates to come and meet me. My instructions from the Government of India direct me to name a suitable place for us to meet and to invite your Highness to join me there to confer with you regarding the important objects of my mission, which, as your Highness knows, are deeply connected with your own interests and Government and those of the British Government.

In pursuance of these instructions I have invited your Highness to meet me at Mustung, where my camp now is. I must leave it to your Highness to say whether you will join me here or not. The responsibility of your not doing so must rest entirely on your Highness. Mustung is the place where your brother, the late Nusseer Khan, on an occasion similar to the present one, met General Jacob. It is only three marches from Khelat, and in every way suitable as a place of meeting.

My friend, what you say about the Brahooee Sirdars' conduct causes me great sorrow. You must know well that until your quarrel with the Sirdars is arranged there can be no peace in Khelat, and that consequently British and Khelat interests must continue to receive the greatest possible injury. Is this well? Is it to your own personal interests to refuse the reconciliation offered by all your Sirdars and Chiefs? If your Highness continues to refuse it, the responsibility must, as in the case of your refusal to meet me, rest solely with your Highness.

Your Highness states I have conferred high favours on the Brahooees. My friend, what I have done is to receive their profound submission and to listen to their desire to submit to your Highness on fair and reasonable terms. Their co-operation with me in sending the returning kafilas through the Bolan Pass, and in helping to keep it open was necessary to the safety of the caravans, and could not be dispensed with.

The truth of this, I am certain, if your Highness will consider the matter from a proper point of view and in a fair spirit, must be apparent to your Highness.

Your Highness may rely that in all these matters I have not forgotten your Highness' interests, or that your Highness holds the high position of Ruler of the Khelat State. But at the same time I do not forget, for it is daily forcibly through passing events brought to my notice, that throughout the length and breadth of the land the Chiefs and Sirdars are in a state of rebellion, and that for 15 years your Highness has found yourself wholly unable to suppress it, or unaided to settle the quarrel which has led to it. Only three days ago, at the request of your Highness, I wrote to the Jalawan Sirdars telling them you desired them not to continue in opposition to you. I also told them the object of my visiting Khelat under the orders of the Supreme Government, and that I hoped your Highness was prepared to give them fair terms of peace. Both Jalawans and Sarawans are prepared to submit to your Highness on fair and reasonable terms, and I trust your Highness will not refuse their request, but will arrange these in accordance with the wish of the British Government in concert and communication with me.

My friend, whoever told you that the Brahooee Sirdars were with me in camp could not be your Highness' well-wisher. No Sirdar is with me. Directly they had completed the duty on which I had summoned them I sent them back to their homes. I gave them this order purely out of consideration for your Highness, and in the hope that your Highness would in consequence feel ease and confidence in joining my camp at Mustung.

What your Highness says about your Naibs having orders to help and attend on me is perfectly true, and I desire your Highness to accept my sincere acknowledgments for your so kindly considering all my wants and requirements. All your servants have shown their loyalty to your Government by attending to your orders. Only Faiz Muhammad, the Naib of Dadar, is careless and neglectful. In order to enable me to arrange for the safety of kafilas going through the Bolan, I directed him to intimate the arrival of any kafila at Dadar. This he does not do but sends them through the pass without arranging himself, or through me, for an escort for their protection. I trust your Highness will be pleased to warn Faiz Muhammad of the responsibility he incurs by so acting, and that your Highness will take steps to prevent his so doing for the future.

In order that your Highness may be no longer in doubt as to the authorization under which I am now in Khelat territory, I have decided that the time has come to transmit to your Highness the letters of his Excellency the Viceroy and the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. These letters will be conveyed to you by the hands of Captain Wylie and Dr. Duke, who are accompanied by a suitable escort of cavalry. I commend to your Highness' serious consideration the contents of his Excellency the Viceroy's letter. His Excellency desires you to take my advice, which simply is, as recorded above, to join my camp at the earliest date possible, and in concert with me to arrange the quarrel on fair and just terms now existing between yourself and the Jalawan and Sarawan Sirdars.

Appendix F.

Dated Camp Mustung, 15th May 1876.

From Captain H. Wylie, 1st Punjab Cavalry, on special duty, to Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty. (Extract.)

I have the honour to report that in accordance with your orders I marched from this place on the 2nd instant for Khelat to present to his Highness the Khan letters from his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, from his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, and from you.

My orders were to bring back a reply, or, in the event of his Highness wishing to come to Mustung, to place myself and the detachment of troops with me at his disposal as escort.

I was accompanied by Surgeon O. T. Duke, by a squadron of the 4th Punjab Cavalry under Captain T. Shepherd, and by our Beelooch Sirdars, Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan. On the 4th May we reached Khelat, and about 4 miles from that place were met by Gour Khan, a nephew of the Khan's, and by his Highness' Vakeel, Muhammad Khan, who were escorted by about 50 sowars. On arriving in camp a salute of 7 guns was fired from the Miri.

The same afternoon, accompanied by Captain Shepherd, Dr. Duke, and Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, I proceeded to the Miri to pay my respects to the Khan.

We were received at the door of the Durbar-room by his Highness and by his eldest son Mir Mahmoud Khan, and after introducing to him the officers above named, we took our seats at the Khan's right hand.

During the conversation which ensued, the Khan asked questions as to your rank and that of Colonel Munro. How many British officers were at Mustung, and what our losses had been during the recent attack of cholera, to all of which I replied. I imagined (perhaps more from his manner than words) that he was still somewhat uncertain as to your exact position and that of Colonel Munro. He also inquired of Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan, the extent of his powers as Magistrate, and asked me the strength of the Punjab Frontier Force, and if I was in civil or military employ, &c. For the rest our conversation was purely an exchange of civilities, and we shortly took our leave.

His Highness the Khan returned our visit at 5 p.m. the following day (5th May). He was received with a general salute; the whole of the squadron off duty being under arms. He stayed a considerable time and seemed pleased with his reception. The conversation was principally about troops and horses, and before leaving he carefully inspected the detachment, and had the horses filed past him.

I took an opportunity of saying that I had brought letters for his Highness from the Viceroy and from the Lieutenant-Governor, and also one from you, which I would with his leave present to him in Durbar the next day. To this he agreed, and the hour was fixed for 11 a.m.

About 10 a.m. the following day (6th May) Vakeel Muhammad Khan came to our camp, and at 11 I proceeded to the Miri, accompanied by Captain Shepherd, Dr. Duke, Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, and the native officers of the 4th Punjab Cavalry detachment, and by a small guard.

We were received with the usual ceremonies, and after sitting a short time the Durbar-room was cleared by order of the Khan, only about a dozen of his own people remaining, and on our side a still smaller number.

I then presented to his Highness, with all respect, the letters sent to him by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India and his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and by you. I assured him in a few words that you had been sent into Beloochistan by the orders of the Supreme Government, and that remembering the respect due both to the Khan himself and to the letters of such high personages as the Viceroy and the Lieutenant-Governor, you had sent us three British officers to be the bearers of them to his Highness, and you had ordered me to await his reply, or, if it was his pleasure to return with us to Mustung, to place myself and the squadron at his service as escort; that you would receive him there and gladly enter on arrangements for the settlement of his affairs. I added there was no use my saying anything more, as he would himself see all that the Government wanted in the letters which I had just presented to him.

To this his Highness replied that there was not now much to say, but that there would be a great deal to talk about afterwards; that he would carefully read and consider the letters with his advisers, and that to-morrow evening he would let me know his decision. He finished up by saying that he was obliged to consider his "Izut;" that he was a Ruler over a country as large as that held by five Indian Rajas, and some more words to the same effect. After this we took our leave and returned to our camp.

The Khan did not bring me his reply the next day, but on the afternoon of the 8th he came to our camp, and was received with proper ceremony.

On entering the tent he dismissed all his attendants but some six men, and I on my part sent all our people away except Captain Shepherd, Dr. Duke, and Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan. The Khan's Munshi then produced a letter which is in answer to yours, and read it aloud. The Khan then, of his own free will, excused himself for not having answers to the Viceroy's and Lieutenant-Governor's letters ready, but said they would be sent to me the following day, if I would kindly wait for them.

Before leaving he had some conversation with us on the state of affairs in Sind.

He asked Colonel Munro's exact position, and was told he had charges of the whole Belooch frontier from the sea upwards. He then asked what Sir W. Merewether's powers still were, and was told he was still Commissioner in Sind and possessed the same powers as formerly, except along the frontier and at Jacobabad, but that the whole of the political work of Beloochistan had been handed over to Colonel Munro. He asked several questions about the Bombay Presidency, and if Sir W. Merewether was likely to be made its Governor; he further remarked that if Sind were annexed to the Punjab, Bombay would become such a small Presidency as scarcely to require a Governor, as he said he had been told that Baroda had already been taken from it. He talked intelligently of the great benefit we should derive from the completion of the Sind, Punjab, and Delhi Railway between Multan and Kurrachee.

* * * * * * * *

On the evening of the 9th the Khan's letters for the Viceroy and Lieutenant-Governor were brought to me, and on the morning of the 10th we commenced our return march, reaching this on the 12th May.

Appendix G.

Translation of a letter, dated 9th May 1876, from his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

I desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter informing me of your good health, and sending me letters from his Excellency the Viceroy and the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor by the hands of British officers and by Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, and Jamal Khan, Lugari.

Your letter which accompanied reached me at a very happy moment. I have perused it and fully understood its contents. The receipt of the letters from the Governors has made me very happy. There is no doubt as to the kind desires of the British Government towards me.

In reference to your invitation to me to come to Mustung to meet you, I beg to state that I am subject to the British Government and under its authority. Should orders have come to me by a peon even I should at once attend to them and do as directed, how much more readily then would I not do as required by you, who are my friend, in whom all my hopes are centred. Mustung is my own country; but had you directed me to go to any place in foreign territory I would have at once gone there to join your camp.

But my reason for not joining you at Mustung is that your desire for me to meet you there is caused on account of your wish to settle the quarrel between my Government and the Brahooees. Now the Brahooees are a disloyal people and have raided my country and caused injury to my people, and I do not feel it would be to my honour and dignity to settle my affairs with such disloyal men. If therefore I came to Mustung and did not settle with them, you would feel greatly disheartened.

But were I sure that you would take compensation from the Brahooees for the injury they have caused me and my country, and for the losses caused to kafilas, I would at once join you at Mustung in order that this might be done.

In regard to what you say that Mustung is the place where the late General Jacob was met by my brother Nusseer Khan, this is true enough, but the circumstances were different. My brother went first to Jacobabad, then General Jacob came to Mustung, where my brother met him, and all arrangements with the Brahooees were made by the British authorities through my brother.

In reference to what you say that until my quarrel with the Brahooees is settled there can be no peace in Khelat, and that the present unsettled state of the country has now endured for 15 years; that the Brahooees are quite prepared to come to terms, and that should I refuse them such terms the responsibility of doing so must rest with me; in reply, I beg to point out that Sir William Merewether settled my affairs with the Brahooees; therefore the present dispute is not 15 years old.

When the Brahooees were dealt with by the British authorities solely through me, I was able to coerce them by force of arms, and made them flee the country. Some went to Afghanistan and elsewhere, and the country thus remained in peace, and the Bolan Pass became safe for traffic, and there was no one to injure traffic or the people of the country.

But that very year Sir William Merewether, Colonel Phayre, and Captain Harrison interfered in my affairs and settled these with the Brahooees, who were ordered to pay compensation for kafilas plundered. This the Brahooees could not pay, and quarrels again broke out, which were due to the interference of the British officers already referred to.

In regard to what you say about your receiving the Brahooees out of consideration for me and to obtain their submission, all I have to say in reply is, that I do not think such treatment redounds to my honour. Truly I am the subject of the British Government, but I want the British Government in such matters to treat me as it has treated the Amir of Cabul, Shere Ali Khan. The Government has made his enemies prisoners, making over some of them to him, and putting others in jail. I desire that my enemies should be treated in this way. This was what was done during the reign of my brother. Such should be the treatment shown to me now, and no direct communication should be held with the Brahooees.

I notice what you say about the Jalawan Chiefs, and that you had written to ask them to abstain from raiding the country. In reply, I beg to say that no Jalawan Chief is left to whom you could write. There are only some bad characters collected in Jalawan with the object of causing injury to me and my people. They are persuaded to act in this way by the Sarawan Sirdars, who send them secretly word to create disturbances, and then assure you it is the Jalawan Sirdars who are so acting.

In reply to what you say that whoever told me that the Brahooees are in your camp could not have been my well-wisher, all that I have to say is, that I know all that has gone on: how the Brahooees joined you at Kirta in the Bolan, and remained with you until a few days ago, when you dismissed them to their homes.

I notice what you say particularly about the conduct of Naib Faiz Muhammad and the kafilas. Regarding these (the kafilas) some contradictory orders were issued and brought to my notice by Naib Pir Jan; therefore I wrote to Naib Faiz Muhammad not to allow the kafilas to pass, but the merchants would not be detained and pressed on, and the Naib was powerless to detain them; therefore the fault was not his but the merchants', as had he detained them he feared their making false complaints to you.

Please on receipt of my letters sent for his Excellency the Viceroy and the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor receive and forward them, and yourself obtain a reply and communicate it to me.

All is well. Consider me your friend, and continue to correspond with me.

Enclosure 9 in No. 105.

Appendix H.

Translation of a letter, dated 17th May 1876, from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

I desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter informing me of your welfare and inviting me to meet you, and that I should without any hesitation write you as to whether or not I am prepared to come to meet you at Mustung, and that you had sent to me Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan. This letter of yours reached me at a very happy moment.

The Sirdars have arrived here and informed me of your kind desires towards me. I believe you to be my friend and my hopes are centred in you.

What my own wishes are I have already written in the letters I have addressed to his Excellency the Viceroy and the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor. But as it is also your desire that I should come to meet you at Mustung, I am very glad to do so. I will at once prepare for my journey to your camp, and trust to leave this on the 1st Jamadi-ul-awul 1293 (25th May 1876).

All is well. Continue to correspond with me.

Translation of a memorandum drawn up by his Highness the Khan of Khelat regarding the settlement of his quarrel with his Sirdars, and presented by him to Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, in Durbar, on the 6th June 1876.

Arrangements should be made by the British Government to compensate the Candahar merchants whose kafilas were plundered in the Mulla, Takari, and Kazak Passes by the Jalawans, who also realized transit dues from some of these kafilas. The merchants are with me and are clamorous for a settlement.

2. In accordance with the written order of Sir William Merewether annexed * to this, I took possession of the province of Lus Beyla, and incurred great expense in doing so. This country should be made over to me or annexed to British India, or I should receive from the British the expenses incurred in the war against the Jam. If none of these proposals are adopted, then the next best thing to do is to release Jam Mir Khan, now in confinement in British territory, but this should be conditional on his ceasing to wage war on me and causing injury to my country. He should be required to render the same allegiance to my Government as he did to the Governments of former Khans of Khelat, and I on my part will engage not to encroach on his rights and privileges.

3. The Brahooee Sirdars should be required to expel from the country my ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed, who treacherously escaped from Khelat notwithstanding my servant Nawab Mahomed Khan was security for him. The ex-Wuzeer is doing all he can to keep up disturbances throughout the length and breadth of the land. After a permanent peace has been arranged on the condition that the ex-Wuzeer leaves the Khelat State, I will allow his family (who are in Khelat) to go with him.

4. By the settlement come to in 1872 by Sir William Merewether it was decreed that the Sarawan Brahooees should pay compensation for the kafila they plundered in the Bolan Pass. This compensation they could not pay. I had to give Rs. 35,000 to the merchants. I had also to pay Rs. 55,000 to the merchants that were plundered by the Murrees. I had thus a total sum of Rs. 90,000 to pay merchants on account of kafilas plundered by the Brahooees. It was decreed that they should pay, but as they had not the means I had to do so. I received, after the settlement, a lakh of rupees from the Government for my own use, but by this means I only received Rs. 10,000. This was not what the British Government intended; I therefore desire that the money should be refunded to me.

5. The annual subsidy of Rs. 50,000 which I used to receive has now for three years ceased, but I do not feel I have committed any fault to have caused this. Formerly the Khelat Government used to levy transit fees at one rupee per maund. The British Government reduced this to 8 annas per maund, and the Rs. 50,000 was given as compensation.

6. My Commandant Shukur Khan and my Munshis Mulla Saleh Muhammad and Gul Muhammad were taken from me and put in prison by the British Government without their having committed any fault. I shall feel obliged by the British Government releasing them and allowing them to depart in peace.

7. I desire to appoint Nawab Muhammad Khan, who is a well-wisher of my Government, to attend on Major Sandeman as my agent.

8. I desire that the share of the transit fees to which the Brahooees are entitled by ancient usage shall be continued to them as decreed by Sir William Merewether.

9. Whatever terms of peace the British Government desire to give the Brahooees on the part of my Government that I will agree to. I will not violate terms. Let the past be forgotten. I will restore to the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars their ancestral lands; and should they at any future time violate the conditions of peace, before punishing them I will report what has occurred to the British Government through the Political Agent at Khelat, and after receiving sanction (from British) I will then punish the offenders. On the other hand, should my Naibs and officers cause them injury contrary to custom and ancient usage, and should I not on being referred to do justice, then I am willing that my case should be appealed through the Political Officer at Khelat to the British Government for orders.

10. The Brahooees should, according to precedent and old rule, serve me and obey my orders, and I on my part will confer favours on them, as my ancestors did.

11. Should the British Government approve of these desires of mine as recorded herein, then my Government will hold itself responsible for the safety of the Bolan, Mulla, Raj, Kedj, Mekran, and all other Khorassan Passes, and I will do my best to keep these Passes open, as desired by the British Government.

No. 106.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 30th June 1876.

24th June.—His Highness the Khan sent for perusal letters to his address from the Commandant of his troops and Naib Abdul Latif informing his Highness of the arrival of the troops at Khelat. The letters stated that some of the baggage had been plundered en route to Khelat, and that one camel and one horse were missing. The depredations complained of were supposed by the Naib to have been the act of some Jattak Brahooee thieves.

The mail bag, reported to have been carried off by thieves in diary for the week ending 16th June, was recovered on the 17th of that month by Kadirdina, brother of Sirdar Alladina Koord. This fact was omitted to be reported in last week's diary.

2. 25th June.—Sirdar Rahman Khan Zagar Mingul, Chief of Nushki, brought a charge of oppression against the Naib of Nushki. He was directed to lay his complaint before his Highness the Khan. It was arranged that Sirdar Asad Khan should accompany him.

3. 26th June.—Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan Mazari and Jamal Khan Lughari visited Major Sandeman to-day. They stated that Sirdar Asad Khan had taken the Chief of Nushki to his Highness, who had in Durbar heard the complaint of oppression he had to make against the Naib of that place; that the Khan had carefully examined the sunnuds Rahman Khan had to produce in proof of his statement that the Naib had contrary to their provisions taken possession of a portion of the produce of his lands. His Highness after inquiry admitted the justice of the Sirdar's complaint, and issued orders to the Naib of Nushki to at once release the Sirdar's lands. His Highness spoke very kindly to Asad Khan, and was much pleased that Rahman Khan's case had been brought to his notice. Rahman Khan is a Chief of some importance, and his daughter is betrothed to the eldest son of his Highness the Khan, Mir Mahmud Khan.

4. 27th June.—Letters were received to-day from Mirs Jam Ali Khan, Ibrahim Khan, Gohur Khan, also from ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed Khan. They were written from Zehri, and stated that the Sirdars intended to halt there for two days and would then march to join Major Sandeman at Mustung.

Wakil Muhammad Khan, by his Highness' order, visited Major Sandeman and asked permission to discuss with that officer privately the lucern tax. Permission being at once given, the Wakil asked Major Sandeman to settle the matter by passing orders himself regarding it. In reply, Major Sandeman pointed out the impossibility of his issuing, as requested, such an order, as doing so would be direct interference on his part with the administration of the Khelat State. He told the Wakil that his advice to his Highness was that he should, as before recommended, send for the Sarawan Sirdars and discuss with them the tax in all its bearings; and that if the Khan desired it, Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan would be directed to attend the meeting and aid the two sides in arriving at a fair decision regarding it. Another matter the Wakil said his Highness the Khan wished to ask Major Sandeman about was regarding a Pathan who had been placed by his Highness' order in confinement on account of showing disrespect to Major Harrison when he was Political Agent at Khelat. The man had now been in confinement for nearly four years, and his Highness wished to set him free, unless doing so was contrary to Major Sandeman's wishes. In reply, Major Sandeman said he thought the matter rested entirely with his Highness. The prisoner apparently had suffered a long confinement, which was probably a greater punishment than the offence merited, and he certainly thought that did his Highness desire to release the man he should do so.

5. 28th June.—To-day Sirdar Asad Khan took the Shoranzai Brahooee to his Highness the Khan and presented them to him in Durbar. They complained to his Highness that the Naib of Mustung Faiz Muhammad had levied from them certain portions of the produce of their lands contrary to their sunnuds, which they produced, and they asked his Highness to inquire into their case and do justice. His Highness sent for Naib Faiz Muhammad and inquired from him regarding the complaint of the Brahooees. After this his Highness fixed a day for hearing the case and promised to do justice regarding it.

6. 29th June.—Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan paid their respects to his Highness the Khan, and had a long conversation with him on the subject of keeping open the trade routes.

7. 30th June.—To-day his Highness the Khan visited Major Sandeman at his camp, and they had a long consultation on the subject of permanently keeping open the Bolan Pass to traffic. The result of their joint deliberations was submitted to the Commissioner in the form of a memorandum signed by his Highness and Major Sandeman under cover of this office letter No. 131, dated 1st July 1876.

In diary No. 417, dated 31st ultimo, by District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee, sent for perusal by the Commissioner, amongst other reports it is stated that "the Commander of the Khan's forces, by name * Mosun Khan, "who killed Noordeen Mingul and seized all the property "of Wuzeer Atta Mahomed, which amounted to 1½ lakhs "of rupees, and refused to give it up, has escaped with "50 mounted horsemen to Candahar." Inquiry has been made regarding this report, and it has been found to be quite incorrect.

* Commander Mosun Khan is at the present time commanding in the Khan's absence the Khelat troops in the Fort of Khelat.—R. G. S.

The report contained in diary No. 437, for the week ending 17th June 1876, by District Superintendent Police, Kurrachee, "that cash amounting to 1½ lakhs of rupees, being the "amount of revenue realised by his Highness the Khan from Kutchi Mekran, and 500 "camels belonging to him were looted on their way to Khelat by Gohur Khan, Sirdar "of Zehris, and Jutkie, Sirdar of Brahooee," is without any foundation whatever.

No. 107.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 7th July 1876.

1st July 1876.—Ressaldar Malguzar Khan, commanding the Belooch Guides stationed in the town of Haji-ka-Shahr in Kutchi, reported that two Murrees came for purposes of their own to Seebee; they were met by some of the Kurk villagers, who killed one of them.

Sirdar Alladina Koord, in charge of the Bolan Pass arrangements, reported that he had sent men to Haji-ka-Shahr to meet the kafila and mess stores shortly expected to arrive there from Jacobabad. They were directed to take charge of the kafila and stores, and to escort the former to Quetta and the latter to Mustung.

2. 2nd July.—Letters arrived at Mustung from Mirs Jam Ali, Gohur Khan, Ibrahim Khan, and other Jalawan Chiefs. These reported the arrival of the Sirdars at Iskalku en route for Major Sandeman's camp.

His Highness the Khan sent his Wakil, Muhammad Khan, to Major Sandeman with a message, to the effect that his Highness could no longer afford to give the Sarawan Sirdars and their followers daily allowance, and his Highness trusted that he might be relieved of the burden, as it was uncertain how long they might be detained at Mustung. Major Sandeman agreed to pay Rupees 50 a day towards feeding the Sarawan Sirdars and their followers.

Inquiry was instituted into the complaints of the Sarawan Sirdars about the confiscation of certain of their lands by Naib Faiz Muhammad of Mustung. The matter was brought to the notice of his Highness the Khan by Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan Mazari. His Highness, in reply, said he did not desire to oppress any one, and if his Naib had seized lands not belonging to the Khelat Government they would be released. His Highness appointed a Committee to investigate the matter.

Major Sandeman, with his Highness the Khan's permission, had a long conversation with Naib Faiz Muhammad of Mustung in presence of Wakil Nawab Muhammad Khan. He pointed out to the Naib the impolicy of certain oppressive acts of his regarding which the Brahooees and ryots had bitterly complained, and counselled him in his master's interests to discontinue them for the future; that his Highness the Khan, when they were told to him, had stated that they had been committed without his Highness' authorisation, and that he (the Naib) was responsible for them, as his Highness had told him that although he was to rigidly maintain the rights of the Khelat Government, he was on no account to usurp those of others, &c. The Naib did not seem much to relish the conversation, and complained that although Major Sandeman and his Highness had together arranged that during the stay of the Khan at Mustung the Brahooees were to supply the troops with lucern, several of them had not done so. The Naib, however, could not name the parties he complained of, and it was clear that the statement was not true. The Wakil, when taking his leave, said he would report the matter fully to his Highness the Khan, who would for the future prevent Naib Faiz Muhammad from doing illegal acts.

3. 3rd July.—Letters were received to-day from Mirs Jam Ali, Gohur Khan, and Ibrahim Khan, stating that on account of the long march from Lus Beyla the baggage camels had suffered severely; that the change of fodder and climate had acted injuriously on the animals, and they had lost 80 camels and 20 horses on the road. They had, therefore, come lately by easy marches. They would, however, arrive at Mustung on the morning of the 5th.

A letter was received intimating that the Guide Belooch sowars were for the present, by order of the Government of India, to remain primarily under the Jacobabad military authorities. This news caused Major Sandeman much anxiety, as he has 100 of the Guides on duty in Kutchi in connexion with the Bolan Pass arrangements, and this order, he feared, would injuriously affect these. He decided to consider the matter well before again referring the question to the Commissioner with a view to its being represented to the Government of India for reconsideration, as it is one of grave political importance. These Guides were subjects of his Highness the Khan, and resided at Lehri in Kutchi, and were translated from thence to Jacobabad for purely political reasons. They were then taken into Government service. As at present constituted there can be no doubt as to the necessity that exists for these men being permanently placed under the political officers. They have never done regular military duty and are not suited for it, while as now employed in Kutchi and in attendance on Major Sandeman at Mustung their services are very valuable. A party of them are Boogtees, and their Chief is a man of some position and influence. He and his men are at present on duty with Major Sandeman. The news of the transfer of his services from the Political to the Military Department had the effect of making him at once apply for permission to return to Jacobabad. Leave was granted him to do so, as under the circumstances it was considered undesirable longer to employ him on political work. He is the son of the late Alam Khan, Chief of the Kulpar Boogtees, who was the person, it is believed, who betrayed the movements of the Boogtees to the Sind authorities on the occasion of their defeat many years ago, when some 400 of them were destroyed.

The authority conveying this intimation by letter is not mentioned. — A. A. Munro.

The Chief of the Mazarani Murrees (Bolan Pass Murrees), by name Kechi Khan, waited on Major Sandeman, and asked to be employed under the Koord Sirdar in escorting kafilas. He was informed in reply that prior to his making the request Sirdar Alladina had been directed to employ him in the way requested.

4. 4th July.—To-day Takki Khan, the Mir Munshi of Sirdar Jam Ali, arrived in camp, and paid his respects to Major Sandeman. He said his master and the Jalawan Sirdars had arrived at Amanala and would be at Mustung the following morning. He stated that his master had 300 regular infantry, 200 cavalry, and 500 camel sowars with him, and he was anxious that the Jam Saheb should be received with a salute of guns, as he was the son of an independent prince, Mir Khan, the Jam of Lus Beyla. After a full consideration of all the circumstances connected with Sirdar Mir Khan's case, now a prisoner in Bombay, Major Sandeman decided that a salute of guns should not be fired on the arrival of Mir Jam Ali. The Mir Munshi was, however, assured that his master on arrival would be received with every attention and with the honour due to the son of the Prince of Lus Beyla, which country is now held by him in his father's name. A long conversation took place between the Mir Munshi and Major Sandeman regarding Jam Mir Khan's affairs, and the imprisonment and flight of Mirs Jam Ali and Ibrahim Khan Mingul from Hyderabad in Sind.

The Khan of Khelat's two Naibs Pir Jan and Faiz Muhammad waited on Major Sandeman by their master's order, and said they had been directed to ask for the aid of Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan when examining the sunnuds of the Brahooee who complained that their lands had been unjustly confiscated. The request was at once complied with; the Sirdars at the same time being told to report the result of the investigation direct to his Highness the Khan.

5. 5th July.—Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan to-day paid their respects to his Highness the Khan, and reported the result of the examination of the sunnuds by the Naibs and themselves on the previous day. They said many of the sunnuds had been given by the Khan himself to the complainants, and there was no doubt whatever as to the fact of Naib Faiz Muhammad having in many instances seized lands on the most frivolous grounds; that when asked the reasons for so acting he had no sound ones to offer; that it was clear to them that he was a man of evil disposition, who greatly oppressed the people, whether Brahooce or zemindars; that he was a Dewar and of low birth, and that the appointment of such a man brought discredit on the Khelat Government. His Highness on hearing this opinion of the Sirdars regarding the Naib's character was much concerned, and directed Faiz Muhammad to cease from committing such acts as those named by the Sirdars. His Highness said he was much obliged to them for bringing these matters to his notice; that when such occurrences became known, it was only right and friendly to inform him (the Khan) regarding them, &c. His Highness then asked them to become members of the Committee appointed to investigate each case. Sirdar Moolla Muhomed of Sarawan was also to take part in investigating the matter, and they consented to join, did Major Sandeman give them permission to do so.

Permission having been obtained from the military authorities, Ressaldar Muhammad Amir Khan, 4th Punjab Cavalry, with an escort of 10 cavalry, was sent a few miles along the Mustung road to meet Mir Jam Ali and conduct him to his camp. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed having first obtained his Highness the Khan's permission, also went to meet Jam Ali. At 10 a.m. the Jam and Jalawan Sirdars arrived in camp. Altogether they were accompanied by a tribal force of between 2,000 and 3,000 men, 300 regular infantry, and 200 cavalry. Shortly after the Jam's arrival in camp Major Sandeman paid him a visit of ceremony to inquire after his and the Jalawan Sirdars' health, and to offer any assistance they might stand in need of. The young Jam was greatly pleased with the attention, saying that he had hurried as speedily as he could from Lus Beyla to Mustung, but on account of his father's absence he had many arrangements to make before he could leave his country. Jam Ali is about 25 years of age, and has a pleasant manner and pleasing face. He was eager in his endeavours to impress on Major Sandeman that he and his father were the loyal servants of the British Government and had never intentionally disregarded its wishes. His father at the time of his flight to Kurrachee was in receipt of an allowance of Rupees 15,000 a year paid him by the British Government on account of services rendered to the Telegraph Department. This allowance since the imprisonment of Jam Mir Khan had been discontinued. The young Jam was eager in his inquiries as to the object the Government had in view in detaining his father in prison now that he (Jam Ali) had possession of Lus Beyla, and he wished to know whether his father was considered a prisoner of the British Government or of his Highness the Khan. He said that to aid in obtaining his father's release, was it considered necessary, he would go to Simla or anywhere else, and do anything required of him by the British Government; that his mother had died at Hyderabad, and he was an only son, and his father and he had been separated for seven years. He entreated that his father should be released and restored with honour to his country, and was at first greatly cast down when in reply Major Sandeman said that the memorial asking for the release of Jam Mir Khan by himself and Chiefs was now before the Government, but that some time must elapse before orders could be passed on it. He seemed greatly relieved, however, to hear that everything possible had been done to place the particulars of his father's quarrel with the Khan, which had indirectly led to his present misfortunes, as clearly as possible before the Government, and that the Khan himself was not opposed, after fair conditions had been arranged, to his father's release.

6. 6th July.—Mirs Jam Ali, Gohur Khan, Ibrahim Khan, Shakar Khan, and Saleh Muhammad Jattaks, Mahim Khan Gurgnari, and other Jalawan Chiefs paid their respects to Major Sandeman, who explained to them in full Durbar the object the Government had in view in sending the mission into the country. He further explained to them fully what he knew regarding the conduct of the late Sirdar Noordeen, which had resulted in his untimely death. In reply, they one and all agreed to be guided by Major Sandeman in settling their quarrel with his Highness the Khan. The terms of peace were then fully discussed, and the basis on which a fair settlement was to be arranged was unanimously agreed to. Mir Jam Ali had a private interview with Major Sandeman, and explained at length the quarrel of the Jalawan Sirdars with the Khelat Government.

7. 7th July.—Mir Ibrahim Khan waited on Major Sandeman, and requested that in the terms of peace to be agreed upon by the Brahooee Sirdars and the Khelat Government, his Highness the Khan should, according to ancient State custom, agree to compensate him for the death of his brother, the late Sirdar Noordeen. After a long argument, in which Major Sandeman showed the Sirdar that his brother's death was entirely due to his own evil way of acting, he withdrew the claim for compensation. The next request the Sirdar advanced was that his Highness the Khan should visit him at his camp and condole with him, according to the custom of the Muhammadan religion, on account of his brother's death. Second, that the Khan should recognise the son of Sirdar Noordeen as Chief of the Minguls. In reply, Major Sandeman said he would refer the two last requests to his Highness the Khan, and endeavour to get his Highness to agree to them.

Major Sandeman, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, accompanied by the whole of the Jalawan Sirdars, attended his Highness the Khan's Durbar. Each Sirdar was introduced separately, and made full submission to his Highness the Khan. Mir Jam Ali, on the part of his father, acknowledged the supremacy of the Khan of Khelat, and said if his Highness was agreeable to abide by the ancient law of the Khelat State, so was he and his father. He spoke very feelingly and humbly, and the Khan treated him with marked respect, getting up on Jam Ali's entering the Durbar and remaining standing until he sat down. Jam Ali did not make obeisance to the Khan like the other Sirdars of the Khelat State. All he was required by custom to say on entering the Khan's presence was (Salaam alaikum.) The Khan at once replying (Alaikum salaam.) His Highness then asked after the Jam's health, &c. The Durbar on the whole passed off very well. Major Sandeman explained to his Highness the Khan what each Sirdar hoped from his Highness. His Highness replied that they might rely on his (in consultation with that officer) doing what was right and proper in regard to settling their claims and requests. Mir Sirdar Ibrahim Khan seemed to feel his position keenly, but spoke out openly, saying his brother was his Highness the Khan's Mir, and if it suited him to kill him he was king. The Khan did not reply to the Sirdar's remarks, but remained silent. His Highness, however, was very attentive to him, and on Mir Ibrahim's taking his leave, rose up and remained standing until the Sirdar had left the Durbar-room. At the close of the Durbar his Highness remarked to Major Sandeman that Jam Mir Ali, whose mother was Noordeen's sister, was a "dark likeness" of Sirdar Noordeen; that he was very glad to see him, and would show kindness to him and Mir Ibrahim Khan.

Sirdar Alladina Koord reported that some Shawani Murris left their own village and settled near the Mingul (Bolan) Brahooees; that four of them had since been killed by the Dumar-Kakars. Major Sandeman on hearing this sent orders to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to arrange if possible the matter, and prevent further bloodshed.

A memorandum by the Civil Surgeon was received and attached to the diary showing the work performed by him since his arrival at Mustung.

From Lepel Griffin, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of my letter No. 7C. of the 28th March last, enclosing copy of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor's letter to the address of the Khan of Khelat, I am now directed to forward, for information, translation of his Highness' reply, dated the 10th May, which has just been received through Major Sandeman.

Enclosure 1 in No. 108.

Translation of a letter, dated 10th May 1876, from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, Punjab.

Your Honour's kind letter, informing me of your good health, reached me at a very happy moment. I learnt from it your Honour's kind intentions towards me. I also desire to acknowledge receipt of a letter from his Excellency the Viceroy of India. The perusal of every word and every line of these letters made me very happy. There can be no doubt of the kindly feeling of his Excellency the Viceroy and of your Honour towards me. I am the subject of the British Government, and have never neglected to comply with its orders, or to make my submission to it, and from this line of conduct I will never depart.

I beg to forward herewith a letter for his Excellency the Viceroy of India, which kindly deliver, and, after having obtained a reply, kindly send to me. In reference to what you say about Major Sandeman's visiting my country, in reply I beg to say that Major Sandeman has arrived in my territory. His arrival has rejoiced me greatly. To him I have written the state of my affairs and my desires regarding them.

By the grace of God I will settle my affairs and those of my country in concert and communication with Major Sandeman, and in whatever way that officer may advise. Doing so will redound to my honour.

All is well here. Be comforted from my side, and consider me your Honour's well-wisher, and continue to favour me with your kind letters.

No. 257, dated Dera Ismail Khan, 14th July 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I have the honour to submit a letter, No. 139 of the 1st instant (with its enclosed memorandum of proceedings), from Major Sandeman, now on special duty in Khelat.

2. The letter and memorandum exhibit Major Sandeman's recent proceedings in furtherance of the instructions conveyed in paragraph 27 of the Government of India Resolution in the Foreign Department No. 2819P. of the 16th October last.

3. By those instructions he was ordered to inquire and report what could be done for the protection of trade through the Bolan Pass, and whether a system of fixed tolls on caravans could be arranged for, the proceeds of which would be distributed to the tribes in the neighbourhood who are interested in the protection of the Bolan route; and a discretion was allowed him to make such arrangements as he might deem advisable within a certain limit of expenditure.

4. The memorandum accompanying Major Sandeman's letter is a record of joint proceedings between himself and his Highness the Khan of Khelat, of proposals made, and of conclusions arrived at, in regard to keeping the Bolan Pass permanently and securely open for traffic. Major Sandeman shows that several tribes—as the Koord and Mingul Brahooees, the Mazarani and Mundai Murrees, and the Dumar-Kakar Pathans—are specially interested in the Bolan Pass; that the escort fees, which should be distributed to those tribes in proportion to the strength of escorts with the amount of security furnished to caravans passing through, have hitherto been arbitrarily given, or withheld, according to the will or caprice of the Khan of Khelat; and that the proceeds of customs dues levied at Shawl-Kot (Quetta) and Dadar have ever been considered as belonging to the Khan exclusively, subject only to a deduction of one seventh of the amount collected at Dadar, payable as a long-established perquisite to the Chief of the Sarawans.

5. The Sarawan Sirdar has, of course, been deprived of that perquisite ever since his rebellion against the Khan of Khelat, but his right to it, according to prescriptive usage, has now been fully admitted by the Khan of Khelat himself.

6. The Chief to whom Major Sandeman, with the Khan's sanction, proposes to give the immediate control of Bolan Pass arrangements is Maladina, Sirdar of the Koord Brahooees, two of whose sons are to be continuously on duty in the pass in command of escort parties of mixed Brahooee, Murree, and Pathan tribes, to be stationed at Kirta, the Dusht and Abgum, respectively, for the protection of travellers and caravans. As an additional precaution against possible misappropriation of escort fees and failure of [redacted] arrangements, the Sarawan Chief, Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, is to maintain a [redacted] supervision. The annual cost of these arrangements is estimated at Rupees [redacted] which may be reasonably realised from tolls.

7. His Highness the Khan of Khelat has, under advice, accorded a some[redacted] assent to these proposals, representing that he has been a considerable [redacted] owing to his treaty engagements with the British Government, which [redacted] levy of 8 annas only, instead of one Rupee per maund as forme[redacted] merchandise passing through. The details given in the 6th [redacted]

Sandeman's letter have been supplied by the Khan's officials, and they may, or may not, be capable of verification.

8. There can be no doubt that the Khan of Khelat considers it to be more conducive to his personal interest and benefit that caravans should be compelled to travel by the Raj and Mulla routes, and thus to come directly within the arbitrary power of exaction which would be possessed by himself and his officials, than that they should continue to use the ancient and preferable Bolan route, which possesses such palpable advantages over the others that few caravan traders would resort to those were the Bolan Pass kept open and the passage through it in safety to and fro duly maintained. Major Sandeman in the 8th paragraph of his letter clearly shows the greater advantages of the Bolan route in every way.

9. It seems unnecessary at this stage to offer an opinion in regard to what is set forth in the concluding paragraph of the letter now transmitted, as the matter will doubtless be duly considered in connexion with the affairs of Khelat generally, and our relations thereto on the issue of orders by the Government of India when the complete information called for from Major Sandeman has been received.

Enclosure 1 in No. 109.

No. 139, dated Camp Mustung, 1st July 1876.

From Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

I have the honour to draw your attention to paragraph 27 of the Government of India Resolution No. 2819P., dated the 16th October last. I am directed therein to "inquire and "report whether anything, and if so what, can be done for the protection of trade viâ "the Bolan Pass, and whether a system of fixed tolls on caravans could not be arranged "for, the proceeds of which would go to the tribes interested in the protection of the "route."

2. In consultation with his Highness the Khan of Khelat I have made full inquiry into this matter, and now submit with this letter for your consideration, a joint-memorandum by his Highness the Khan of Khelat and myself of our proceedings regarding it. These show the discussion that took place between his Highness and myself, and the conclusions we arrived at. They were recorded by me in English and then carefully translated into the vernacular and read out to his Highness the Khan, who affixed his seal to them. I then signed them, and a copy was sent to his Highness at his own request for record. I will now offer a few brief remarks regarding them.

3. The Chiefs and tribes interested in the Bolan Pass are the Koord Brahooees, the Mazarani, and the Mundai Murrees, the Mingul Brahooees and the Dumar-Kakar Pathans. The fees taken from the caravans are of two kinds, viz., the sung or customs dues which are levied at Shawl-Kot (Quetta) and Dadar, and the fees for buddruki or escort fees. The first-named go entirely to his Highness the Khan, after one seventh of those collected at Dadar have been deducted for the chief Sirdar of the Sarawans. His right to this share was not disputed by the Khan. The escort fees used to be given in a very arbitrary way to any tribe which, for the time being, was in his Highness the Khan's favour. From the enclosed memorandum you will observe that his Highness has agreed that the escort fees shall go to those actually escorting the kafilas, and that Sirdar Alladina Koord shall be responsible for their fair distribution. An arrangement of this kind was necessary, as there was reason to believe that formerly when the pass was open his Highness used to give a certain portion only of these fees to the Mazarani Murrees, who undertook the duty at reduced rates. This caused discontent amongst the tribes, and did not work well. The present plan (as the entire escort fees are given to [illegible]se protecting the kafilas through the pass, who are entitled to them by prescriptive [illegible] will, I trust, work better.

[illegible] further reference to the proceedings enclosed will also show you that for the present Sirdar Alladina Koord is in sole charge of the pass. This Sirdar has agreed to keep men* to the number of 60 always on duty at the village of Kirta in the heart of [illegible] also agreed to keep 40 men* at the Dusht plain in the hot weather, and at Abgum in the pass in the cold weather, always present for escort duty and to protect travellers passing to and fro. His Highness the Khan has granted to Mullik Til Khan, of [illegible]ill belong to the Murree [illegible]nd will be in charge of Dost Mahomed.

[illegible] the Mingul [illegible] tribes, in [illegible]homed.

the village of Kirta, a written order permitting him to return to his village and to resume the cultivation of his lands situated in the pass. These arrangements for the protection of the pass will be supervised by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan, who will bring to notice any shortcomings on the part of Sirdar Alladina should any (for instance, in the distribution of the escort fees) ever occur. Their total cost will come to Rupees 18,000 yearly, which will be defrayed out of the money sanctioned for the purpose. [See paragraph 27 of the Government Resolution above referred to, empowering me to make suitable arrangements for the protection of trade passing through the Bolan Pass.]

5. I now come to a point in dealing with this subject that his Highness the Khan is most anxious the British Government should fairly consider. His Highness states that according to treaty he is obliged to take as customs fees from caravans 8 annas per maund instead of 1 rupee, and that this has reduced the State revenues by nearly a lakh of rupees yearly. He has sent me the following table of fees showing the sums actually levied on kafilas passing through Khelat territory in the year 1840–41, and his Highness has selected the collections made during that year to verify his statement as it was the last year during which 1 rupee per maund was levied from caravans:—

Table of Fees.

	Rs.	A.	P.
Khelat	89,325	13	2
Sorab	9,624	2	10
Kozdar and Baghwana	11,265	6	9
Mushki and Kolwa	3,135	9	3
Nimkar	2,593	11	2
Kedj and Makran	3,707	13	4
Mustung and Tiri	9,066	3	4
Shawl-Kot	21,434	2	8
Zehri	2,299	13	2
Noshki	1,191	14	8
Dadar	11,869	11	4
Bagh and Shori Pass	14,169	12	4
Lehri	4,887	3	2
Gunjaba and Kotra	8,633	8	4
Samechi Pass	7,371	7	2
Total	2,00,576	4	8

6. But I must here remark his Highness the Khan, although quite aware that by treaty he is bound to levy only 8 annas per maund, nevertheless desires to bring to the special notice of the British Government the fact that by imposing this condition the State revenues are reduced in a way he can ill afford.

7. There are, however, other strong reasons why his Highness prefers to keep open the Mulla and Raj routes to that of the Bolan Pass. By diverting kafilas arriving from Candahar at Shawl-Kot to Khelat, and thus preventing them going through the Bolan Pass, he collects himself the escort fees as well as the customs fees. His Highness also thus avoids having to pay the Sarawan Sirdar a share of the customs fees. He is, moreover, himself able to superintend at Khelat the collection of all fees.

8. The objection to kafilas being prevented by the Khan from going through the Bolan Pass, which, by ancient custom, he has no right to do, is of the very strongest description. The route viâ Khelat is not only a very much longer one (150 miles) than that viâ the Bolan Pass, but it is exposed during the winter to the extreme cold of Khorassan. Moreover, there is no fodder for baggage animals to be found along it. The consequence is that caravans in taking it suffer the greatest privations, and generally lose many animals, and thus run the risk of having to leave part of the merchandise they are carrying to India on the road. On the other hand, the route viâ the Bolan, as stated, is not only a much shorter one, but after making two or three marches from Shawl-Kot (Quetta) caravans get out of the cold altogether, and reach a country where there is abundance of forage, with a plentiful supply of water, and a mild climate.

9. Taking the entire state of the case into consideration, I am inclined to think that the Government in the end would not be losers were they to look upon this grievance of the Khan (which he has, I believe, from the first urged on our authorities) as one requiring a remedy. I believe, if the real truth were known, that since British relations with his Government have been broken off, by diverting the kafilas from Shawl-Kot to Khelat, and increasing the customs fees to the old rates, his Highness has not suffered in revenue by the subsidy of Rupees 50,000 being withheld by our Government. It seems to me therefore that the subject is one requiring very serious consideration, and that in the interests of the Candahar trade it might be well worth the money to increase the subsidy of his Highness by Rupees 20,000 or 25,000 thousand yearly. By doing this the Government would assuredly bind the Khan more strongly to British interests, and would afford a substantial inducement to his Highness to exert himself to co-operate in keeping open the pass. In granting the extra money conditions might also be imposed, such as withholding the extra grant were the pass at any time closed and trade injured by Murree inroads into the Bolan or Kutchi, or for any other cause whatever. His Highness might also be required, which he would do very willingly, to direct his Naibs stationed in Kutchi, Shawl-Kot, and Dadar to render the Political Officers hearty aid should special measures at any time become necessary to secure the safe transit of trade through Kutchi and the Bolan Pass.

Enclosure 2 in No. 109.

Memorandum of proceedings of his Highness Mir Khodadad Khan, Khan of Khelat, and Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, at Mustung, on the 30th June 1876, regarding keeping open the Bolan Pass, and affording protection to trade passing through Khelat territory.

His Highness Mir Khodadad Khan and Major Sandeman met at Mustung on the 30th June 1876 to take into their joint consideration what steps could be taken by them to put in force the orders of the Government of India, as contained in their proceedings No. 2819P. of the 16th October last, for the permanent protection of trade passing through the Bolan Pass and Kutchi in Khelat territory.

The Government of India in the 23rd paragraph of the proceedings state: "It remains "then to consider what means shall be taken to restore peace in Kutchi, and to protect the "transit of trade within the territories of his Highness the Khan of Khelat." Further, in the 24th paragraph they record that "irrespective of the general interest which the Govern- "ment of India have in promoting the peace and prosperity of neighbouring countries, "they have a special interest in Kutchi. The boundary between Kutchi and Sind runs "through an open country, so that any serious disturbances in Kutchi may affect British "territory very closely. The raids, however, which have actually occurred in Kutchi "have not as yet been of a kind to endanger the general peace of the British districts "in Sind; and as the posts of the Sind Frontier Force are in advanced positions beyond "the frontier, there seems no reason to anticipate that outrages will be attempted to "their rear. Should such outrages be attempted, they should be promptly and "vigorously dealt with. The advanced outposts on the Sind border then may reason- "ably be expected to secure a fair degree of order in the southern portions of Kutchi, "over which their power of prompt action extends. Any armed aggression within "Kutchi territory thus commanded by the outposts may be forcibly suppressed by "them."

The points, therefore, that his Highness the Khan of Khelat and Major Sandeman had to consider were, (1) the protection of caravans through the Bolan Pass itself from Shawl-Kot to Dadar, and (2) thence through Kutchi to within reach of the British outposts stationed in Khelat territory.

Regarding the first point, the Government of India, in the 27th paragraph of their proceedings, directed Major Sandeman to "inquire and report whether anything, and if "so what, can be done for the protection of trade viâ the Bolan Pass, and whether a "system of fixed tolls on caravans could not be arranged for, the proceeds of which "would go to the tribes interested in the protection of the route."

Finally, the Government of India in their 29th paragraph invited his Highness Mir Khodadad Khan to co-operate in putting their proposals in force in the following words: "Should the measures now authorised be successful in affording reasonable security to "trade through Khelat territory, and should his Highness the Khan show an earnest "desire to co-operate for this end and to return to a proper sense of his duties, it will "afford the Governor-General in Council great pleasure, on receiving an expression of "regret for what has occurred, to restore the former subsidy and re-establish the old "friendly footing with his Highness' Government."

Major Sandeman then briefly pointed out to his Highness the Khan how the action of the Khelat Government up to the date of his entering the country in April last had left the trade routes without protection. He said that on his entering Kutchi in the cold weather he found a rebellion on the point of breaking out; at his invitation the Brahooee tribes had joined him; that he had proceeded up the Bolan Pass, which was closed. The kafila-bashis in charge of caravans blocked at Candahar on hearing of Major Sandeman's arrival had flocked to Shawl-Kot, but were directed by the Naib there to proceed to Khelat, and to go viâ the Mulla or Raj route to India; that the merchants had appealed to Major Sandeman, who himself wrote to the Khan of Khelat asking him to allow them to proceed under his protection to Sind. The Khan, however, did not consent to this proposal, and one of those very kafilas afterwards had been partly plundered in the Mulla Pass, and the merchants were clamorous for compensation. The question of compensation to be paid to these merchants at the Khan's request had been referred by Major Sandeman to the Government of India in his No. 122, dated 14th June 1876, to the address of the Commissioner, Colonel Munro.

The fact of the entire stoppage of trade until Major Sandeman's advent into the country could not be disputed. Caravans, consisting of thousands of camels, had been blocked at Shikarpore on account of the known unsafe state of the kafila routes. Colonel Munro, the Commissioner, and Major Sandeman, had together visited the merchants at Shikarpore, and were jointly of opinion that such a state of things could be no longer permitted. It was decided by the Government of India, to whom Colonel Munro referred the state of affairs, that Major Sandeman, with a suitable escort of troops, should proceed to the Bolan Pass and open it to the returning kafilas, and that a full opportunity should be afforded Mir Khodadad Khan, Khan of Khelat, of joining Major Sandeman in so arranging the affairs of the Khelat State that protection to caravans should for the future be undoubted and permanent.

Mir Khodadad Khan here gave it as his opinion that the unprotected state of the trade routes was due to the fact that the Brahooees, who had plundered kafilas to gain their own ends, had not been held responsible by the British Government, and had not been made to pay the value of all the plunder they took from the kafilas of 1872, although ordered by the British Government to do so; that if the Government of India would place all the Brahooee Chiefs by force of arms under him, and aid him by making prisoners of those amongst them who were his enemies, then he would undertake to keep open all the trade routes and be responsible for the safety of kafilas.

Major Sandeman, in reply, said that he felt certain the British Government would not aid him to coerce his Sirdars by force of arms, and thus enable him to keep open the trade routes; that possibly the Government of India, on hearing the reasons for the Sirdars refusing protection to the trade routes, might consider them under the circumstances justifiable and entirely due to the Khan's own conduct. In fact, that the Governor-General of India in his letter to his Highness recently delivered had told his Highness that it was owing to his own conduct that friendly relations between his Government and the British Government had been broken off, and his Excellency had exhorted his Highness to hearken to Major Sandeman's counsels and to act on his advice, and thus afford the best proofs of the sincerity of his professions, and relieve the Governor-General from the necessity of taking further means to secure the tranquility of the British frontier and the protection of trade.

Major Sandeman then discussed with his Highness the Khan the three plans that existed for the protection of trade and Kutchi.

These were—

(1st.) For his Highness the Khan to take on himself the entire duty of protecting the passes and trade routes:

(2nd.) For the British Government to do so, and relieve the Khan of all responsibility:

(3rd.) Or the Khan to avail himself of Major Sandeman's influence with the tribes when arranging with them for the safety of trade through the Bolan Pass and Kutchi, and that his Highness should do this in concert and communication with that officer, as proposed by the Government of India in their proceedings above referred to.

Major Sandeman pointed out to his Highness that the first two measures were not suitable to the present position of his Highness' affairs; that it was an undoubted fact that from the date of his Highness' ascending the guddee to the present day Kutchi and the Bolan Pass had been hitherto unsafe for traffic. Moreover, did they adopt Plan No. 2, the loss in all likelihood in income to his Highness would be considerable. It was evident that if the British Government became responsible for the safety of the pass, and for keeping it open as suggested, they would also, as proposed in the 27th paragraph of their proceedings above referred to, take over the fees also and distribute them to the tribes guarding the pass.

Major Sandeman told the Khan that in his opinion his Highness ought thankfully and gratefully to accept the proposals for the protection of the trade routes of the Government of India as contained in Plan No. 3, and that his Highness ought at once to give proof of his wish to re-establish the old friendly relations between his Government and that of the British Government by showing an earnest desire to cordially co-operate with Major Sandeman in arranging with the tribes for the protection of the trade routes, which would of itself when accomplished restore peace to the distracted Khelat State. This could only, however, be done by his Highness treating the tribes in a fair and just spirit, and by his securing to them their ancient rights and privileges.

The Khan of Khelat at once heartily agreed to the last-named proposal, saying it was his anxious desire to comply with every expressed wish of the British Government, and if Major Sandeman would accept half the burden of settling his affairs with the tribes, he would gladly accept the other half.

With regard to the protection of the Bolan Pass traffic, he most heartily and gladly agreed to Plan No. 3. He was of opinion that the means already adopted by Major Sandeman made through the Sirdar of the Koords for the safety of the Pass were very suitable; that at the time he had agreed to these and confirmed them, telling Sirdar Alladina, in Major Sandeman's presence, that he sanctioned his taking over charge of the Bolan. It was true that the buddruki fees would by the arrangement go to the Bolan tribes, and would no longer be in his gift to dispose of as he liked; but he quite saw the necessity for these fees being given to the tribes who escorted the kafilas through the pass. His Highness remarked that the transit fees would be collected as usual at Dadar and Shawl-Kot, according to custom; and should hereafter any necessity arise for altering present arrangements now entered upon for the safety of the Bolan Pass traffic, he would make them in accordance with Plan No. 3 in concert and communication with Major Sandeman.

Khelat diary for the week ending 14th July 1876.

1. 8th July.—To-day the statement of Rahmatulla, a sepoy of the 1st Belooch Regiment, now stationed at Kurrachee, received from Colonel Munro along with Commissioner in Sind's No. 389, dated 30th May 1876, was inquired into. Mir Jam Ali declared that he knew nothing of the sepoy or his story; neither did any of his people.

A letter was received from Sirdar Muhammad Khan, brother of the Seebee Chief, Sirdar Sher Zaman Khan; it reported the death of the latter the result of an accident. A reply was sent to Sirdar Muhammad Khan condoling with him on the death of his brother, and expressing a hope that he would succeed to the Chieftainship without trouble.

To-day 15 camels carrying supplies for the escort, and a kafila of 40 camels arrived from Jacobabad. Another kafila from Quetta and Mustung started to go viâ the Bolan Pass to Jacobabad.

In compliance with Commissioner and Superintendent's No. 248, dated 28th ultimo, and its enclosures, a letter was sent to his Highness the Khan conveying to him the acknowledgments of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council for the aid rendered by his servants during the late outbreak of cholera.

The Sarawan Sirdars visited his Highness the Khan and complained that Naib Faiz Muhammad of Mustung had taken possession during the late disturbances of lands the property of the Brahooees, and they asked his Highness to restore them. The Khan in reply said that if the Naib had appropriated lands in the way complained of they should certainly be returned. His Highness appointed a Committee composed of the following members to inquire into these complaints :—

On the part of the Khelat Government	Wakil Nawab Muhammad Khan. Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad. Mulla Abdulla Jan.
On the part of the Sirdars	Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, and Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan.

2. 9th July.—The Committee named above assembled at Major Sandeman's camp and sat all day inquiring into the various disputes brought before it. It was arranged that the proceedings should be recorded in the vernacular by the Superintendent of the Deputy Commissioner's Office, Munshi Hittu Ram.

3. 10th July.—To-day the Committee again assembled and recorded an opinion in each case. A large number of disputes were settled. The records of the different cases were at the close of the day's proceedings submitted to his Highness the Khan for approval and confirmation.

His Highness the Khan returned the vernacular proceedings submitted to him yesterday. He had approved and confirmed them, and had affixed his seal to each recorded decision of the Committee.

Mir Jam Ali and the Jalawan Sirdars waited on the Khan and asked his Highness to recognise Sirdar Gohar Khan as Sirdar of Zehri in room of the late Sirdar Taj Mahomed. His Highness agreed to the request, and said he also approved of the election of Sirdar Shakar Khan in room of his father, the late Noordeen, and would recognise these two Sirdars publicly in Durbar according to State custom, bestowing on them the usual khillut and dress of honour given on such occasions to newly elected Sirdars by the Khans of Khelat.

To the request of Mir Ibrahim Khan, referred to in last week's diary, that his Highness would visit him at his camp and condole with him on account of the death of Sirdar Noordeen, the Khan replied that on the present occasion and under present circumstances he could not visit Sirdar Ibrahim Khan in camp, but would during the cold weather, when the Sirdars would be in Kutchi, take a fitting opportunity of complying with the Sirdar's request.

His Highness then directed the Jalawan Sirdars to bring any complaints they had against his Government before the Committee who had disposed of the Sarawan complaints, and on their doing so he promised them redress if their grievances were well founded.

His Highness requested the Committee to re-assemble next day at Major Sandeman's camp.

4. 11th July.—The Committee assembled this morning at an early hour, and Mir Jam Ali and the Jalawan Sirdars brought forward the grievances and complaints they had to make against the Khelat Government. These were 34 in number, and the Committee most carefully and patiently inquired into them, recording an opinion on each case. Out of the 34 cases his Highness the Khan, on the list being submitted to him, confirmed and approved of the opinion of the Committee as recorded on 31 of them. He dismissed two complaints altogether, and one brought by Mir Jam Ali about the Kamal Khan estate he desired should be allowed to stand over until orders were received about Jam Mir Khan, who could on his release from confinement, if he so desired it, refer the dispute to the British Government for decision.

To-day in accordance with agreement, his Highness the Khan issued orders for the release of the ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed Khan's family, including the brother of the Wuzree, the late Shahgassee Ali Jan. The female slaves of the ex-Wuzeer were also allowed by the Khan to accompany his family from Khelat. His Highness requested Major Sandeman to permit the ex-Wuzeer to go into British territory. To this Major Sandeman agreed, conditionally on the Khan providing for the subsistence of the ex-Wuzeer and his family. The Khan agreed to do so for the present.

To-day his Highness the Khan released several Samalani Mingul prisoners who had been put in prison by him at Dadar and Khelat for taking part in the late attacks on kafilas in the Bolan Pass.

5. 12th July.—Major Sandeman visited his Highness the Khan to consult with him about the reception of his Highness and all his Sirdars at a final Durbar, at which the terms of peace arranged between them were to be declared. The 13th July was fixed by his Highness, and it was arranged that the Durbar should take place in Major Sandeman's camp. The Durbar programme to be observed during the proceedings was then drawn up. A copy is attached to this diary.

6. 13th July.—To-day at 5 in the afternoon Major Sandeman held a Durbar for the reception of his Highness the Khan and the Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan. The European officers of the escort were invited to attend. Those who attended were Captains Humfrey, Reynolds, Gordon, Scott, and Shepherd, Lieutenants Harrison and Alexander, and Surgeon MacRury.

His Highness arrived at the appointed hour, and was received as he dismounted from his horse by Captain Wylie; the guard of honour of 100 men of the 30th Bombay Native Infantry (Jacob's Rifles) saluted him. On his arrival at the entrance to the Durbar tent Major Sandeman met him and conducted his Highness to his seat. On his Highness' right sat Captain Wylie, Dr. Duke, and Captain Shepherd. On his left sat Major Sandeman, Captains Humfrey and Reynolds, Dr. MacRury and the other European officers present. The Native Durbaris were arranged in two lines and sat on the carpet. To the right of his Highness sat Mirs Karam Khan and Gohar Khan, his Highness' nephews, Mulla Abdul Rahman, Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad, and others in attendance at his Highness' Court. On the left of the line were seated Mir Jam Ali, Mir Asad Khan, Mir Gohar Khan, Mir Ibrahim Khan, Wuderas Shadi Khan, and Muhammad Said Khan, Sirdars Alladina Koord, Chakar Khan, Mohiem Khan, Imam Buksh Khan, Jamal Khan, Moolla Mahomed Khan, and many others. When all were seated the Durbar was opened by Major Sandeman reading in English, after permission had been obtained from his Highness the Khan, the Durbar programme. He then addressed his Highness and the Durbar in Hindustani, explaining the programme and the procedure that his Highness the Khan had observed in arranging his differences with the assembled Sirdars of Jalawan and Sarawan. Major Sandeman told the Durbar that directly after his Highness arrived at Mustung he had summoned his Sirdars and had appointed a Committee to inquire into their grievances, the result being that he (Major Sandeman) had been able most successfully to mediate between the two factions whose differences had for years distracted the Khelat State. He complimented his Highness the Khan on the way he had acted during the negotiations, and for having restored to his Sirdars and Chiefs their lands, ancient rights, and privileges. His Highness in reply said that he himself, his country, and people were the property of the British Government; that he was greatly indebted to the Government for sending Major Sandeman to advise with him regarding the settlement of the Khelat State; that he felt greatly indebted for all that had been done for him, and that he would use his utmost endeavours for the future to preserve the peace of the country now established. He hoped the Sirdars would continue to deserve his kindness and favour; and did they do so, they might rely on his maintaining them in their ancient rights and privileges.

Mir Jam Ali Khan and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed on behalf of the Sirdars replied to his Highness. They assured him they would be loyal and true to him; that they trusted to deserve his favour and kindness, and would in every way attend to the rules and precedents necessary to be observed by all the Sirdars of the Khelat State in their dealings with their Khan.

The settlement papers, containing the decision of his Highness on each dispute, were then introduced and placed before him on a chair in the Durbar. The Koran was placed with them.

Lala Hittu Ram, the Superintendent of the Deputy Commissioner's Office, then read the following papers, which are written in Persian.

First, the paper containing the terms on which peace had been agreed to and to which his Highness the Khan and the Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan had affixed their seals.

The petition of the Sirdars of Jalawan and Sarawan asking his Highness the Khan to obtain the release of the Jam of Lus Beyla, Jam Mir Khan.

The Khan's letter to Major Sandeman asking that officer to submit the petition to the [illegible]rnment of India for favourable consideration.

[illegible] this the contents of the other papers were notified to the Durbar.

[illegible]andeman, after pointing to the Koran and remarking on the solemnity of the [illegible]ed his Highness the Khan if he agreed to the contents of the papers on the [illegible], and whether he was willing to be bound in his dealings with his Sirdars [illegible]. His Highness cordially replied that he was quite willing to be bound [illegible]d that by the grace of God he would fulfil their conditions.

[illegible]ked a similar question and they all responded in the affirmative, [illegible]ily and in a loud tone, a few not quite so heartily. A salute of 19 guns was then fired from a hill, a short distance off, overlooking the Durbar tent, on which the two mountain guns had been stationed for the purpose.

The Khan of Khelat's band, which was in attendance, afterwards played a lively tune, during which the khilluts were introduced into the Durbar tent. To Mir Jam Ali his Highness the Khan presented 1 handsome lungi, 1 thân kinkab, 1 thân of white cloth, 1 horse, and Rs. 100 in cash.

Khilluts were also presented by his Highness, of nearly the same value, to Mir Asad Khan, Sirdar Gohar Khan, Zehri, and to Mir Ibrahim Khan for his nephew, the son of the late Noordeen.

On presenting the khilluts his Highness placed the lungi around the person of each Sirdar, who on accepting it kissed his hand and touched his feet. They made very submissive speeches, telling his Highness in a loud voice that they were his subjects and slaves and he could rely on their loyalty. His Highness throughout the Durbar seemed highly delighted, and expressed great satisfaction with the conduct of the Sirdars in the way they addressed him. A little sensation was caused by Mir Ibrahim Khan, the brother of the late Noordeen, who on being told to receive the khillut set aside for him said he could not do so, as he was not the Sirdar of the Minguls but merely the representative of his young nephew, Sirdar Shakar Khan, but he would take it in trust for him.

His Highness having signified his assent to this, the khillut was made over to the Sirdar for his nephew. The Sirdars present then congratulated those who had received khilluts and who had been recognized by his Highness as the Sirdars of their tribes. His Highness also did so.

After this Major Sandeman presented khilluts (in the name of the British Government for services rendered to him on the present occasion) to the following Mirs and officials of the Khelat State.

To the Khan's two nephews, Mirs Karam Khan and Gohur Khan, each 1 choga, 1 handsome lungi, and 2 thâns of white cloth.

Wakil Nawab Muhammad Khan, Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad, Mulla Abdulla Jan, and Naib Pir Jan, each received 1 choga, 1 lungi, and 1 thân of white cloth.

This closed the proceedings. The Khan of Khelat and all the Sirdars then raised their hands in prayer to God and said the "Fatia," which is considered equivalent to the most solemn oath a Muhamadan can take, and which is said on all such occasions and ceremonies as the one they had just taken part in.

Before the Durbar broke up Mir Jam Ali Khan rose, and on the part of all the Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan presented Major Sandeman with a paper containing an address thanking him for the manner in which he had mediated between them and his Highness the Khan. A translation of this address is attached to this diary. The Durbar broke up by his Highness the Khan taking his leave.

7. 14th July.—Mirs Jam Ali, Gohar Khan, Ibrahim Khan, and the other Jalawan Sirdars visited Major Sandeman on their way to pay their respects to his Highness the Khan. The conduct of Mir Ibrahim Khan at the Durbar in regard to (his?) khillut was discussed. All said that Mir Ibrahim Khan acted according to custom, and as they were then on their way to his Highness' Durbar, they would tell him of the present conversation regarding it, and were certain his Highness would agree that under the circumstances Mir Ibrahim Khan had acted perfectly right.

1. Major Sandeman will address the Durbar and announce the manner in which the mediation between the contending sides was effected by him.

His Highness the Khan of Khelat will reply and announce that he has acknowledged the election of Sirdar Gohar Khan by the tribe as Sirdar of Zehri in room of the late Sirdar Taj Mahomed.

3. That at the request of Mir Jam Ali and the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars as contained in their petition to his Highness, he has written a letter to Major Sandeman asking that officer to forward it and the afore-mentioned petition to Government, with a view to obtaining the release from confinement of Mir Khan, Jam of Lus Beyla.

4. That the Sirdars will meet with every consideration and kindness from his Highness as the ruler of the country, provided they hold to the terms of their agreement as entered in the settlement papers to which he as well as they themselves have affixed their seals.

Mir Jam Ali and Sirdar Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan on behalf of the Sirdars will reply to his Highness the Khan's address and announce that they accept the terms of peace, and will for the future respect the laws and customs of the Khelat State and be bound by the conditions entered in the settlement papers named above.

The Superintendent of the Deputy Commissioner's Office, Hittu Ram, will then produce the papers containing the terms agreed upon by the two sides. Major Sandeman will ask his Highness the Khan if he agrees to the terms contained in the papers now laid before him and to which he has affixed his seal. The papers are—

1st. The paper containing the conditions on which his Highness agreed to make peace with Mir Khan of Lus Beyla and the Sirdars of Jalawan and Sarawan;

2nd. The Agreement for the protection of the Bolan Pass;

3rd. The settlement papers prepared by Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan, Jamal Khan, Wakil Muhammad Khan, Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad, and Mulla Abdulla Jan, containing their decision, approved and confirmed by the Khan and accepted by the Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan, regarding the complaints and grievances brought by the Sirdars and their tribes against the Khelat Government.

On receiving his Highness' reply in the affirmative, a similar question will be asked the Sirdars. On their also answering in the affirmative, a salute of 19 guns will be fired to announce that peace has taken place between the Khelat Government and Mir Jam Ali and the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars.

His Highness the Khan will then present, in accordance with ancient custom, a khillut and dresses of honour to the following Sirdars :—

Mir Jam Ali of Lus Beyla.

Sirdar Asad Khan, eldest son of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan; since 1872 he has held the position of Sirdar of the Sarawans.

Sirdar Gohar Khan of Zehri.

Sirdar Ibrahim Khan, Chief of the Minguls.

Major Sandeman, in the name of the British Government, will present the following officials of the Khelat Government with suitable khilluts in recognition of their services on the present occasion :—

Wakil Muhammad Khan.
Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad.
Naib Per Jan.
Mulla Abdulla Jan.

[redacted]ss will then take his leave and the Durbar will be closed.

(Signed) R. G. SANDEMAN, Major,
Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

Enclosure 2 in No. 110.

Translation of a letter from Sirdars of Beloochistan to Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, dated 13th July 1876.

We, the Sirdars of Beloochistan, Sarawans and Jalawans, now present in Durbar at Mustung by order of Major Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazi Khan, desire to express our thanks to the British Government. Our reasons for thankfulness are these: Our country was in a distracted state; peace seemed impossible, and in consequence the Sirdars and Chiefs left the plain country and took to the hills. One result of such a state of things is that the Jam of Lus Beyla has now been in confinement in British Territory for eight years. But by the good management and sound judgment of Major Sandeman we trust that the release of the Jam from confinement may be obtained. We are all greatly indebted to the British Government for having given their kind attention to the state of this country and by their deputing Major Sandeman, who is an officer of wisdom, good temper, and sound judgment, to arrange our affairs and to restore peace to us. The said officer has by good management characteristic of him settled our differences with the Khelat Government in a most satisfactory way, and this is testified to by the Khan, ourselves, and Major Sandeman, being all present together to-day in this Durbar.

His Highness the Khan has also been kind to us, and has shown favour to us by restoring our ancient privileges and rights. His Highness has also on our joint petition to him been good enough to recommend the British Government to release Jam Mir Khan, and this act of his Highness has caused us to feel gratitude to him. One thing we regret, and that is that Jam Mir Khan could not be in to-day's Durbar, but we feel certain that through the recommendation of Major Sandeman and the kindness of the Government Jam Mir Khan will soon be able to attend similar Durbars. Finally, we trust that through the good management of Major Sandeman the peace now established may be a lasting one, and thus enable cultivation and the prosperity of the people to increase daily.

(Seals of) Mir Jam Ali of Lus Beyla and of the Sirdars Gohar Khan Zehri, Ibrahim Khan Mingul, Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan, Asad Khan, son of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Said Khan, Junda Khan Shahwani, Chakar Khan Jattak, Mohiem Khan Gurgnari, Kadir Buksh, Rahman Khan of Noshki, Alladina Koord, Alam Khan Rashkani, Shadi Khan Bungulzai, Sohrab Khan Lehri, Saleh Muhammad Musiani, and Fateh Khan Lotiani.

No. 1700P., dated Simla, 24th July 1876.

From T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, on special duty, Dera Ismail Khan.

I have received and laid before the Governor-General in Council your letter No. 244, dated 30th June 1876, with enclosed reports from Major Sandeman.

2. The Governor-General in Council will defer passing orders on the various points mentioned in this correspondence pending submission by Major Sandeman of a final report on the results of his mission.

3. His Excellency in Council, however, observes that in the memorandum presented by the Khan of Khelat to Major Sandeman on 6th June 1876, his Highness demands that the British Government should compensate the Candahar merchants plundered by the Jalawans in the Mulla and other Passes. And it appears from Major Sandeman's marginal note on the memorandum, as also from paragraph 15 of his letter to you, No. 122, dated 14th June 1876, that he is disposed to view this demand in a favourable light.

4. The Governor-General in Council desires to receive from Major Sandeman at an early date more precise information showing—

(1.) The caravans on account of which compensation is claimed;
(2.) The time and place at which the caravans were plundered;
(3.) The persons by whom the caravans were plundered;
(4.) The loss estimated by the owners;
(5.) The compensation, if any, paid up to date, and by whom paid;
(6.) The balance fairly due;

(7.) A brief statement of the grounds on which the Khan claims compensation from the British Government.

5. In submitting the above particulars Major Sandeman should confine himself to a statement of ascertained facts, and should avoid an expression of his own views as to the course which the Governor-General in Council ought to adopt in this matter.

No. 112.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 21st July 1876.

1. 15th July.—The Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan, including Mir Jam Ali, petitioned the Khan to the effect that as his Highness had confirmed the opinions of the Committee in the different cases brought before it by them and had affixed his seal to these, he would be good enough to grant them fresh sunnuds and issue orders to the Naibs and other officials of the khanate telling them of the decision of his Highness, and that for the future the lands granted under the new sunnuds were on no account to be interfered with. His Highness gave a most favourable reply, and issued orders to his officials in accordance with the request of the Sirdars. His Highness also directed that a fresh sunnud was to be granted for each plot of land which had been restored according to his own order. This was done, and sunnuds were drawn up and sealed by his Highness as quickly as the writer could prepare them.

The Sirdars of Jalawan and Sarawan submitted another request to the Khan, viz., that as his Highness had recognized Mir Gohur Khan as the Zehri Sirdar in room of the late Sirdar Taj Mahomed, and the family lands had been restored to him, the whole of the Sirdars in consultation had decided that Mir Gohur Khan should yearly pay to the family of the deceased Sirdar Rupees 1,200 in cash and 24 kharwars of grain. His Highness, in reply, expressed his entire satisfaction with the arrangement, and sent the petition of the Sirdars, with his reply to this effect, to Major Sandeman for information. These papers were placed with the vernacular file for record.

To-day his Highness issued orders to the Officer Commanding at Khelat to aid Mir Jam Ali with supplies, &c., during his return journey to Lus Beyla.

Mir Jam Ali asked his Highness the Khan to release certain Jamote prisoners, his subjects, who were surrendered to the late Wuzeer Atta Mahomed Khan on account of it being believed that they were concerned in the plunder of kafilas. Mir Jam Ali had surrendered them at the Wuzeer's request, but when doing so had protested, as he did not believe in their guilt. His Highness, in reply, agreed to release them, provided that Mir Jam Ali held himself personally responsible for them, and would again surrender them at any future time should it appear they were actually concerned in the plunder of the afore-mentioned kafilas. Mir Jam Ali consented to this, and wrote a security bond agreeing to be responsible for the future acts of these men, and that he would deliver them up if called upon to do so. His Highness then issued orders for the release of the foliowing Jamotis, and they were at once made over to Mir Jam Ali, Jaman, Wali Muhammad, Mehu Wasaya, Mehu Wasaya Sani, Alladad, Nathu, Balich and Tib.

The District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee, in paragraph 3 of his No. 141, dated 18th February 1876, received from Colonel Munro, reported that "certain Jamote "prisoners who were concerned in the attack and the loot of the kafilas near our "frontier in 1872–73, and who were captured and taken to Khelat by Wuzeer Atta "Mahomed when he was down here with a force in April last, have lately returned "to their homes. These men were released about the time Noordeen was murdered or "a little before, and have spread reports that they have been told by the Khan and his "Ministers to return to their old work of looting kafilas, committing robberies, and "creating disturbances of all kinds on the frontier; and that the more they do in this "line, the better," &c.; Major Sandeman inquired of Mir Jam Ali regarding this. In reply, the Jam said that a few men had been released by his Highness, but they were sent to see if they could recover any part of the plunder taken from the kafilas. The others had now been released at his (Jam Ali's) request, as reported above. He did not believe they were guilty, and he had originally surrendered these men as pressure had been brought to bear on him, and he could not refuse to do so. He had held himself reponsible for their future good conduct, &c.

Inquiry was made by Major Sandeman into the report of the District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee, forwarding that of the Kotwal of Khuslan Thana, Yara Khan, regarding the conduct of Saheb Khan Choota and Jan Muhammad, his brother, sent by Colonel Munro for Major Sandeman's information. His Highness the Khan and Mir Jam Ali were quite agreed as to the reasons which had led to the quarrel between the two brothers causing the present distracted state of the Kurrachee Police frontier.

His Highness the Khan stated that Saheb Khan is the Sirdar of the Chootas, but that he had deposed him, and placed his younger brother Jan Muhammad as Chief of the tribe; that Saheb Khan was an Inspector of Police on the Kurrachee frontier, and had fought with his younger brother for years; that he would not be guided by his Highness the Khan's advice, and that it was unfortunate his employment in the Kurrachee Police, as he was in opposition to his Highness; that if he took service with the British, it was only right he should permit his brother Jan Muhammad to manage the tribe. Mir Jam Ali agreed to this explanation, saying that one reason the Khan was angry with Saheb Khan was because he was a friend of his (Jam Ali's), but that now his quarrel with the Khan was settled, the proper plan was to send for Saheb Khan and Jan Muhammad to Khelat, and for his Highness to arrange the dispute. Major Sandeman decided to make a special reference regarding this quarrel to the Commissioner, Colonel Munro, as his Highness and Jam Ali were both of opinion that this portion of the Lus Beyla, Khelat, and Kurrachee frontiers could not be at peace until the quarrel between these two brothers was settled. The Jamotis, who are subjects of Lus Beyla, sided with Saheb Khan against his brother Jan Muhammad, and both his Highness and Mir Jam Ali expressed a strong desire that Major Sandeman should take up the case in concert with the Khan and dispose of it.

This matter will receive attention.—A. A. MUNRO.

To-day the escort of Punjab and Sind troops paraded for the inspection of his Highness the Khan. Punctually at 5 a.m. the Khan of Khelat, attended by Major Sandeman and the Sirdars of Jalawan and Sarawan and by Mir Jam Ali and his Chiefs, arrived on the ground.

The escort was drawn up in line, and received his Highness the Khan with a general salute. Afterwards the troops marched past in quick time. The infantry then returned to their quarters. The cavalry, after trotting and galloping past, wheeled into line, and concluded the parade by a general charge in the direction of his Highness the Khan.

Major Sandeman after the parade escorted his Highness back to the "Miri" or Palace, and received the Khan's repeated thanks for the pleasure the parade had afforded him.

In the afternoon the European and Native officers of the Sind and Punjab Cavalry forming part of the escort entertained his Highness with 'nezabazi,' cutting the orange, and other cavalry sports. The preparations for the entertainment were under the direction of Captain Reynolds, Commanding 3rd Sind Horse, and the Native officers of his regiment. His Highness arrived about 5 in the afternoon and was received with proper ceremony. His Highness and his courtiers were conducted to a tent prepared for their reception, and the games were at once commenced. During them the Native officers of the 3rd Sind Horse served his Highness and the Native gentlemen of his Court with refreshments. His Highness was greatly delighted with the entertainment, which reflected the greatest credit on Captain Reynolds and his officers for the excellence of the arrangements. It was a perfect success throughout, and his Highness, when taking his leave, asked permission to present the Cavalry sowars who competed before him with Rupees 100. Permission having been given, his Highness took his leave and was escorted to his Palace by Major Sandeman.

2. 16th July.—Mir Jam Ali and the Jalawan Sirdars left Mustung to-day to return to their homes. His Highness finished signing the new sunnuds and issued a parwana directing the Naib of Dadar to pay for the future Sirdar Moolla Mohamed of Sarawan one seventh of the kafila fees levied on caravans passing through the Bolan Pass. This order was issued in accordance with the decision of the Committee already referred to.

3. 17th July.—To-day Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan waited on his Highness the Khan to take their leave of him, as they had permission from Major Sandeman to return to the Punjab. They informed his Highness that Major Sandeman had directed them to discuss with him the settlement of the quarrel of the Murree clan with his Highness' Government. This was done, and finally it was arranged that his Highness should make peace with the Murris. In pursuance of this decision, his Highness wrote a letter to Sirdar Ghuran Khan, the Murree Tomandar, which he made over to Sirdar Imam Buksh for delivery, offering terms of peace to the Murrees, and asking the Sirdar and his headmen to meet him (the Khan) in Kutchi in the cold weather. The two Sirdars named above on taking their leave asked his Highness the Khan to grant them a favour. On being told to name it, they asked his Highness to remit Rupees 3,000 revenue due by Dur Muhammad Jamali Lughari, residing at Rojhan in Kutchi. They asked this favour as the Jamalis were hard pressed for money, and the inundation had entirely destroyed their crops. It appeared that the Revenue authorities of Jacobabad had for similar reasons remitted the revenue on neighbouring lands in British territory. After consideration his Highness was pleased to grant the request of the Sirdars, and then and there issued orders to the Naib of Nasirabad to make the remission of revenue applied for.

His Highness the Khan proposed to leave Mustung for Khelat on the 18th instant, and sent his Wakil Nawab Muhammad Khan to Major Sandeman to ask that officer to accompany him. The latter agreed to accompany his Highness to Khelat, and arranged to take with him—

100 Sabres, 3rd Sind Horse.
100 Sabres, 4th Punjab Cavalry.
Detachment, 4th Sikh Infantry.

The remainder of the escort was to march for Khelat on the 20th instant under command of Captain Humfrey.

4. 18th July.—Sirdar Alladina Koord, accompanied by Til Khan and Nubbee Buksh, the headmen of Kirta, a ruined village in the Bolan Pass, who were summoned by his Highness the Khan (see diary for the week ending 19th June 1876) arrived in camp. In the morning they paid their respects to his Highness the Khan, who received them very kindly. His Highness told Til Khan and Nubbee Buksh that they had his full permission to re-occupy Kirta. It was arranged that Sirdar Alladina should also for the present remove with his tribe to Kirta. They asked help to rebuild their village. It was arranged that Major Sandeman should be consulted on the subject, and that his Highness and that officer in consultation on their arrival at Khelat should make some suitable arrangement regarding this.

In the afternoon Sirdar Alladina visited Major Sandeman, and submitted to him a list of the men who were to occupy Kirta and Abigam. It was placed with the vernacular file. The Sirdar urged on Major Sandeman that help should be given to rebuild the village of Kirta, as his sons-in-law Til Khan and Nubbee Buksh were very poor. Major Sandeman, in reply, promised on arrival in Khelat to consult the Khan on the subject, and assured the Sirdar that suitable help would be given.

To-day the Brahooee Sirdars assembled at Major Sandeman's camp to settle a dispute that existed between the Bungulzai Brahooees and the Koords. It was settled without much difficulty, and the terms recorded in the vernacular and placed with the vernacular file.

Under the provisions of Government of India Resolution No. 2812, dated 16th October 1875, the balance of Rupees 66,960, sanctioned in accordance with the recommendation of the Mittunkote Conference in 1869, was placed at Major Sandeman's disposal for the pay of the tribes residing in and near the Bolan Pass, and for employing them in the protection of that pass and of Kutchi.

The balance referred to at Major Sandeman's disposal amounted annually to Rupees 26,520. It has been arranged that of this sum, the Koords, Dumars, and Minguls under Sirdars Moolla Mohamed and Alladina receive Rupees 18,000 yearly, keeping at Kirta and Abigam 120 men under their Mokuddums always on duty; Rupees 8,400 will yearly be paid to the Southern Murrees, who havesince the mission entered the country kept 30 sowars on duty at Mundai. For nine months Sirdar Ghuzzan Khan has faithfully kept to his promise to prevent, in as far as he had the power, raiding in Kutchi or the Bolan Pass. The Khan of Khelat admits that he has done well, and in consequence his Highness has agreed to make peace with the tribe. His Highness has deputed Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, as already stated, to try and arrange it, and Major Sandeman has directed them to endeavour to consolidate the present arrangements.

18th July.—This afternoon his Highness the Khan of Khelat under a salute of 19 guns left Mustung for Amanala, a distance of nine miles, en route for Khelat. He was accompanied by Major Sandeman and escort. His Highness had with him about 700 of his own troops. The European officers with the troops which accompanied Major Sandeman are Captain Gordon and Lieutenant Alexander, 3rd Sind Horse; Captain Shepherd, 4th Punjab Cavalry; Captain Scott, 4th Sikh Infantry; and Captain Wylie and Dr. Duke, the two latter on special duty with Major Sandeman.

5. 19th July.—To-day his Highness and cortége, accompanied by Major Sandeman and escort, arrived at Mungucher, distant 24 miles from Amanala. The village and lands here are the property of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan. It is a rent-free village, although a few of the lands pay in kind to his Highness the Khan. The people inhabiting the valley are mostly Langaws, and are the agriculturalists. A few Lehris (Brahooees) keep camels, and live by breeding them and hiring them to traders, &c. The ravages caused by civil war were very apparent here. Many of the small hamlets were in ruins, and the karezes (water-courses) had been allowed to fall out of repair.

6. 20th July.—Arrived at Zearut, a distance of 19 miles from Mungucher and 10 from Khelat. Here it was arranged, on account of a sharp fall of rain, that the Khan should halt till the afternoon of the following day, when his Highness would march for Khelat, making the entry into his capital in state.

7. 21st July.—In the afternoon, at 3 p.m., Major Sandeman proceeded to his Highness' camp, and was received by his Highness, who at once mounted and joined Major Sandeman. It had been previously settled that the following arrangements should be observed on the occasion of his Highness' entering Khelat. On his Highness leaving his camp, accompanied by Major Sandeman, the escort of British troops on his Highness' arrival on the ground would receive him in line with a general salute. They would then form column, and his Highness and Major Sandeman would place themselves at their head and march for Khelat. His Highness' troops were directed to join the column by placing themselves in the rear of it.

On arrival about half a mile from Khelat the Khan's troops in garrison there, consisting of cavalry, artillery, and infantry to the number of 1,200 men and two bands, received the Khan's cortége with salvoes of artillery. A salute was first fired in honour of the British troops accompanying his Highness, a second was fired in honour of Major Sandeman, and a third in honour of his Highness the Khan.

The Khan's son, Mir Muhammad Khan, a youth of 13 years of age, handsomely dressed, was on horseback in command of the Khelat troops.

On the Khan's approach Mir Muhammad Khan dismounted, and so did all the principal officers, and received his Highness with a general salute, the two bands striking up a lively air. Mir Muhammad Khan conducted his duties with perfect gravity and coolness, but at the close of the salute, before returning his sword to its scabbard, he with a very happy look rushed to salute his father. The Khan at once pointed out to him that his sword was in his hand unsheathed. Mir Muhammad Khan quickly recognised his mistake, returned to his place, sheathed his sword, and then proceeded to embrace his father and pay his respects to Major Sandeman. Three other sons of the Khan, Mirs Shah Newaz Khan, Brahim Khan, and Azam Khan, all pretty interesting children, were then brought to visit his Highness, one or two riding before their attendants on horseback, and the others on riding camels. On arrival near to where the Khan was, they saluted him and welcomed him back to Khelat. The sight was both impressive and interesting. After the reception of the young Khelat Mirs, his Highness proceeded towards his palace, his two bands playing in front of him. Major Sandeman accompanied him as far as the road leading to the main entrance to Khelat, and then took leave of his Highness.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In forwarding the enclosed letter, No. 146 of the 13th instant, from Major Sandeman, representing how he proposes to utilise the services of a portion of the Belooch guide horsemen (placed at his disposal in accordance with paragraph 15 of the Government of India Resolution quoted by him) in connexion with the arrangements for keeping the Bolan Pass open for traffic as lately reported, I have the honour to state that I have received no official intimation that the orders contained in the paragraph quoted by Major Sandeman, by which the services of these Belooch Guides were made available for purposes connected with his deputation to Khelat, have been recently altered or withdrawn.

2. Major Sandeman's references, which are not very precise, seem to point to the issue of orders through some other department placing the services of the mounted Belooch Guides primarily at disposal of the military authorities on the Northern Sind Frontier. I therefore submit his representations on the subject for consideration and orders.

Enclosure 1 in No. 113.

No. 146, dated Camp Mustung, 13th July 1876.

From Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty.

I have the honour to draw your attention to the remarks contained in the Khelat diary for the week ending 7th July on the subject of the transfer of the Belooch Guides primarily from the Political to the Military Department. The employment of these men, for reasons I shall set forth in this letter, is a matter of great importance, and on it in a measure the success of my arrangements for the protection of Kutchi and the kafila route viâ the Bolan depends.

2. In pursuance of Government of India Resolution No. 671 A.P., dated Fort William, the 14th March 1876, paragraph 15, which states: "His Excellency in Council further "desires, with reference to paragraph 52 of Colonel Munro's report, that the services of "the mounted police maintained in Sind districts under the designation of Belooch Guides "be made available, or placed under the orders of the officer in charge of our political "relations with Khelat," 150 of these men were placed at my disposal, and I have since employed them on political duty. I stationed 100 of them in Kutchi at the town of Haji-ka-Shahr.

3. But the constitution of this body of men is peculiar. They are chiefly Jakranis and Dhoombkees, a few being Kosaks and Boogtees. They were originally subjects of his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and the Jakranis and Dhoombkees resided at Lehri in Kutchi, but were translated from thence to Sind after Sir Charles Napier's hill campaign, and taken into Government service. In Sind a few were employed as guides to the military posts, but their chief duty was in carrying the letter post, and accompanying officers when on tour in the district. They were, moreover, taken into our service for purely political reasons.

4. The translation of this large body of men from Kutchi to our own territory, although doubtless it had the desired effect of preventing their committing their depretions on our territory, weakened the defence of Kutchi in no ordinary degree. It permitted the Murrees to make determined raids on the Dhoombkees left in their ancestral village of Lehri, situated at the foot of the Murree Hills. Sirdar Sorab Khan, Chief of the tribe, only the other day complained to me bitterly of this, and asked my aid to enable him to protect his village and ancestral lands from Murree inroads.

5. My plan is this. I propose to station 150 instead of 100 of these men at the village of Haji-ka Shahr in Kutchi, to afford escorts to kafilas as far as Bagh. I will place with them a certain number of Murrees, and as the Belooch Guides have a large complement of native officers of rank and standing, one of them can take charge of the Murrees, in addition to his other duties, and see that they behave properly. This I can easily arrange. By doing so I will not only afford protection to kafilas passing through Kutchi, but at the same time I will to a great extent check Murree raids. It will also enable me in a great degree to protect the village of Lehri, and thus restore to that part of the country the protection the translation of these men from Khelat to British territory originally deprived it of.

6. Another party of these guides are stationed in the police thana of Gundui in the Boogtee Hills, situated from 30 to 40 miles beyond the British frontier. From every point of view it is desirable that these men should be under the officer in political charge of the Boogtee tribe. In short, after considering the matter fully to prevent a dual system of management of the tribes being again introduced, I am of opinion that as many of these guides as can be spared should be permanently placed under the officer in political executive charge of Khelat affairs. The placing of the Jakranis and Dhoombkees in Kutchi in the way proposed in this letter I have discussed with his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and he considered the plan an excellent one, and one that would tend in no small degree to protect the Bolan trade route.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L,, Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of my letter No. 267 of the 25th instant, and its enclosure, to your address, I have the honour to intimate my having been advised since despatch of that letter that Major Sandeman's anticipations in regard to a probable deprivation of the services of Belooch Mounted Guides have been caused by an apparent misconstruction of the orders conveyed in your letter No. 1285 of the 30th May last.

2. Although it has been ruled that these guides shall be deemed to be primarily under the orders of the military authorities (through whom their pay is still drawn as before) until the issue of final orders by the Government of India regarding our future political relations with Khelat and the prospective management of the northern frontier of Sind, I am not aware that there is any present intention on the part of these authorities to deprive Major Sandeman of the services of those Biluch Guides who were placed at his disposal when leaving Jacobabad for Khelat.

No. 116.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 31st July 1876.

23rd July.—A letter written by Wakil Nawab Muhammad Khan by order of his Highness was received giving an account of the murder of Raza Muhammad Rind at the hands of Golab Khan (son of Itbar Khan Rind, Guide Ressaldar), Mannu Pahle and Golam Bolak. Full particulars of this case were reported to Colonel Munro in this office No. 163 of 23rd July 1876.

A translation of District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee's letter, No. 445, dated 24th June, to the address of Colonel Munro, Commissioner and Superintendent, submitting the reports of the Kurrachee Frontier Police, describing the conduct of Inspector Saheb Khan Choota was read out to his Highness the Khan during a visit he paid Major Sandeman. The reports stated that Saheb Khan had crossed the frontier with a party of his own police to fight his brother Jan Muhammad. The Khan stated that it was perfectly true what the reports described as having occurred; that Saheb Khan and Jan Muhammad were at feud; that he (the Khan) supported the latter, as Saheb Khan had openly defied the Khan's authority, but that his Highness would make peace between the brothers if Saheb Khan could be induced to visit Khelat. His Highness said that if Major Sandeman would summon him (Saheb Khan), he (the Khan) would give him a safe conduct, and would bring his brother to Khelat to meet him. This plan was arranged, and Major Sandeman sent a telegram to Colonel Munro, asking that officer to direct the attendance of Saheb Khan at Khelat. The Khan's safe conduct was sent to Mr. Bruce at Jacobabad for delivery to Saheb Khan.

Ressaldar Malguzar Khan commanding Guides at Haji-ka-Shahr, reported the arrival there of a caravan of 22 camels en route for Khorassan. Yar Muhammad, son of Alladina Koord, was ready to escort it through the Bolan Pass.

A petition was received from Mir Jam Ali, of Lus Beyla, reminding Major Sandeman that the British Government used to pay his father Mir Khan the sum of Rupees 15,000 annually on account of the telegraph line passing through his father's country. Of this sum, Rupees 7,320 was paid to the telegraph establishment, and the balance of Rupees 7,680 his father received. Since the apprehension of his father the Jam the personal allowance had been stopped. Jam Ali requested Major Sandeman to obtain the restoration of the allowance. In reply Major Sandeman wrote to Mir Jam Ali that his petition would be sent to the Commissioner, Colonel Munro, for favourable consideration, who will doubtless submit it to Government.

This forms the subject of a special reference to Government of India in the Foreign Department.—A. A. MUNRO.

2. 24th July.—Sirdar Gohur Khan, the Chief of Jalawan, sent a letter to Sirdar Asad Khan of Sarawan, now here in Khelat in attendance on his Highness the Khan, asking the Sirdar to obtain the release of Muhammad Mulla and Rahmat Brahooees, also of Dad Muhammad Kumbrani, now in confinement in Khelat. The Jalawan Sirdar wrote that his Highness the Khan had agreed at Mustung to release these men. Sirdar Asad Khan brought the letter of the Jalawan Sirdar to Major Sandeman, and asked him to advise him what to do. Major Sandeman advised the Sirdar to wait upon the Khan in Durbar, and respectfully remind his Highness of his promise, and ask for the release of the prisoners named in Sirdar Gohur Khan's letter. This advice Sirdar Asad Khan followed, and his Highness the Khan, on being asked, at once released the prisoners, who were sent to Sirdar Gohur Khan.

3. 26th July.—His Highness the Khan and Major Sandeman in consultation arranged to erect accommodation at Abigam and Kirta for the Koords, Minguls, and Murrees stationed there for the protection of the pass. Alladad, the brother-in-law of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, was appointed on Rupees 50 a month to aid Sirdar Moolla Mahomed in superintending the Bolan Pass arrangements and to register the trade passing to and fro. The appointment is a suitable one, as Alladad Khan is a man of influence and can read and write. It was made under the provisions of the Government of India Resolution No. 2819P., dated 16th October last, paragraph 27.

Jemadar Denar Khan of the Guides arrived in camp. His statement regarding the murder of Raza Muhammad by his brother Golab and five others was recorded. The Jemadar admitted that he had been to his home on leave in Sharan, where his elder brother resided. He was there for two months and returned to Haji-ka-Shahr on the 12th July. The murder of Raza Muhammad by his brother must have occurred soon after he left, as he got news of it on the 14th. His brother Golab Khan wrote him the news, saying he had killed Raza Muhammad out of revenge for the murder by him of Waidad Khan, &c. Major Sandeman on hearing Jemadar Denar's story of what had occurred was satisfied that there was a strong primâ facie case against him and suspended him from duty, pending further orders.

4. 28th July.—His Highness the Khan paid Major Sandeman his usual friendly visit. His Highness was accompanied by his three sons, Mirs Mahmud Khan, Shah Newaz Khan, and Azam Khan, and his usual retinue. Much conversation took place about the country known as the Shum plain, Watakri, Nussau, and Marunj, which extends for 100 miles along the Dera Ghazi Khan frontier, many acres of which are known to be of excellent quality, but which are lying uncultivated. Major Sandeman mentioned his proposals to his Highness for settling that part of the khanate, and of bringing it under cultivation, particularly stating that the help of one of his Highness' Commandants and a party of Khelat troops would be needed to hold the Shum plain. This remark was made purposely, as Major Sandeman was aware that the Commandants were both anxious as to their future prospects, and Major Sandeman wished them to know that although it was to be hoped there would be no longer service for them against the Brahooees and their followers, there was other important work before them. The Khan and his officials seemed much pleased and interested in Major Sandeman's proposals, and it was decided that the scheme in all its bearings should be discussed with the Murree Chiefs when they and the Khan visited Kutchi in the cold weather. The Shum plain is connected with British territory by the Cachar Pass, through which an excellent road has been made. The distance from Harrand is about 45 miles. Were the Shum plain occupied from Khelat, the whole of that portion of the British and Khelat frontiers would be brought under cultivation, and real and lasting progress made in the settlement of the two borders. Major Sandeman has explored every portion of that part of the country, and knows that his proposals for its permanent settlement are simple and easy of execution. It would moreover make the Bolan Pass easily accessible, through an open country, from Harrand in the Punjab. The routes leading respectively from Harrand and Shikarpur join at Bagh in Kutchi, and the distances from the two places are about the same. Both routes have been traversed by Major Sandeman. The former has advantages the latter does not possess, but they would be of at least equal value were it ever necessary to send troops viâ the Bolan Pass to Shawlkot (Quetta), or to any other part of Khorassan.

5. 29th July.—Mussamut Hur Bibi, the mother-in-law of his Highness the Khan and mother of the late Sirdar Taj Muhammad, sent an agent to Major Sandeman to say she desired to have an interview with him. Her request was at once complied with, and she visited Major Sandeman, accompanied by her female attendants and one or two male followers. When all were seated she said she had two requests to make: 1st, she had since the death of her son Sirdar Taj Mahomed got into debt, and she desired the Sirdars to arrange her affairs in accordance with the custom of the country; 2nd, that Rupees 1,200 a year besides 24 kharwars of grain, which her son's successor Sirdar Gohur Khan had fixed in consultation with the other Sirdars at Mustung as her yearly allowance, was not sufficient for her support. After a great deal of conversation it was arranged that the question of the settlement of her debts should be brought before the Sirdars when they assembled in Kutchi in the cold weather. With reference to the yearly allowance being increased, as what is now given had been fixed by her own friends and relatives, Major Sandeman told Mussamut Hur Bibi that this matter could not be taken up by him, but that on suitable opportunity offering he would speak to Sirdar Gohur Khan regarding it.

6. 31st July.—To-day the Khan's Commanders Fakir Muhammad and Mosun Khan and Naibs Abdul Latif and Faiz Muhammad, by order of his Highness, paid their respects to Major Sandeman. A great deal of conversation regarding the nature of the peace recently established took place. It was of a satisfactory nature. Major Sandeman showed the party the map of Beloochistan and the large tracts of valuable country (especially on the Dera Ghazi Khan frontier, which skirted Khelat territory for 100 miles) that were lying empty and uncultivated. All present took an apparently great interest in what Major Sandeman explained to them. The two Naibs asked some questions as to their future dealings with the Sirdars and their tribes, and it was arranged that Major Sandeman should consult with the Khan and Sirdar Asad Khan of Sarawan on the point, and if possible draw up a few simple rules for guidance, which both sides would agree to abide by. Naib Abdul Latif of Quetta then requested that Sirdar Alladina, who was responsible for the Bolan Pass and the trade routes between Shawlkot and Dadar, should also arrange that the Dumar-Kakars should not attack kafilas after they left Shawlkot. He said the Dumars used to get an allowance of Rupees 30 yearly in cash and 10 kharwars of grain, and if Sirdar Alladina would arrange for the entire safety of the kafilas to the Afghan border, this allowance would be restored. Major Sandeman, in reply to the Naib, said it would be necessary, before agreeing to the proposal, for him to consult his Highness on the subject, but that some suitable arrangement would be come to. The Naib then said that if the Amir of Cabul would direct the Naib stationed at Peshin to work in concert with him (the Shawlkot Naib), great benefit would accrue. Major Sandeman said he would also consult with his Highness regarding this, and see what could be done to meet his (the Naib's) wishes. Major Sandeman when giving the two commanders and the Naibs leave presented them with suitable khillats.

Wakil Nawab Muhammad Khan brought for perusal a letter from Arbab Wali Muhammad, Rais Kasim, Rais Kushal, Faiz Muhammad, and Rais Mitha to the address of his Highness the Khan, congratulating him on the recent settlement of the affairs of the country, and on the peace established between his Highness and the Sirdars, and informing him that the zemindars of Kunda, Palall, and Bar-Shori in Kutchi had returned to their land and villages. Many other zemindars of Lehri, Chator, and Shahpur who had left their lands and villages on account of the civil war, and had settled on the Shahiwah Canal in the Sind Frontier District, had all returned to their lands, and were greatly rejoiced on account of the peace recently established.

His Highness the Khan sent Major Sandeman the following reply to his letter, referred to in diary for the week ending 14th July 1876, it is dated the 29th July and runs as follows :

"I have received your letter of the 12th Jamadi-ul-Sani 1293 (5th July 1876) informing me on the subject of the services of Naib Pir Jan and my other servants rendered to you in the Bolan Pass, and that you had brought the same to the notice of Colonel Munro, Commissioner, Derajat, who was greatly pleased at hearing of the same, and reported it to the Government of India. Your letter I have fully perused, and in reply have to say that all my servants, wherever they are stationed, have my instructions to render every aid to the British officers, and are ever on the alert to attend to their wishes and orders. I am very much pleased with Mulla Pir Jan and that he has done you good service. All is well."

No. 117.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 7th August 1876.

1. 1st August.—A report was received from the Officer Commanding Guides at Hajike-Shahur in Kutchi, intimating that the Naib of Bagh had sent a party of infantry stationed there under Captain Mir Baz Khan to demand the surrender of Golab, Mannu, and others by the Rhinds on account of the murder of Raza Muhammad Rind. The Khan on being shown the report sent orders to Abdul Aziz, the Naib, telling him he was not to fight until every other means had been tried to obtain the surrender of Golab and the others. That Ressaldar Itbar Khan, the father of Golab, was expected at Khelat shortly, when efforts would be made to get him and his son Jemadar Denar to settle the case according to custom of the country. If this could not be accomplished, then other and more serious steps would be taken to obtain the desired end, and the whole affair would be reported for the orders of the British Government.

Rules were drawn up for the guidance of the Sirdars and Naibs in the way stated in diary for the week ending 31st July. The Khan's Wakil Muhammad Khan and Sirdar Asad Khan of Sarawan approved of them. Afterwards they were submitted to his Highness the Khan, who was pleased to give his assent to them, and directed his Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad to send a copy to each Naib for information and guidance. Major Sandeman arranged to send a copy of the rules to each of the Sirdars. A translation of them is annexed to this diary.*

2. 2nd August.—It being an old State custom for the Khan to present a newly elected Chief with a new standard of the tribe of which he had become the Sirdar, and as Sirdars Asad Khan of Sarawan and Gohur Khan of Zehri were newly elected, they petitioned the Khan at Mustung to present them each with a new standard. This the Khan had promised to do and said they should have them on his arrival at Khelat. In fulfilment of this promise Wakil Muhammad Khan to-day presented Sirdar Asad Khan with a new standard. He also sent one to Sirdar Gohur Khan. The two standards were made respectively of red and yellow silk.

3. 3rd August.—Sirdar Asad Khan of Sarawan (whose mother is the sister of the senior widow of the late Taj Mahomed, and whose brother Mirula is betrothed to a daughter of the deceased Sirdar, another daughter having married his Highness the Khan,) had an interview with Mussamut Hur Bibi, the mother of the late Sirdar Taj Mahomed, with the object of helping her to settle her dispute with Sirdar Gohur Khan. It was hoped that in the event of her doing so she would return to Zehri and live with the Sirdar, who would be a son to her, and then all disorder in Jalawan would cease. At the interview Mussamut Hur Bibi agreed to Sirdar Asad Khan taking her affairs in hand, and to his writing to Sirdar Gohur Khan on her behalf, and this the young Sirdar of Sarawan did. The result will be reported in a future diary.

*. NOTE.—In accordance with request contained in Colonel Munro's No. 301, dated 4th September 1876, the rules have been made Appendix A. 4 of Major Sandeman's Report No. 167, dated 31st July 1876.

His Highness the Khan to-day received a letter from Sirdar Gohur Khan reporting a dispute between the Hotmanzais and Zehris, and asking his Highness' aid to settle it. In reply his Highness directed Sirdar Gohur Khan himself to try and settle the quarrel. In the event of his not succeeding his Highness promised the Sirdar his aid in doing so.

4. 4th August.—Major Sandeman received a letter from his Highness, the contents of which were to the effect that as Sirdar Alla Dina had been placed in charge of the Bolan Pass arrangements, the Naib of Quetta had received orders to restore to the Dumar Kakars their annual allowance of Rs. 30 in cash and 5 kharwars of wheat and 5 kharwars of jowar, and to make over the cash and grain to Sirdar Alla Dina for payment to the Dumars. His Highness was of opinion that Sirdar Alla Dina should be responsible for the safety of all kafilas up to the Afghan border, and his Highness asked Major Sandeman to communicate with the Amir of Cabul with the object of getting his Highness to issue orders for the protection of his portion of the kafila route before it reaches Peshin. In reply Major Sandeman wrote to his Highness to say that Alla Dina would be directed to do as the Khan wished; at the same time it was to be understood that on this account the Naib of Quetta was not relieved of any responsibility regarding the safety of kafilas after they leave Shaul (Quetta). His Highness' request that the Amir of Cabul should be written to on the subject of the protection of kafilas would be submitted to the Commissioner for orders, his Highness' letter in original being sent to him with that object

In the afternoon his Highness the Khan paid Major Sandeman his usual weekly visit. A great deal of conversation took place regarding the state of affairs in the Khanate. A letter was read to his Highness that Major Sandeman had received from Sirdar Azaad Khan, Nowsherwani of Kharan, asking that officer to intercede with his Highness for the restoration of his estate of Punjgur and the settlement of his quarrel with the Khelat Government. His Highness after hearing the contents of the letter said that the estate referred to had been confiscated by his brother, the late Mir Nusseer Khan. That Sirdar Azaad Khan's daughter had been the wife of his brother, but at his death she had left Khelat with her father contrary to his (the Khan's) wish, and in defiance of custom and precedent. That until she returned and the family quarrel was arranged he (the Khan) did not desire to have anything to say to Sirdar Azaad Khan or his family. A reply to this effect was sent to Sirdar Azaad Khan. Major Sandeman added to it that he hoped a favourable opportunity would still offer of settling the quarrel, and did it do so, he (Major Sandeman) would keep the Sirdar's desire for a settlement of his quarrel with the Khan in memory, and would do his best to bring it about.

In conversation his Highness the Khan mentioned the arrival at Khelat from Kedj of Sirdar Khera Khan. This Sirdar's father, Sirdar Fakir Muhammad, is the Naib of that part of the Khanate. After a great deal of conversation it was decided that as the affairs of the Mekran coast were very unsettled, the Chiefs should all be summoned to a conference at Khelat. Sirdar Khera had come for help in the shape of troops. On consideration, however, it was decided to try first what effect summoning the Mekran Chiefs to a conference would have. It was hoped that by doing this the affairs of Mekran might be settled in same way as those of Jalawan and Sarawan had been arranged.

5. 5th August.—A letter was received from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to say that some of his tribe had fought over the produce of their lands, and 4 had been killed and several wounded. The Sirdar said he was on the point of starting to escort the treasure through the Bolan Pass, and that on his return he would settle the case. A similar letter was sent by this Sirdar direct to his Highness the Khan. In reply his Highness wrote the Sirdar that as the treasure was coming viâ the Mulla to Khelat, and not viâ the Bolan Pass as was first intended, the Sirdar need not escort it, but to remain at home and settle the quarrel in his tribe. If he could not succeed he was to report particulars to his Highness, who would aid him to do so. Major Sandeman also wrote to the Sirdar strongly urging on him the necessity of settling the quarrel and preventing further bloodshed.

6. 6th August.—Sirdar Môhiem Khan Gurgnari wrote a letter to Sirdar Asad Khan complaining that the Khan's Naib when taking batai from him had taken more than was the Khan's share. Sirdar Asad Khan took the letter to his Highness, who after some conversation issued orders which, when put in force, will remove the grievance. Sirdar Rahman Khan Zagar of Noshki sent a petition to his Highness to the effect that the Government Daroga had refused him his allowance as Naib of Noshki and had deprived him of two nights' water for his crops. The Khan wrote an order to the Daroga telling him to pay the Sirdar's allowance and to restore the water.

7. 7th August.—A petition from Golab, Pahli, Munnu, and Hasil Khan was sent by them to Major Sandeman, saying they were in the right in destroying Raza Muhammad, as he had killed one Waidad Khan. They asked Major Sandeman to intercede with the Khan for them. After consultation with his Highness a reply was sent telling these men that whatever causes of complaint they had against Raza Muhammad, as the whole of the Sirdars were at Mustung in consultation with his Highness the Khan (at the very time they committed the murders), with a view to the settlement of such cases, they ought to have come there and made a proper representation of the cause of quarrel with Raza Muhammad, and not, instead, have taken the law into their own hands. Now the only course open to them was to surrender unconditionally and trust to his Highness' mercy and justice, who, if they did so, would settle the case according to custom. Should they not adopt this course they would have to take the consequence of their misconduct.

A letter was received from Captain Humfrey, who is encamped, for convenience sake, with half the troops of the escort, about 8 miles off, asking Major Sandeman to allow the squadron of the Sind Horse with him to rejoin, as the military authorities had called attention to the severe night work the Sind Horse had to perform, and getting them all together would enable easier duty to be given them.

In reply Major Sandeman wrote that Captain Humfrey was heartily welcome to the services of the squadron of Sind Horse asked for, but that Major Sandeman could not understand why the Sind Horse were worked harder than the other troops of the escort, and had more night work to do. That he (Major Sandeman) was encamped with Dr. Duke and Captain Wylie in the open and for their entire camp he had no sentry during the day on duty, and only one during the night. That in Major Sandeman's opinion Captain Humfrey should consider well before reporting as to the necessity for working the men of the Sind Horse so hard during the night. In considering the matter he should remember they were not encamped in an enemy's country, but in that of a friendly ally, and Major Sandeman saw no necessity whatever for giving the Sind Horse the severe night work to which Captain Humfrey's attention had been called by the military authorities.

From F. Henvey, Esq., Under Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Lieutenant-Colonel. A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty.

I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter No. 257, dated 14th July 1876, and to acquaint you in reply that before passing orders on the arrangements recommended for the security of trade through the Bolan Pass, the Governor-General in Council will await Major Sandeman's final report, which is anxiously expected by His Excellency in Council.

2. Meanwhile you are requested to explain the following apparent discrepancy. In paragraph 6 of your letter under reply you anticipate that the cost of the arrangements proposed by Major Sandeman, estimated at Rupees 18,000, may be reasonably realised from tolls. The Governor-General in Council, however, understands Major Sandeman to recommend that the tolls should be paid in the Khan's name through Alladina Koord for distribution among the tribes interested in the traffic, and that the cost of the pass guards should be defrayed, not from tolls, but from the funds placed at Major Sandeman's disposal by the Resolution No. 2819, dated 16th October 1875.

Telegram No. 1893P., dated 18th August 1876.

From Foreign Secretary, Simla, to Colonel Munro, Dera Ismail Khan.

Your telegram of 17th. Viceroy authorises Major Sandeman to assist the Khan in settling disputes between his Highness and the Mekran Chiefs on the following conditions:—

1st. Major Sandeman must negotiate with the Chiefs through the Khan on terms first settled in concert with his Highness.

2nd. The object kept in view by Major Sandeman in conducting or supporting the negotiations must be to extend and consolidate the authority of Khan, and through it the power of the British Government, over Western Beloochistan, without crippling either the Khan or the British Government by inconvenient concessions or obligations.

Viceroy further desires that during the remainder of his sojourn in Khelat Major Sandeman's personal influence be exerted to the utmost in support of the Khan's dignity and authority, and that the greatest care be taken to prevent his Highness' position being in any way lowered in the eyes of his Sirdars.

No. 122.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 15th August 1876.

8th August.—Paid my usual weekly visit to his Highness at the Miri (palace). A good deal of conversation took place with the Khan and his advisers regarding the dispute between the Necharas and the Baranzais. It was decided to call the headmen of the two tribes into Khelat, as well as Sirdar Gohur Khan, and settle the case here.

2. 9th August.—Musti Khan, the Naib of Zehri, reported that his Highness had decided to leave the settlement of the question raised at Mustung as to whether or not the Zehri bunniahs should pay the Government transit dues on merchandise until the arrival of his Highness at Gundava. It was arranged that Sirdar Gohur Khan should be informed of this decision.

3. 11th August.—His Highness summoned Sirdars Gaji Khan, Gichki, Naib of Punjgur, Kouda Muhammad Khan, Kouda, Alla Dad, Kissani, Mir Murad, Mulla Faiz Muhammad, Haji Habtan, Dad Muhammad, Mulla Mehrab, Mulla Gool Dad, Sari Korani, Dad Muhammad, Gichki, Yar Muhammad, Nawab Khan, and others of Punjgur, to come to Khelat, and have their affairs settled in the same way as the affairs of the Jalawan and Sarawan Sirdars had been arranged. At the request of his Highness Major Sandeman also wrote to these Sirdars and headmen to the same effect. His

Highness visited Major Sandeman at his camp. The sowars who were sent to bring the parties belonging to the Nechara and Baranzai tribes who had fought about the produce of their lands arrived, bringing the parties concerned. It appeared that a quarrel and fight had taken place, and 10 on both sides were wounded slightly, but none were killed. After the arrival of the sowars Mir Pasand Khan, the brother of Sirdar Gohur Khan, also arrived and aided in sending the culprits into Khelat. He at the same time wrote to his Highness to say that as the case was a tribal quarrel it ought to come first before the Sirdar. It was arranged that as Sirdar Gohur Khan was coming to Khelat, the case would then be brought forward and disposed of under the provisions of the rules lately sanctioned by his Highness for the settlement of such cases. His Highness wrote Sirdar Gohur Khan to this effect.

4. 13th August.—The long standing dispute between Sirdar Ibrahim Khan and his brother-in-law, Mir Muhammad Khan, was to day finally disposed of, and it was arranged that the latter should leave Khelat and return to Wudd, taking his family with him. His Highness' sanction to this arrangement was obtained.

His Highness the Khan's chobdars were sent to warn owners of camels that a certain number would be required for his Highness' approaching march to Kutchi. Sirdar Asad Khan was of opinion that by the Mustung settlement the Brahooees were exempt from providing camels for his Highness. On the settlement papers being referred to it was found that certain villages, both in Jalawan and Sarawan, were bound to provide his Highness with camels. It was finally arranged that the chief owners of camels should be called into Khelat, and a suitable arrangement come to in concert and communication with them for providing his Highness with the required number of camels for the march. The Wakil, Nawab Muhammad Khan, admitted that the Khan had to pay Rupees 5-4 for the hire of each camel from Khelat to Kutchi.

5. 14th August.—To-day his Highness invited Major Sandeman to visit him at the palace or Miri, to be present at a distribution of khilluts which he intended to bestow on several of his most deserving civil and military officers. Major Sandeman accepted the invitation, and proceeded to the Miri at four in the afternoon. His Highness presented khillats to the following officers :—

Naib Abdul Latif.
Commander Fakir Muhammad.
Ditto Mohsun Khan.
Captain Haji Khan, Infantry.
Ditto Sher Khan, Artillery.
Ressaldars Emam Buksh and Sher Shah Khan.
Jemadars Fatteh Shah and Rawaz Khan.

6. 15th August.—His Highness received a letter from Sirdar Moolla Mahomed saying he was doing his best to settle the Brahamzai and Rastumzai case, the particulars of which were reported in last week's diary. The Sirdar wrote that if he failed he would write and say so, and apply for help in accordance with State custom. His Highness sent a letter in return giving a favourable answer to the effect that the Sirdar should have the aid required did he apply for it.

A translation of the diary of the District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee, for the weeks ending 30th June and 7th July was submitted for the perusal of the Khan, in which the conduct of Sahib Khan Choota and his brother Jan Muhammad was reported on. Also that a fight between the Khelat Government and Sirdar Gohur Khan, Zehri, was said to have taken place, in which 80 men of the Khan's army and 30 Brahooees of Zehri were killed. That Sirdar Gohur Khan himself was supposed to be wounded. His Highness in reply stated that the report was quite without foundation, although two months ago, and previous to the terms of peace having been arranged, a skirmish between Sirdar Gohur Khan's people and his troops did take place in the Mulla Pass, in which 18 soldiers were killed. In regard to the loss the Brahooees suffered, his Highness said he could give no information. In respect to Sahib Khan and Jan Muhammad's quarrel the Khan remarked that he had already given full particulars about it on a former occasion. That the two are brothers, and Jan Muhammad is not a bad character, although Sub-Inspector Ali Muhammad reported him to be so, but his Highness was of opinion that his doing so is due to a feeling of partizanship on account of Sahib Khan's being, like himself, employed as a Native Officer in the Kurrachee Frontier Police.

To-day a letter was received from Captain Reynolds, commanding detachment 3rd Sind Horse, complaining that some of his regimental bunniahs bringing supplies for his regiment had been charged transit duties, and four out of several detained, as the merchants refused payment, and asking Major Sandeman to interfere. A reply was sent to say that the bunniahs ought to pay the transit dues in accordance with the State laws. That as they had come viâ the Bolan Pass with a caravan, and were bringing merchandise, it was impossible to exempt them; but if they had any special reasons to urge why they should not pay on certain articles, after having first paid the dues charged, if they would then attend in camp, and place them before Major Sandeman and his Highness' Wakil, their claim to exemption would be listened to, and if sufficient and reasonable grounds were given why a refund of the money should be made, it would be obtained from the Khelat Government. The levy of custom dues has been named "black-mail" by those objecting to them. This is clearly a misnomer, and the Khelat Government in taking them is in no invidious position, as even the British Government levies them on sugar, salt, &c. Moreover, the amount taken by the Khelat Government on each camel load was fixed in consultation with the British authorities, and is levied in accordance with the treaty of friendship existing between the two Governments.

I have the honour to submit a Report, No. 167, of the 31st ultimo, with Appendices, from Major Sandeman, on special duty in Khelat, summarising his proceedings and their results, since his second deputation to Khelat territory in April last, under orders conveyed in paras. 11 and 12 of the Government of India Resolution No. 671 (a) P., of the 14th March 1876, as quoted at length in para. 2 of his Report.

Two of the Appendices required translation.

2. Two of the Appendices, which are in tabulated abstract form, have been written in the Persian language, and I have deemed it advisable to attach English translations of these statements for greater readiness of reference.

Conditions of Commissioner's sanction to second expedition to Khelat.

3. I was required, by para. 12 of the Government of India Resolution, to satisfy myself, on a review of the results of Major Sandeman's first mission to Khelat, and the measure of success which had attended that deputation, that the Khan of Khelat and the principal Chiefs of the Sarawan and Jalawan parties were ready to accept Major Sandeman's arbitration, before arranging for a second meeting between Major Sandeman, the Khan, and Sirdars, in some convenient part of Khelat territory, to renew attempts to effect the objects contemplated by the Government of India Resolution of the 16th October 1875.

Reasons which influenced Commissioner in deputing Major Sandeman a second time to Khelat.

4. Difficulties had presented themselves in course of the former deputation, as already reported; but a consideration of the very favourable reception accorded to Major Sandeman personally by his Highness the Khan of Khelat and the leading Brahooee Sirdars of the Sarawan party, as well as by the people of the country generally, who had given unmistakeable signs of their confidence in Major's Sandeman's capacity to effect a lasting settlement of disputes between the Khan of Khelat, the Sirdars, and the dependent tribes, appeared fully to justify my arranging for Major Sandeman's second deputation to Khelat territory, as I was authorised to do in the Resolution of 14th March 1876, conveyed to me through your Department.

Jalawan Brahooees to be included in any general measures.

5. That Resolution required that the Jalawan party of Brahooees, and with them, as a natural consequence, the tribes inhabiting the south-western portions of the Khelat State, should be included in any pacificatory measures which might result from Major Sandeman's arbitration. Circumstances had, up to the period of his second visit, prevented that officer from communicating personally with the leaders of the Jalawan confederacy; but some Sirdars of that party were known to maintain a correspondence with the more influential Sarawan Chiefs, and to have expressed anxiety as to the probable position to be assigned to themselves in any approaching congress having for its object a settlement of those disputes which had prevented the semblance of cordial co-operation between the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars for many years—indeed, almost since his accession to the Khanship—and had, moreover, caused much disorganisation and misery throughout Beloochistan.

Preparations for a second deputation made, and on what grounds.

6. Being thus encouraged to believe that, if Major Sandeman were to proceed a second time to some convenient place in Khelat territory, from which he could more easily maintain friendly communications with the Khan of Khelat and the Sirdars of the country, of whatever party; and if he could induce the contending parties to meet him at such place, he might, with better prospects of success than on the previous occasion, attempt to secure the results contemplated by the Government Resolution of 16th October last; I lost no time in making the necessary preparations for his departure from Jacobabad, properly escorted as ordered.

Major Sandeman's departure, 4th April.

7. The hot weather had already set in, necessitating speedy arrangements. Major Sandeman started on his second mission on the 4th April, as reported at the time.

Opening of Bolan Pass to traffic a principal preliminary object.

8. It will be remembered that a principal object of Major Sandeman's deputation to Khelat was to inquire and report what could be done for the protection of trade viâ the Bolan Pass, and whether a system of fixed tolls on caravans could not be arranged for, the proceeds of which should go to the tribes interested in the protection of that route; and he was accorded a discretion, within certain fixed limits, to do in regard to this matter what might seem to him to be most advisable.

Caravans blocked at Shikarpur.

9. In course of two visits paid from Jacobabad to Shikarpur by Major Sandeman and myself in the months of February and March last, we found crowds of Affghan caravan merchants blocked there, with goods valued at several lacs of rupees; these men were clamorous for some protective arrangement, by which a safe passage to Candahar, through the Bolan Pass, might be secured to them. Detention in Sind during the hot season—the only alternative present to their minds in the then state of affairs—could but prove ruinous to them in every sense. Accessions to their numbers were constantly arriving from Hindustan, and the pressure was daily becoming greater. The Bolan Pass had been closed to traffic for some years; and the Mulla and other passes to the south-westward, which it had lately been the Khan of Khelat's object to keep open, so as to secure a monopoly of the transit dues to himself, had also become impassable very recently, owing to the complications, culminating in actual hostilities, succeeding the assassination of Sirdar Noordeen Mingul at Khelat.

Re-opening of Bolan imperative.

10. As an important preliminary to further operations, the re-opening of the passage through the Bolan, and the safe transit of the numerous caravans detained, as above described, were pressing necessities. Intimation was given to all the expectant merchants that they must be prepared to start for Khorassan on a certain fixed date, and to travel at some distance in the wake of Major Sandeman's escort towards the Bolan Pass.

Brief reference to measures in report.

11. The results of Major Sandeman's measures for effecting this safe transit are briefly referred to in his report, the particulars having been fully reported at the time. The secure passage of merchandise, valued at 11 lacs of rupees, of several thousands of unarmed men, and of beasts of burden, through a pass which had been rendered impracticable for some years past by neighbouring tribes of marauders, was in itself no ordinary achievement, if antecedent circumstances are duly estimated, especially when we bear in mind that this service was performed through the instrumentality and paid assistance of those same tribes (whose previously unchecked inroads had caused the closure of this ancient traffic route for years), at a time when the military escort which had been calculated upon for protection was unfitted for the duty by the appearance in its ranks of a deadly epidemic.

Outbreak of cholera.

12. Cholera, as already fully reported, broke out in Major Sandeman's camp within a week of his departure from Jacobabad, but his movements were rather accelerated in consequence. The exertions of all the European officers, and more particularly of the medical officers, on the trying occasion were most praiseworthy, and have been acknowledged. The sympathies of the uncouth hill men even appear to have been enlisted, for assistance was cheerfully rendered at every stage of the rapid onward march, under a full conviction that the objects of the expedition were peaceful and conciliatory.

Progress of mission accelerated in consequence.

Selection of Mustung as a place of sojourn.

13. The heat of the season and experience of sickness amongst the troops composing the escort suggested the selection of a healthy elevated situation for the sojourn of the mission, and Mustung, a town three marches from Khelat, was chosen as the place from which Major Sandeman's communications with the Khan of Khelat, and the Sirdars generally, might be maintained without inconvenience to either party, and at which a general meeting might be arranged, when all danger of contagion should disappear from the camp.

Its advantages.

Accessibility of Sarawan leaders.

14. The Sarawan Chiefs of the neighbourhood, who had exhibited a friendly feeling from the first, responded with alacrity to the invitation to Mustung. The Khan of Khelat, impelled for a time either by sinister influences, or by a doubting reluctance to come to terms with his Sirdars, exhibited a disinclination to visit the British officer at Mustung; but he ultimately put his scruples aside, accepted the invitation, and proved to be both amenable to advice, and very reasonable in his demands. The details of Major Sandeman's dealings with the Khan of Khelat and the Sarawan Sirdars were furnished in the letters of 2nd and 14th June last, to which reference is made in para. 6 of the report.

Khan of Khelat's reluctance to join.

He accepts the invitation.

Details in former reports.

Jalawan Chiefs also arrive.

15. The Jalawan Chiefs, with Mir Jam Ali, of Lus Beyla, who joined the camp in acceptance of Major Sandeman's invitation from considerable distances, at the hottest season of the year, did not arrive at Mustung until the 5th of July.

Committee appointed to arbitrate.

16. All being thus assembled, it was resolved, the Khan, Sirdars, and advising officer all concurring, that the matters in dispute should be referred to a Select Committee, the members of which should be nominated, three by the Khan of Khelat, and three by the Sirdars. Two special complaints against the Khan's Government by Mir Jam Ali, of Lus Beyla, of which the particulars have been given in Major Sandeman's letters of the 26th May and 14th June last respectively, were reserved for separate disposal, subject to orders of the Government of India.

Its composition.

List of Sarawan cases.

17. Appendix B. contains a list of 34 cases, or causes of complaint, preferred by Sarawan Sirdars and their followers. Of these 29 cases were decided by the Committee in favour of the complainants, the Khan of Khelat making concessions in a liberal spirit. One dispute of all pervading consequence regarding contributions of lucern grass, required by the Khan from his subjects generally, has already been described by Major Sandeman in former communications, and it is especially referred to in his present report. The Khan has waived his claim for the current year, and the matter awaits final disposal under advice from the British authorities. The recommendations of the Committee of Arbitrators appear to be worthy of acceptance. A perusal of this abstract conveys an impression unfavourable to the action of some of the Khan's Naibs, especially Naib Faiz Muhammad, whose proceedings appear to have been uncontrolled, though of the most arbitrary and oppressive complexion.

General discontent as to grass exactions.

Settlement postponed.

Impression conveyed by perusal of abstract of cases.

List of Jalawan cases.

18. Appendix C. similarly contains a list of cases or complaints preferred by the Jalawan Sirdars, of which most were decided in favour of the complainants, the Khan acceding in the most generous manner, apparently, to all the proposals of the Committee. He, moreover, held a special investiture of Sirdars Gohur Khan and Shukur Khan with the turban of Chiefship, and their installation as successors to the late Sirdars Taj Mahomed and Noordeen; Asad Khan, Raisani, being at the same time recognised as principal Chief of the Sarawans.

Khan's proceedings.

Formal public ratification.

19. Formal declarations of the terms of reconciliation agreed to on both sides were made in open Durbar, and ratified, on oath, in the most solemn manner, according to Muhammadan custom.

Objects effected.

20. The principal objects of Major Sandeman's deputation to Khelat appear thus to have been effected with an amount of success which could hardly have been anticipated, considering the virulence of pre-existing enmities, and the lengthened period during which such enmities and differences had prevailed. A formal reconciliation between the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars, of whatever party, has been effected, mainly through the prudence and sagacity of the deputed officer, whose personal popularity and undoubted influence amongst the tribes of Beloochistan have been very largely instrumental in securing results which it would have been a difficult task for any officer not possessing these qualifications to effect.

Results of negotiations.

21. Although a section of the Murree tribe, viz., the Mazarani Murrees, on the Bolan, have been entertained to serve with the Koords in protecting travellers and traffic by that route, a conclusive settlement as to the future relations of the Murrees, as a tribe, with the Khan of Khelat, has not yet been arrived at. Major Sandeman is sanguine that success will attend his measures in this direction also. The disputes between Murrees and the Government of Khelat were stated in the Government Resolution No. 2819 of 16th October last to be closely connected with the intertribal quarrels prevailing in Beloochistan. The main portion of the tribe, under Ghuzzun Khan, the Chief, are tolerably amenable to any demands made of them by Major Sandeman; but the establishment of a permanent and practically useful understanding between the Khan of Khelat and this notoriously unmanageable tribe, who are his subjects only in name, and who for many years past have independently carried on a system of marauding expeditions in all directions, will doubtless require time and a continuance of the present measures of supervision and repression for its accomplishment.

State of affairs with the Murrees.

Supposed amenability of the tribe.

Their comparative independence.

Time and careful supervision required in regard to them.

22. Throughout the negotiations Major Sandeman appears never to have lost sight of the injunctions conveyed to him, which required him to do nothing calculated to fetter the future action of Government in regard to Khelat affairs on the one hand, or to lower the Khan of Khelat in the eyes of his Sirdars and subjects generally. Major Sandeman treated the Khan from first to last with the consideration which the latter's position as head of the State demanded, whilst maintaining, in the same manner, a conciliatory and encouraging attitude towards the Sirdars.

Major Sandeman's adherence to instructions.

Demeanour towards Khan and Sirdars.

23. In the diaries which Major Sandeman has furnished, and which have been transmitted weekly, as received, to the Private Secretary to the Viceroy and Governor-General, as ordered, full details of the deputed officer's proceedings, from time to time, have been given; and Major Sandeman refers to these details in various parts of his present report. The objects of his mission were authoritatively declared to be: 1st, to find out the real causes of the prevailing quarrels and general disorganization, which had previously been but imperfectly known; 2nd, to endeavour to effect an amicable settlement; 3rd, to give an expression of his views in regard to such differences as presented unusual difficulties, and as could not be settled under his own advice. Finally, he was required to report upon the future relations between the Khan's Government and the Murree and Boogtee tribes; and he was allowed a discretion, as already noted, within the limit of Rs. 66,960 per annum, sanctioned by the Government of India for expenditure, in connexion with these tribal affairs, to arrange for the re-opening of the Bolan Pass.

Contents of diaries.

Recapitulation of objects of mission.

24. That Major Sandeman's measures, to attain all these objects, have been attended with remarkable success cannot be gainsaid. The report now submitted, and his previous reports and diaries, sufficiently demonstrate the fact, and I cannot anticipate that any sacrifice of the advantages obtained by these preliminary successes (which require perseverance in following out the measures now begun so favourably, to ensure consolidation and prospective permanency) is contemplated. The deputed officer, in all his proceedings, appears to me to have fully justified the hope expressed regarding him in the 17th paragraph of the Government of India Resolution of 16th October 1875, viz., "that the arrangement, by which the conduct of "our relations with the frontier tribes had been entrusted to him, would in time produce "more substantial effects," than the difficulties under which he had, up to that time, laboured, rendered possible.

Success attending Major Sandeman's measures.

Justifying anticipations in previous order.

25. The Khan of Khelat's authority had, for many years, been very circumscribed, owing to the general disturbances consequent upon the disaffection of the Sirdars. He is shown to have had a personal object in keeping his Bolan Pass closed to traffic of all kinds, his direct power was confined to a short distance from Khelat, were the main portion of his little army has always been kept, doubtless to ensure his personal safety. Though naturally of a fickle and vacillating disposition the Khan has exhibited an unmistakably friendly spirit throughout, and he has shown himself to be amenable to good advice, and ready at all times to accede to Major Sandeman's proposals, and to be guided by that officer's counsel. His antecedents, as noticed in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the Resolution of October 1875, did not afford good augury of his later conduct, which has proved more favourable than we could have hoped for. Personal intercourse with Major Sandeman may have induced a conviction that the deputed officer's earnestness in the discharge of the duties entrusted to him could not be ignored; that the causes of quarrel and disturbances would be thoroughly investigated, and that a strong effort would be made to restore a modicum of peace to the distracted State of Khelat, and of confidence to its inhabitants, who had so long been strangers to security either in life or property. Whatever the inciting causes the fact is patent, that the Khan of Khelat has recently met our advances in the most becoming spirit, and has shown a laudable amount of deference to the views and wishes of the Government of India, as conveyed to him through Major Sandeman. More could hardly, in my opinion, have been expected of his Highness, and the occasion would, therefore, seem to be suggestive of the propriety of reverting to our former friendly relations with him, as recommended by Major Sandeman in the 13 and 14 paragraphs of his report.

His character.

Amenability to advice.

His antecedents.

Major Sandeman's probable influence over him.

Probable, other cause.

Khan's favourable disposition.

What it suggests.

26. The state of the Sind border during the past eight or nine months has been one of almost undisturbed tranquility. The few outrages committed in Kutchi and other parts of Khelat by members of the discontented factions smarting under the more recent exactions of the Khan's Naibs and troops had caused some anxiety to be felt for a time, lest they should ultimately affect the peace of our border; but no such result ensued. The Murree tribe have been restrained from continuing their raids in Kutchi, in apparent expectancy of the issue of affairs at Khelat; and the Boogtees have proved to be quite amenable to our requirements, abstaining from every semblance of molestation. Circumstances in every direction point to the present opportunity as the most favourable for carrying out what has been so successfully begun, viz., the re-establishment of more friendly relations than ever with the Ruler, Chiefs, and people of Beloochistan, who have all been impressed by our later dealings toward them; and the confirmation and extension of our influence for good in this long distracted region; for without the exercise of a firm control over the affairs of this neighbouring State, we may expect a reversion, sooner or later, to the confusion and perils of the past. The discordant elements still exist, and nothing but the maintenance of a firm directing power, such as our Government alone possesses, can prevent their breaking out anew, should an opportunity be afforded.

Sind border tranquil.

Murree tribe restrained.

Good conduct of Boogtees.

Appearances favourable.

Continuance of control necessary.

Probable results of its withdrawal.

27. Major Sandeman deduces, reasonably in my opinion, from his recent experience of the state of affairs in Khelat, that a continuance of the control and guidance lately introduced is indispensable to the permanent success of his own measures. Without such, there can be no hope of anything approaching to respectable administration in Khelat, or of harmonious action between the Khan and his Sirdars. A withdrawal from the position would, in all probability, precipitate forcible interference, in the interests of British subjects, and of peace on our frontier. The restoration of the discontinued subsidy to his Highness the Khan, and the re-appointment of a Political Agent to Khelat, to aid and guide his Highness in acting up to his late professions, both towards the British Governments and his own Sirdars, are deemed by Major Sandeman to be necessary measures, in order to extend and perpetuate the advantages already gained; and I presume there can be little question as to the soundness of that view in the circumstances.

Major Sandeman's views on the subject.

His recommendations.

Commissioner's concurrence.

28. The proposal for temporarily locating Captain Wylie at Dadur, to supervise the Bolan Pass arrangements during the cold and trading season, appears to be worthy of sanction. The re-establishment of friendly controlling intercourse with the Khan of Khelat, and the location at Khelat again of a European officer as Political Agent, would doubtless tend to obviate the necessity for any long continuance of a British officer at Dadur.

Temporary.

29. I do not consider myself to be called upon, in transmitting this report, to offer any comments upon what is set forth in paras. 21 to 25 inclusive, reviewing the former proceedings of 1872, in connection with the attempt then made to reconcile the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars. As the reports of these proceedings are already before Government, Major Sandeman's explanations, in modification of the views then enunciated, can be judged of without any remarks from me. The description given in paras. 26 to 30 inclusive of Major Sandeman's report demonstrates that nearly 20 years of intestinal strife and disorder in Khelat have induced a feeling of abject dependence, or incapacity throughout the country, occasional signs of energy from either side notwithstanding. The deduction is that, under this sense of comparative exhaustion, all would welcome our friendly mediation and influence to be continued in the promotion of greater justice and security.

Remarks on paras. 21 to 25 of report unnecessary.

Contending parties in Khelat wearied out.

30. Before bringing this transmitting letter to a close, I may be permitted to remark that the experience of the intervening months has not led me to alter or modify, to any extent, the general views enunciated in my report of the 12th February last, to the address of the Secretary to the Punjab Government, some of the more important of which were accepted in paras. 14, 15, and 16 of the Government of India Resolution No. 671 (a) P, of the 14th March last. It is therefore unnecessary to repeat them here.

Commissioner's views on certain points unchanged.

31. It is my pleasing duty, in forwarding these papers, to allude to Major Sandeman's indefatigable earnestness and uniform success in conducting the affairs entrusted to his management to an issue so favourable, and so much in accord with the expressed wishes of the Government of India. If anything is wanting to complete success within the limits of the power and discretion assigned to him, it will be obvious, from a perusal of the records of his proceedings, that circumstances beyond his control interfered, and that there is still hope that, even in regard to these matters, ultimate success will be attained. Much difficulty and many obstacles had to be overcome in securing the advantages already gained; and I can have no doubt that the conspicuous merits and service of this officer will receive due acknowledgment from the Government he has served so zealously and successfully.

Major Sandeman's conspicuous services.

Impediments to complete success.

Difficulties overcome.

32. I concur generally in the commendation bestowed by Major Sandeman on the officers attached to his mission and to the escort, the conduct of the troops composing the latter having been uniformly praiseworthy under trying circumstances.

Commissioner's general concurrence in commendation of officers.

33. The remarks in favour of Captain Humfrey commanding the escort are, I believe, well merited; but the proposal made as to his allowances would be more properly considered in the Military Department. Captains Shepherd, Scott, Young, Lieutenant Harrison, and Surgeon McRury of the escort are all favourably mentioned.

Captain Humfrey and other officers.

34. Captain Wylie and Surgeon O. T. Duke were specially attached to the mission. The first-named officer accompanied Major Sandeman on his first mission to Khelat, and has rendered him most valuable assistance in various ways, besides mapping the country. Dr. Duke's exertions during the cholera outbreak were most conspicuous, and have already received acknowledgment. He is a zealous and accomplished officer, whose professional and other services on this occasion have been very marked.

Captain Wylie and

Dr. Duke.

35. Amongst Natives who contributed not a little to the success of Major Sandeman's negotiations, Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan Mazari and Jamal Khan Lughari deserve prominent notice. Both accompanied Major Sandeman in his two missions to Khelat, giving him their cheerful assistance on all occasions. To Imam Buksh Khan is largely due the merit of the satisfactory conclusion to the labours of the Committee appointed to arbitrate between the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars, of which Committee Imam Buksh Khan was in all likelihood the most valuable member, Jamal Khan seconding him well.

Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan.

36. Ressaldar Amir Khan, of the 4th Punjab Cavalry, is highly commended by Major Sandeman, who also notices favourably his office assistants.

Ressaldar Muhammad Amir Khan.

37. It is, moreover, gratifying to observe that a few of the Khan of Khelat's Naibs and officials distinguished themselves in promoting the objects of Major Sandeman's mission to Khelat, and in thus obtaining a public expression of their master's approval.

Commendation of Khelat officials.

38. In concluding this transmitting letter, I have to state that a full report on the subject of the memorial in regard to the release from imprisonment of the Jam of Lus Beyla is under preparation. The correspondence on that subject is very voluminous, and has only recently been received by me in a complete state; but compliance with the requisition on that question shall be no longer delayed, as it has formed a prominent subject of solicitation on the part of the Jalawan Sirdars, and even by the Khan of Khelat himself, who has been induced to make a written application in the matter, which shall be submitted with my report on the case within a few days.

Concluding remarks regarding case of Jam of Lus Beyla.

Correspondence voluminous.

Report to follow speedily.

Enclosure 1 in No. 123.

No. 167, dated Camp Khelat, 31st July 1876.

From Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Colonel A. A. Munro, Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat and Khelat Frontier.

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your No. 117, dated 3rd April 1876, forwarding for my special information and guidance a copy of the printed Resolution No. 671 (A) P. of the Government of India, dated the 14th March last, which was passed in reference to our reports as per margin concerning my former mission to Khelat.

•Major Sandeman's No. 8 of 5th February to Commissioner, Derajat.
Colonel Munro's No. 20 of 12th February to Secretary to Government, Punjab.

2. In forwarding to me the Government Resolution above referred to in the letter under reply, you directed my attention to the provisions of its 11th and 12th paragraphs, and desired that I should in conducting the present mission to Khelat be specially guided by them. For easy reference I here transcribe them:—

"Paragraph 11. After full consideration of all the circumstances of the case the Government of India are of opinion that the course proposed by Colonel Munro and supported by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is the best that can be adopted under the circumstances, viz., that Major Sandeman should be allowed to endeavour to carry out, under more favourable circumstances, the objects for which he was deputed to the Murree Hills, it is clear that he has not as yet had a fair chance of achieving success, present circumstances are not such as to render success hopeless; on the contrary, there is so far as can be judged a desire on the part of all for the intervention of the British Government, until therefore a renewed attempt at mediation shall have been made and failed, the Government of India is not prepared to abandon the line of action taken in October last. Intervention under these circumstances will be widely different from that proposed by Sir William Merewether and rejected by the Government of India, in this office letter No 16P., dated 5th January 1875."

Paragraph 12. Accordingly orders will at once issue that if Colonel Munro is satisfied that the Khan and principal Chiefs of all parties, including Jalawans and Sarawans, are ready to accept Major Sandeman's arbitration, he is authorised, should he deem such a course desirable under present circumstances, to arrange for a meeting between Major Sandemen, the Khan, and his Sirdars, in Kutchi, or elsewhere, as may be convenient, and make a renewed attempt to carry out the objects set forth in the Government Resolution of the 16th October last, that is a general settlement of differences between the tribes themselves, and between them and the Khan, and further in extension of those orders if the Khan should show a proper spirit the re-establishment of friendly relations between him and the British Government. Major Sandeman should be accompanied by a military escort of such strength as the Commissioner may consider amply sufficient for his protection and dignity, the troops being taken from the Frontier Forces of the Punjab or Sind, or both the Punjab and Sind, as the Commissioner may think fit. Major Sandeman may also be allowed the services of any available officers, civil or military, whose assistance he requires and the Commissioner considers necessary, and the Commissioner is empowered to advance to him from the treasury such funds as he may need. In short the Government of India having confidence in Colonel Munro and Major Sandeman desire that the latter be allowed under the Commissioner's orders full opportunity of effecting under the most favourable circumstances a settlement of Khelat affairs. A letter from his Excellency the Viceroy to the Khan of Khelat in reply to the latter's communication will be transmitted to the Commissioner in due course."

3. I will now place before you the manner in which I put these orders of the Government of India in force, but in order to do this as effectively as possible, it is advisable to review my recent reports and diaries describing the progress of the mission as they set forth clearly that its objects as laid down in the Resolution from the very commencement up to the day of my bringing my proceedings to a successful conclusion of which I have already informed you by telegram, were not for a moment lost sight of.

4. On the 4th of April 1876 I left Jacobabad with an escort of regular troops as per margin. My first duty was to re-open the Bolan Pass to the caravans returning from India to Khorassan, and which had been blocked in large numbers at Kurrachee, Shikapur, and elsewhere on account of the unsafe state of the passes. The way I conducted this duty I reported in this office letter No. 92, dated 21st April 1876. In addition to what I stated therein, it will be sufficient for me to note here that since I entered the country caravans in value 11 lakhs of rupees have from the date I reopened the Bolan to traffic passed to and, fro in perfect safety. The fees levied by me on kafilas, amounted to Rs. 11,919–7–9, have been divided between the Khan and his Sirdars in the following proportions:—His Highness the Khan received custom dues amounting to Rupees 7,917–6–3, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed (1-14th of the same) was paid Rupees 609, and the tribes escorting the caravans got Rupees 3,393–1–6.

2 mountain guns.

2 companies, 30th Bombay Native Infantry.
100 sabres, 4th Punjab Cavalry.
3 companies, 4th Sikhs Infantry.

5. In this office No. 94, dated 22nd April last, I reported to you the severe visitation of cholera that broke out amongst the troops of my escort. This, although in itself a great calamity, did not in any way, on account of the friendly conduct of the Bolan tribes, interfere with the mission, although it delayed it in the Bolan Pass for a fortnight. I was enabled successfully to arrange for the safe escort of the caravans by the tribes themselves, and after a sufficient time had elapsed to enable us to bring up our sick, which I had to leave behind for the reason given in the report above referred to, during which we entirely shook off the disease. I marched for Mustung a town belonging to his Highness the Khan, situated half way between Khelat and Quetta. I had previously acquainted the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars, both of Jalawan and Sarawan, that I had fixed, in accordance with the orders of Government, upon Mustung as our place of meeting, and I invited them to come there to meet me.

6. What transpired up to this time and up to the date of his Highness the Khan and the Sarawan Sirdar's arrival at Mustung is fully detailed in my two reports to your address, Nos. 114 and 122, dated the 2nd and 14th June respectively. On the 5th of July the Jalawan Sirdars and Mir Jam Ali, of Lus Beyla, arrived in Camp. An account of their arrival is given in my telegram of the 5th July 1876, and in diary for week ending 7th idem. After the reception of the whole of the Sirdars by his Highness the Khan, a committee was appointed by his Highness to consider the different complaints and grievances of the whole of the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars and of Mir Jam Ali of Lus Beyla. The latter brought two grave complaints against his Highness' Government, viz., the invasion of Lus Beyla by the Khan contrary to the guarantee given by Major Harrison, and the occupation of the Kamal Khan estate. Full particulars of these two occurrences from the Khan's point of view, as well as that of the Jam, is also given in this office No. 122, dated 14th June, and its enclosure, and in No. 112, dated 26th May 1876. As the Khan and the Jam viewed these occurrences very differently, and as the Government of India alone can dispose of them, moreover as one of the enclosures to the first-named report is a letter from his Highness to his Excellency the Viceroy describing the state of his affairs, it seemed to me desirable, and in this the Khan and the Jam concurred, to leave the Lus Beyla questions to be disposed of by his Excellency in Council when replying to the Khan, should he consider this course desirable.

7. The list of the grievances of the Sarawan Sirdars named in the margin is annexed to this report. They numbered 34 complaints in all, and out of these they obtained a decree in their favour in 29 cases. The only dispute between the two sides that was not settled was the one about the lucerne tax, particulars of which were given in diary for week ending 23rd June. The Khan agreed not to levy the tax this year. Whether he will remit it for good will depend greatly on the way his affairs are finally settled by the Government, but this point I will notice further on in this letter.

Sirdar Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan.
Sirdar Alla Dina Koord.
Sirdar Shadi Khan, Bungulzai.
Sirdar Said Khan, Mahomedshahi.
Sirdar Junda Khan, Shawani.
And other minor Chiefs.

8. The other cases brought by the Jalawan Sirdars against the Khelat Government were also of grave importance. First of all there was the vacant Chieftainship of the Zehris to be settled, the "dustar" of which was claimed by Sirdar Gohur Khan. The case of the late Sirdar Noordeen had to be considered, as well as the recognition of the deceased Sirdar's son as successor to the Chieftainship. There were also a list of 37 cases brought by the Sirdars against the Khelat Government. Of these 34 were given in favour of the Sirdars by the committee appointed by the Khan to investigate them, and its decisions were confirmed by his Highness. A correct list of these cases is also annexed to this report.

9. His Highness the Khan, after disposing of all the grievances brought against his Government in the way recorded above, attended at my camp, and there in full Durbar, according to old State rule and custom, recognised Sirdars Gohur Khan and Shakar Khan as the successors respectively of the late Sirdars Taj Mahomed and Noordeen. To each the Khan gave a khillut, and congratulated them on succeeding to the Chieftainship of their respective tribes. His Highness also recognised the young Sirdar of the Sarawans, Asad Khan, as successor of his father, and bestowed on him the usual khillat. His father, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, is still alive, but for reasons unnecessary to record here the Sarawans in 1872 had deposed him, and given his "dustar" to his son Asad Khan, who is a fine intelligent lad, and now with me here.

10. At the close of the Durbar, a full description of which is given in diary for the week ending 14th July, the whole of the settlement papers, as well as the terms on which the Khan had agreed to make peace with the Sirdars, were introduced into Durbar on a chair on which the Koran was placed. The terms of peace were then read out by Lala Hittoo Ram, also the agreement for the better protection of the Bolan Pass,* as well as the Khan of Khelat's memorandum, on the basis of which the Khan agreed to come to terms of peace with the Sirdars.

* See p. 226.

11. At the conclusion of the reading of these papers a salute of 19 guns was fired to announce to all that peace between the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars had taken place. All then said the "Fattiah" or Mahomedan oath usually taken on all such ceremonies and occasions as the one the Khan and his Sirdars had been engaged in, whereby they bound themselves to be guided by the terms of peace just declared, and by the settlement as recorded in the papers then before them in Durbar. An account of the Durbar, and the programme according to which it was conducted, as well as the translation of the spontaneous address presented to me at its conclusion by Mir Jam Ali and the whole of the Sirdars of Beloochistan, were submitted to you along with the diary for the week ending 14th July.

12. I have thus, as described above, carried out the instructions of the Government of India as contained in their Resolutions of the 16th October 1875 and the 14th of March 1876, which can be briefly summed up as follows. I was directed to arrange a meeting between the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars of Jalawans and Sarawans; to influence the Khan of Khelat cordially to carry out at this meeting the objects of the Government set forth in the first-named Resolution. These briefly were to arrange for the safety of the Bolan Pass traffic, to settle tribal quarrels, and to report on the general relations between the Boogtee and Murree tribes and the Khelat Government. As stated, all these have been carried out; but with reference to the last point it is desirable here to notice that the Boogtees are on friendly terms with the Khelat Government. The negotiations with the Murree clan have not yet been entirely brought to a conclusion. The Muzerani or Bolan Murrees have taken service and agreed to help Sirdar Alla Dina Koord in the protection of the Bolan Pass, and a few of them and one headman will always remain with the Koords on duty for the protection of the pass at Kirta. His Highness the Khan has written a letter to the Murree Sirdar regarding the terms of peace to be arranged between the Khelat Government and the entire Murree clan. This letter his Highness made over for delivery to Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan, who is now at the Murree head-quarters, endeavouring to consolidate present arrangements for the protection of Kutchi. His Highness in his letter to Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan has invited the Murree Sirdar and his headman to meet him in Kutchi in the cold weather. Until this meeting takes place I trust to be able to keep the peace between the two sides. I may here mention that for nine months the Murree Sirdar at my request has succeeded in preventing his tribe from raiding in Kutchi, which augurs well for the honesty of his professions, and for his desire to act up to them.

13. His Highness the Khan of Khelat having, therefore, cordially carried out the orders of the Government of India as described in this and former reports referred to herein, I am of opinion that the provisions of paragraphs 29 and 12 respectively of the afore-named Resolutions with regard to future relations with the Khelat Government should be at once put in force. I here quote the former for the sake of easy reference; —" Should the measures now authorised be successful in affording reasonable security " to trade through Khelat territory, and should his Highness the Khan show an earnest " desire to co-operate for this end, and to return to a proper sense of his duties, it will " afford the Governor-General in Council great pleasure, on receiving an expression of " regret for what has occurred, to restore the former subsidy, and re-establish the old " friendly footing with his Highness' Government." In considering this point I earnestly hope that the requests of his Highness, as contained in his letter to the address of his Excellency the Viceroy alluded to in paragraph 6 of this report, may receive the favourable consideration of the Government of India. I believe from what I have heard that his treasury is nearly exhausted, and that to give his Government a fair start the material aid of our Government is required. This might be done by applying a portion of the arrears of the allowance due to his Highness in the way proposed by me in my former report, No. 122, dated 14th June 1876, and the remainder in replenishing his treasury and in re-imbursing him for the Rs. 90,000 paid by him for the plunder of kafilas in 1872.

14. In considering this it has to be remembered that the Commissioner's settlement of 1872 declared the Sirdars liable not only for the plunder of the kafilas, but for the losses the ryots of the Khelat State sustained during the rebellion of that year. Their poverty apparently necessitated Rs. 90,000 of the Rs. 1,00,000 given to his Highness being distributed to the plundered merchants, while nothing, it seems, was recovered of the plunder taken from the ryots of Gundava, Bagh, Mustung, Quetta, Khozdar, and Dadar. As already reported by me, it was the hope of getting the present peace arranged on the basis of the former one that caused the Khan to delay in coming to Mustung. For reasons given in that report I could not consent to his Highness' request. Moreover, I knew the Sirdars were too poor to pay anything. I trust, therefore, that what I now advance may tell in favour of his Highness when the Government come to fully consider the present sitnation.

15. Regarding my proposals for the protection of the Kandahar caravan trade as contained in this office No. 139, dated 1st July 1876, in addition to what I have already said therein, I merely desire to add that I propose to depute Captain Wylie, directly it is cool enough, to Dadar to report as to whether the Koords and others are acting up to their agreements. The presence of a European officer at Dadar to mediate when necessary between the tribes and the Khan's officials regarding disputes about fees, &c. due on kafilas (for the present at all events) would be very valuable, and in deputing Captain Wylie on the duty I know that my views and wishes will be scrupulously attended to and carried out with tact and judgment. I propose that he should hold with reference to the Candahar trade very much the position towards the Khelat Government which the British Joint Commissioner at Ladakh holds towards the Government of Cashmere. It is well in considering this proposal to remember that the additional Rupees 25,000 which I propose to add to the subsidy of Rupees 50,000 to be paid to his Highness the Khan is conditional on the Bolan Pass being permanently kept open. His Highness therefore would, I know, under such circumstances be glad of Captain Wylie's aid with his officials in maintaining the pass arrangement intact, while the Sirdars would hail it with the greatest satisfaction and rejoicing.

16. Before concluding this portion of my subject it is desirable to acknowledge here receipt of your docket No. 234 A., dated 20th June 1876, forwarding for my information and guidance copy of Foreign Secretary's telegram to your address, dated Simla, 14th June 1876. It is convenient for my purpose to transcribe it here. I therefore do so. It runs as follows:—

" Your telegram of the 12th received. You are to convey to Major Sandeman the Viceroy's congratulations on his having obtained the assent of the Khan, as well as the Sirdars, to the mediation of the British Government. You will also inform him that the Khan's letter has been received, and that the answer to it will be forwarded together with further instructions to Major Sandeman on receipt of the report referred to by Major Sandeman in his letter of the 24th May, but you are at the same time to instruct Major Sandeman that he must in the meanwhile be scrupulously careful not to commit the Government of India to a line of policy towards either the Khan or the Sirdars.

" The Viceroy desires to draw your attention to the fact that Major Sandeman has not yet furnished his Excellency with the details necessary for the formation of an opinion as to the true character of the complaints addressed by the Sirdars in general terms to that officer, and that many of these complaints are founded on statements apparently incompatible with recorded facts which were carefully examined into at the time of their occurrence. The Viceroy also expects that Major Sandeman will now afford the Khan adequate opportunity to learn and answer the accusations brought against his Highness by the Sirdars, and to lay his own case fully and fairly before the Government of India. Major Sandeman will doubtless collect with impartiality and report with fidelity the statements made to him on both sides, but he will be careful not to commit himself or the Government to an opinion, or to do or say anything which can have the effect of weakening the Khan's authority in the eyes of his disaffected vassals. On receipt of the complete information which is now awaited, the Government of India will form its own judgment, and thereupon take such steps as it may deem expedient in reference thereto."

17. In reference to the first portion of the telegram recorded above, it was with feelings of deep gratitude and thankfulness that I received his Excellency the Viceroy's congratulations on the success which had attended my negociations with his Highness the Khan and his Sirdars. In regard to the middle and concluding portions, I telegraphed to you in reply referring the Government to the contents of my reports, and stating that from the first I had been scrupulously careful to maintain the honour and dignity of his Highness the Khan on every possible occasion.

18. I now desire specially to draw your attention to the statement in the telegram, the exact words of which I here again quote, viz., that "many of these complaints (of the "Sirdars) are founded on statements incompatible with recorded facts which were carefully examined into at the time of their occurrence." In stating this I think there is some misconception on the part of Government, for if you refer to the Commissioner in Sind's report No. 340, dated Jacobabad, 5th April 1872, to the address of his Excellency the Governor of Bombay, and compare the grievances of the Sirdars brought forward in it with those recently settled by me with the approval and consent of his Highness the Khan's Government, lists of which form annexures to this letter, I think you will find them to be one and the same. If I may be permitted to say so, the difference between the present mediation and the former one simply consists in the settlements now agreed to having been carried out, while the first one was merely settled on paper, but never put in force. There is abundant proof of this. I will here illustrate it.

19. For instance, take the Sirdars' complaint about the lucerne tax. Regarding this the Commissioner in his 21st paragraph of his report above referred to says:—"There "would appear to be some foundation for one act on the part of his Highness the "Khan, or his followers, which savored of not sufficient regard for the interests of the "people, that during his tour last summer in some places an undue quantity of forage "(lucerne) was appropriated and full compensation not given. At least the Wuzeer's "replies on this point are not complete, and in conversation he allowed this might have "been the case. But I would point out that this was the first time for eight years or so "that the Khan had been able to visit that neighbourhood, and it is after all not such an "unusual circumstance when native rulers traverse their country. I do not mean to say "it is right, but surely it is not sufficient to warrant rebellion as a means of obtaining "redress."

20. The above impression of this grievance of the Sirdars was given by the Wuzeer to the Commissioner, and, to say the least of it, putting it in the above light was most disingenuous of him, as it entirely misled the Commissioner as to the true nature of the complaint. The Sirdars do not object to give the Khan, free of cost, ordinary supplies of forage when encamped amongst them, this they did lately during the Khan's stay at Mustung, but what they really complained of was a very oppressive tax newly imposed on them by his Highness, full particulars of which were given in diary for the week ending 23rd June 1876. His Highness the Khan has merely in defence of the imposition of this tax to say that the obtaining of forage for the winter months by requisitions on all in the way complained of is necessary as he has an army to maintain which no former Khan kept up. He fully admits the grievance, but says he is too poor to remove it. I think the matter is one which demands the serious attention of the Government of India, simply on account of the nature of the measure called a "trangar," as it may mean, I found, any size the fancy of the Naib chose to dictate. The Brahooees did not expect to be altogether exempt from giving lucerne (which is cultivated by them in the same way as wheat, barley, &c.), but they reasonably enough desired that the size of the "trangar" should be fixed, or that the Khan's Government should levy the tax in cash instead of in kind. I very nearly obtained the sanction of the Khan to the last-named proposal, and I feel certain his Highness, if liberally dealt with regarding his yearly allowance in the way proposed by me, will take my advice on the point. He knows that this tax falls heavily on the poorer class of cultivators, and that its levy affords a fertile source of bribery. I believe the empty state of his treasury, caused by rebellion, and having to keep up in consequence such large establishments, has had much to do with this and other acts of oppression which, without doubt, the Khelat Government has been guilty of during the last 12 or 15 years.

21. But if other examples are necessary regarding what I state, there is the fact that the grievances of the Jalawan Sirdars, including those of the Jam of Lus Beyla, for reasons given by the Commissioner in the 36th, 37th, and 38th paragraphs of his report, were not inquired into and disposed of at all. Moreover, the Sarawan Sirdars were not obliged, as directed by him, to restore all property seized during the rebellion by the Sirdars and their followers from the ryots of Beloochistan, whether in Khorassan or Kutchi. From the first the Sirdars apparently objected to do this, knowing probably that it was out of their power to do so, for the Commissioner in his 27th paragraph records: "At first the Sirdars raised objections to Nos. 2 and 3—(2) that the property "plundered from the kafilas be given up to the owners, (3) all property seized during "rebellion to be restored—but I informed them no deviation could be allowed, &c."

22. Doubtless it can be advanced that kafilas were plundered in the Bolan by the tribes after the Commissioner's mediation, and also in Bagwana and Khozdar by the late Sirdar Noordeen, and that the Rupees 90,000 paid from the Khan's treasury went to reimburse the losses of the merchants to whom they belonged. I do not think that this fact, if such it is, alters the line of reasoning in the least, for the principles on which the Commissioner's decision was based are clearly laid down in his 25th paragraph, and these are in no way altered, were this the case. He annunciates them in the following words:—"The second and third stipulations I considered only equitable and un-"questionable necessary. Were they not enforced, a premium on rebellion would have "been established, and the faithful many would have been in a worse position than the "rebellious few. The Sirdars and their followers would have largely benefited by the "plunder they got possession of when engaged in lawless proceedings, and it would have "been to the advantage of the unruly in future to side with any Chief who chose to raise "the standard of revolt, while traders who were passing through the country relying on "the good-will of the inhabitants thereof, and the poor people of the country who were "leading peaceful lives, would have been the chief sufferers."

23. These words surely can leave no doubt as to the intentions of the Commissioner and the grounds on which his decision was given, and that therefore his Highness is right when he says that it was not in accordance with the mediation of 1872, that he was mulcted in Rupees 90,000 to pay the merchants who had been plundered by the robber tribes, and that the Sirdars could not be considered to have fulfilled the conditions of the mediation until after they had returned to the ryots the plunder they and their followers had taken from them during their successful rebellion.

24. I have been particular in bringing these points forward, as to my mind they go a long way to demonstrate why it was that the former mediation did not prove successful. It seemed, moreover, desirable and necessary to explain the Khan's statements on this subject contained in his letters to my address already forwarded. But the cause for the former mediation proving unsuccessful will be still more apparent if in addition we consider the case of the late Sirdar Noordeen and his exclusion from it, as well as the imprisonment of Sirdar Mir Khan of Lus Beyla, his son Mir Jam Ali, and brother-in-law (Noordeen's own brother) Mir Ibrahim Khan. The fact of the exclusion of Noordeen from the mediation did not escape the notice of the Government of India, for in the 4th paragraph of the Foreign Secretary's letter No. 1214P., dated the 30th May 1872, to the Secretary to Government, Bombay, in recording their opinion on the subject, they expressed their anxiety at it in the following words:—

"As to the advisability of the Commissioner's procedure in abstaining from further endeavours to bring Noordeen Mingul within the compass of the reconciliation effected between the other Sirdars and the Khan, his Excellency in Council is disposed to believe that it would be better even yet to hold out to him a direct offer of an amicable settlement. Unless, indeed, Sir William Merewether feels sure of the Khan's ability to coerce him. Until the disorders consequent on the Sirdar's continuance in arms are put a stop to, the suppression of the insurrection cannot be considered as complete. Intelligence of the steps taken with this end, and of the measure of success by which they are attended, will therefore be anxiously awaited by the Government of India."

25. After this was written, it is true that Sirdar Noordeen did submit to the Shahgassee, and that such was reported, and that in consequence he was placed by his Highness in charge of the province of Lus. But I would ask you in considering this to remember that notwithstanding his nominal surrender (subsequent events have proved it was only nominal), his sister's husband, Mir Khan, whose place Sirdar Noordeen took as ruler of the province of Lus Beyla, remained in our hands a prisoner, as well as his own brother and nephew. Under such circumstances, unless (as noticed by the Government of India in their letter above referred to) the Khan had the power to coerce Noordeen and maintain the peace of the Jalawan country, as well as that of Lus Beyla, the suppression of the insurrection could not be considered as complete, and therefore as a sequence the mediation could hardly have been expected to prove effective.

26. I will now briefly notice the form of Khelat rule and demonstrate the absolute necessity that exists for the Government of India in order to preserve the peace of the country which it has brought about only after great trouble and expense, taking a much more active part in Khelat politics than it has hitherto done. Both the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars look to the British Government as the paramount power to settle all quarrels and difficulties that from time to time may arise between them, and consider themselves entirely subordinate to it. This feeling is very strong with both sides, and in our own interests surely we ought to cherish and maintain it.

27. On account of the long civil war which has existed more or less since the present Khan came to the throne 20 years ago, the estrangement of the Khelat Government from the Sirdars of Beloochistan has become greater and greater year by year, until the two sides had come to act as if their interests were entirely separate, instead of being, as is really the case, identical. Until the date of the recent peace not one of the Sirdars of Beloochistan, with the exception of Sirdar Fakir Muhammad Bezonjao, Naib of Kedj, had the least intercourse for good with the Khan or his Government.

28. But recent events have shown that however deep the evil had penetrated at heart, both sides felt it to be a great one, and one the British Government alone had power to cure. This appears clear from the memorandum filed by the Khan, which formed the basis on which peace was made, and from the fact that the Khan, on the opportunity being afforded him by the intervention of the British Government, at once recognised the election by the tribes of Sirdars Gohur Khan, Shakar Khan, and Asad Khan to the Chieftainships respectively of Zehri, Mingul, and Sarawan. This is a very important point and worthy of much thought, for it is also a fact that Gohur Khan since the death of Sirdar Taj Mahomed in 1865 had refused, because he was not recognised as his successor, to be reconciled to the Khelat Government. He and his followers infested the roads and injured trade and the Khan's Government, on the opportunity offering, in every possible way. Yet when called upon by me to come to Mustung and pay his respects to his Highness, he not only did so without demur, but on his election by the tribe being recognised, he made full submission to the Khan and took the oath of allegiance to his Government. As a result it is admitted on all sides that for the future the Raj route to Kurrachee viâ Lus Beyla, as well as the one by the Mulla Pass to Jacobabad, will be perfectly safe. Surely this is a very instructive episode in the history of Khelat politics and speaks volumes. I read it in this light. That although the Khan and his Sirdars have been separated by circumstances for years, their estrangement is not incurable. That both sides feel the necessity that exists for supremacy being maintained over them by the British Government, and recognise to the full that its interference in their joint interests when necessary can alone preserve the peace of their country. This is further clear, I think, from both sides desiring the British Government to deprive them of the power to wage civil war until after they have obtained permission from it to levy it.

29. At the present moment the Khelat Government consists of the Khan and his Naibs as the civil administrators of the country, and his two commanders, Fakir Muhammad and Mosun Khan, at the head of about 2,500 mercenary soldiers, most of whom are Pathans from the Candahar and Pesheen valleys, as his military power. Most of the Naibs are household slaves, and the Khan has invested them with absolute and irresponsible power. In short, on account of the life of retirement his Highness leads, being shut up in his palace from one year's end to the other, there is no check on them whatever. As said, with the exception of Sirdar Fakir Muhammad, not a single Sirdar is connected with the civil administration of the country.

30. When I first asked his Highness to come to Mustung, I heard he was quite willing to do so; but that one of his Commanders, Mosun Khan, who is a Pathan from the Pesheen Valley, did all he could to prevent it. However, the influence of this officer was not all powerful, and the Khan, on certain matters regarding which I have already reported being explained to him, at once did as I requested.

31. Still, as the Sirdars are very numerous, and as they and their tribes form the real strength of the country, to preserve the peace between the two sides under present circumstances and difficulties of the situation, the direct interference of the British Government acting as the paramount power is absolutely necessary and must be maintained. The Khan, his Sirdars, and civil and military administrators know this perfectly, and have one and all expressed to me their conviction of the entire impossibility of forming or continuing a united or harmonious administration without a continuance of the assistance and direction so lately afforded them by my mediation; hence the mention even of my leaving the country has been viewed by both parties in the State with dismay. But to make its interference really effective for the future, the British Government must state to both sides that it accepts the responsibility they desire to enforce on it, and will aid them materially, as the paramount power, to preserve the peace of the country, and moreover in my opinion it should be fully impressed on all that the British Government will view with extreme displeasure, now that the affairs of the country have been got into respectable order, any departure on the part of his Highness' Government or on the side of the Sirdars from the terms of peace agreed to between them at Mustung, and which they have taken a solemn oath to abide by.

32. Personally the Khan, Mir Khodadad Khan, is a weak Prince, but at the same time he is not without considerable ability. During the recent negotiations, I have watched him carefully and well; and although convinced of this, I am equally so of his loyalty and devotion to our Government, whose interests he considers to be his care, as far as he has the power to watch over them. He is very easily influenced for good or evil, but has the greatest respect for the British Government, and I feel certain from what I have seen of him that any advice his Excellency the Viceroy may consider it expedient to give him when replying to his letter lately forwarded will not pass unheeded. But much will depend on the form it takes, and in saying this, I trust I do not exceed my province. I say so because my own experience of the Khan has told me that on account of his peculiar temperament and education, advice when given to be lasting must be impressive, and must act as a salve to his own doubting, uncertain, and hesitating nature. There is nothing that I have seen about him to make me believe that he is at heart evil-disposed, cruel, or in any way unworthy of the kindness and consideration of our Government. Far from it: I firmly believe the present unhappy state of his Government has been brought about and is due as much to force of circumstances over which he had no control as to any other cause. But taking the state of affairs as described by me into consideration, and as I believe them really to exist, it will, I doubt not, readily be admitted that the presence of an experienced European officer (for the present at all events) at his Court, fully supported by our Government, to aid and guide him in the management of the Khanate is essentially necessary, and unless this is granted, I am of opinion the present mediation will not get a fair trial, and the peace of the country consequently will probably not last.

33. It now becomes my pleasing duty to bring to notice the exemplary conduct of the troops composing my escort, which has been very prominent and has merited my warmest thanks and gratitude. Since the time we entered Beloochistan up to date not a complaint of any kind by the people of the country has been brought against any officer or soldier belonging to them.

34. To Captain Humfrey my most sincere thanks are due for the ready aid he has rendered me on every possible occasion. I consider his services to the Government on account of the way he has maintained discipline amongst the troops and for the help he has given me generally have been conspicuous, as certified to in the last paragraph by fact. He informs me that although the troops of the escort of all ranks number 900 men, yet, as he is on escort duty and not on field service, he gets no command allowance; I have seen his work and know the responsibility he has had to accept in its performance. I trust, therefore, the Government of India may be pleased to allow me to enter in the political bill of the mission, the command allowance of Rupees 600 a month, which Captain Humfrey would have been entitled to had he commanded the troops as a field force and not merely as an escort. He is a most deserving officer, and I trust the Government, on an opportunity offering, will not forget his services during the present mission to Khelat. He has been ably aided by his staff officer, Lieutenant Harrison, whose services I doubt not he will bring to the notice of Government. I merely mention them here to certify that they have not passed unnoticed by me, and that I thoroughly appreciated them.

35. The officers on special duty with me, Captain Wylie and Dr. Duke, are entitled to very high praise for the way they have worked under me. Captain Wylie has been with me for nine months, and is a most reliable and industrious officer, doing his duty on all occasions with such thorough heartiness and good-will as to ensure to him at once the confidence of the officer under whom he is serving. I have asked in paragraph 15 of this report to be allowed to retain his service in connexion with the Bolan Pass trade.

36. Dr. Duke's conduct, as already reported, during the cholera was beyond all praise I believe it was due to his zeal and devotion to duty that we were able so speedily to shake off the disease, and that so few who were seized with it died. I understand that he desires to remain with the Political Agency on its re-establishment, and I am sure you will confirm what I say in stating that Government, should it bestow the appointment on him, could nowhere find a medical officer more fitted for the duty. I do not know what the emoluments are, but I trust they will be sufficient to induce an officer of Dr. Duke's medical skill and ability to accept the appointment. From a political point of view a medical officer attached to this Agency of tried skill and ability must be very valuable and a great desideratum.

37. Where all have behaved well it seems invidious to mention any officer or officers in particular, but I feel I would not do my duty did I not mention Captains Young, Scott, and Shepherd, and Dr. MacRury. These officers had a very trying time of it during the cholera. Captain Shepherd I employed on several occasions with his Highness the Khan. I consider him a most reliable, obliging, and deserving officer, and one in whom I could place confidence. His Ressaldar Mahomed Amir Khan was of the greatest value to me, as I employed him once or twice on really important duty in connexion with the recent negotiations, and I consider he is deserving of the consideration of Government.

38. The services of Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, who from the first conducted the negotiations with the Khelat Government, and were members of the committees which assembled to decide the disputes pending between his Highness the Khan and the Sirdars, were invaluable. Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan's zeal and devotion to British interests has already received on many occasions the highest approval of yourself and every officer without exception, military or civil, with whom he has served. Only lately you specially brought his eminent services on our frontier to the notice of Government. I will address you separately regarding these two Sirdars' services, and will recommend what, in my opinion, would be a suitable reward.

39. The services of Lala Hittoo Ram and Ganpat Rai, respectively my Vernacular and English clerks, although performed in a humbler capacity, have not been of less value. The duty I had to entrust to them has been heavy and important, as the commissariat work to a great extent had to be performed by them, and many miscellaneous accounts in consequence had to be kept. No officer could have been better served in this particular than I have been by them, and I will also in a separate communication propose a suitable reward for them.

40. This report would not be complete did I not record that, although some of the Khan's Naibs are not deserving of praise, some are. Wakil Muhammad Khan, his son Naib Pir Jan, and Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad worked very well, and in settling the disputes between the Khan and his Sirdars evinced an excellent spirit. In reward I bestowed on them khilluts in the name of the Government in public Durbar, and I trust my doing so will meet with your approval and with that of the Government.

Enclosure 2 in No. 123.

Appendix A.

Translation of the terms of peace arranged between his Highness the Khan of Khelat, Mir Khodadad Khan, and Mir Jam Ali of Lus Beyla, acting for his father, Jam Mir Khan, and the Brahooee Sirdars of Beloochistan.

1. Whereas quarrels for some years past have existed between the Khelat Government, Mir Jam Ali Khan, son of Jam Mir Khan, Ruler of Lus Beyla, and the Sarawan and Jalawan Chiefs, Major Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazi Khan, on special duty, was deputed by the British Government to mediate between the said Khan of Khelat, Mir Jam Ali, and the Jalawan and Sarawan Sirdars; and whereas the said Major Sandeman has so mediated and given his advice to the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars, and the said parties having availed themselves of it, have willingly agreed to make peace (the terms of which are recorded herein) and we do hereby declare it.

2. We, the Sarawan and Jarawan Sirdars, do announce our submission and allegiance to his Highness Mir Khodadad Khan, Khan of Khelat, which we make in accordance with ancient rule and custom, his Highness having restored to us (in accordance with ancient law and precedent) our ancient rights and privileges, and having promised for the future to treat us with every kindness and consideration, provided we continue loyal and faithful to the Khelat Government according to old State usage.

3. His Highness the Khan has granted the following concessions to us, his Sirdars :—

1st. His Highness confirms the election of Sirdar Asad Khan, son of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, to be the Sirdar of the Sarawans, and has acknowledged him as such in Durbar, and has presented him publicly with the usual khillut.

2nd. His Highness acknowledges and confirms the election of Sirdar Gohur Khan of Zehri by the Jalawans as Sirdar of Zehri in room of the late Taj Mahomed, and has presented him with the usual khillut.

3rd. His Highness recognises Mir Shakar Khan, son of the late Sirdar Noordeen, as Sirdar of the Minguls, and agrees that Mir Ibrahim Khan, his uncle, shall act for him until he is of age. He has received the usual khillut from his Highness.

4. We, Mir Jam Ali Khan, son of Jam Mir Khan, and the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars having made public submission to his Highness according to precedent and ancient custom, and having presented the Khan with a petition asking his Highness to intercede with the British Government for the release of Jam Mir Khan, now in confinement in British territory, and his Highness the Khan having received the petition and having granted it; his Highness forwarded it under cover of a letter from himself to Major Sandeman asking that officer to send both to the British Government with a view to Jam Mir Khan being released. This wish we repeat in this record for the consideration of the British Government.

5. His Highness presented Mir Jam Ali with a khillut as an acknowledgment of peace having been declared between Khelat and Lus Beyla and of his having been taken into favour.

6. The complaints and grievances brought by the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars regarding the confiscation of lands, &c. against the Khelat Government were settled by a Committee appointed by his Highness the Khan. The members of the Committee were Sirdars Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan, Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, and Jamal Khan, Lugari, on the part of the Sirdars, and Wakil Nawab Muhammad Khan, Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad, and Mulla Abdulla Jan on the part of his Highness the Khan. The Committee having carefully inquired into each case recorded their opinion in writing, which was presented to his Highness, who also recorded his opinion and order on each case. The papers containing the list of cases, the result of each inquiry and final decision are separate, but we, the Brahooee Sirdars, agree to the decisions recorded therein by his Highness the Khan, and will abide by them.

7. The separate agreement recorded in writing come to by Major Sandeman with his Highness the Khan regarding the protection of the Bolan Pass trade, we, the Khan of Khelat and the Sarawan Sirdars, do hereby agree to and will abide by its terms.

8. His Highness the Khan hereby agrees to treat his Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan with kindness and consideration in accordance with their respective positions which have been handed down to them from their forefathers. On the other hand, the Sirdars do promise to obey the Khan of Khelat's order according to old usage. His Highness the Khan and the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars do hereby agree that what has passed between them be forgotten. For the future should the Khan's Naibs or other officials cause any Brahooee injury or oppress him, the matter will be referred to the Khan for inquiry and decision, and the Sirdars on this account will not rebel against the Khelat Government; but should the Khan not do justice, will first refer the disputed point to the British Government for decision. In the same way the Khan will not wage civil war against the Sirdars for any offence until his Highness has first referred the point in dispute through the Political Agent to the British Government. I, Mir Khodadad Khan, Khan of Khelat, and we, his Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan, agree to this condition. In short, we all bind ourselves to hold (1) by the conditions contained in the memorandum which set forth the preliminary conditions of peace; (2) by the settlement papers containing the award of the arbitrators confirmed by the Khan; (3) by the Bolan Pass agreement, to which we (the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars of Sarawan) have affixed our seals, and we swear to be bound by their conditions. Further, we (the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars of Sarawan and Jalawan) do hereby heartily agree to aid to the best of our power in keeping open the trade routes, to preserve the peace of the country, and we swear we will do nothing to violate this our written agreement of peace. This our joint agreement we make over to the British Government as a record of the terms of peace made between us, and to which we have affixed our seals.

Translation of Appendix B.

Statement of Complaints made by Brahooees of the Sarawan Faction against the Khelat Government, in regard to Confiscation and Attachment of Lands, &c. formerly held by the Complainants, as brought before the Committee of Arbitrators approved by the Khan of Khelat and the Complainants, in Camp, at Mustung, in July 1876.

No.	Name of Complainant.	Abstract cause of Complaint.	Abstract rejoinder by Mulla Faiz Muhammad, Naib of Mustung.	Abstract Decision of Arbitrators.		Order of his Highness the Khan of Khelat.	Notes by Major Sandeman.
				On part of Khan. — 1. Nawab Mulla Muhammad Khan. 2. Mulla Fakir Muhammad Mustaufi. 3. Mulla Abdulla Khan.	On part of Sirdars. — 1. Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan. 2. Jamal Khan. 3. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Khan Raisanee.
1	Muhammad Khan and Shadi Khan, sons of Kaisar Khan and Muzar.	The Hufdu Tank Karez has ever belonged free to complainants who possess the following Sunnuds :—1, from Nusseer Khan the Less dated 11th Rujub 1258 H.; 2, from the same, dated 1st Jumadi-ul-awul 1259 H.; 3, Sheredil Khan of 21st Rabi-ul-awal 1280 H.; 4, Mir Khodadad Khan Sahib, 11th Jumadi-ul-sani 1280 H., in which last it is written that these grants are upheld as per his father's Sunnuds. The grants come from Mir Mehrab Khan. These have been confiscated since commencement of troubles. Restitution is claimed.	These lands are in the Shaul Ilaqua. I know nothing of them. It is the Khan's prerogative to confer such grants.	The right of complainants is clearly proved by an examination of the Sunnuds which have been granted by successive rulers, including the present Khan, who will probably not object to the restoration of the grants.		The request of the arbitrators is acceded to.	The Khan has granted fresh Sunnuds to the claimants in accord with the decision.
2	Khelati Gurani -	Possesses a Sunnud of Mir Abdulla Khan, dated 1st Mohurrum 1141 H., to the Maliks of Pishin, confirmatory of purchase of shares of irrigation water in the Askuna and Pushkurm, watercourses from Duranis and Mulazais, and a 2nd Sunnud from Mir Nusseer Khan the Greater of 8th Zikut 475 H. Mir Khodadad Khan confirmed these by a Sunnud of 15th Mohurrum 1281 H. produced. Naib Faiz Muhammad attached these last year.	Although the attachment for one year was made owing to complainant's failure to serve, his rights have lately been restored to him.	As the Naib admits restoration, there is no cause for further inquiry.		Complainant's rights will be maintained without dispute.	Ditto.

3	Ahmed Gurani	Complainant's uncle purchased a share of irrigation water from Mirza, son of Gul Muhammad Malik of Pyzhgurm. Possesses a Sunnud of Mir Nusseer Khan the Less, dated 10th Zulkud 1250 H., confirmatory of the purchase.	I attached this share of water for one year, but was directed by the Khan to release it to the owners.	As the Naib admits restoration, there is no cause for further inquiry.	Complainant's rights will be maintained without dispute.	The Khan has granted fresh Sunnud to the claimants in accord with the decision.
4	Said Khan and others, Muhammad Shahi Headmen, Kadir Buksh Surpurra.	The lands of Tori and Dusht in Ghurk belong to complainants, a Sunnud of Mir Kallay Khan, dated Mohurrum, 1128 H., who divided the lands. The Tori lands were confiscated by Mir Mehrab Khan, a Sunnud not being forthcoming; the Dusht lands are waste. The Naib Faiz Muhammad has attached these. The Sunnud is now produced and the lands claimed.	In the time of Mir Mehrab Khan and Muhammad Khan the ancestors of Malik Karun and others claimed these lands, and they were found to be theirs. The lands have since remained in their possession. The Khan only takes 1-10th of the mahsul. The complainants should sue the zemindars. If the lands are found to belong to zemindars, the Khan will take mahsul as usual; if otherwise complainants will receive the grant. Again, he says the proprietory right in the lands is the Khan's, who takes besides 1-10th mahsul, 1-4th share as malikana. The zemindars are goat-herds and possess Sunnuds.	The Tori lands were confiscated in Mir Mehrab Khan's time, and no claim to them will now stand. Inquiry is necessary regarding the Dusht lands according to the Muhammadan law. No zemindars appearing, it is decided that the Dusht lands remain with complainants. If any zemindar claims, he must sue according to the Muhammadan law. The Government has no claim to the land which belongs to the zemindars.	This case has come up twice to-day. The proposal of the arbitrators is accepted and I have no claim. If the zemindars sue, they must do so according to Muhammadan law.	Ditto.
5	Mittha, son of Jehan Khan Shahwani.	By Sunnud of 10th Jummadi-ul-Awul 1183 H., from Mir Nusseer Khan the Greater, the mahsul of two nights of water from the Chotu Karez was granted free to complainant, but in Mir Khodadad's time a cess has for years been levied by the Government.	The Sunnud presented by the complainant is genuine. But subsequently to the grant it was sometimes resumed and sometimes released in the time of Mir Mehrab Khan and Mir Nusseer Khan. If the Khan is addressed by the Sirdars he will confirm the grant.	Dad Rusim zemindar having taken oath that this mafi was resumed in time of Mir Nusseer Khan, the arbitrators consider that it should not now be released.	The cess imposed will be taken as usual. There is no reason for release.	The Khan confirmed the arbitrator's decision.
6	Nawab Shoranzai, son of Hirbeg.	The lands of Hazangungi belong to complainant, as per following Sunnuds —1st, deed of sale between Jehan Khan, Saleh Khan, and Ibrahim Khan, sellers, and Yar Ali and Miru, purchasers of 4 bunds Khuskaba for Rs. 30, dated Shuban, 1252 H.; 2nd, of Safr 1246 H. Arbabs Khwaja Hussan and Ali Muhammad sell 1 bund Khuskaba for Rs. 90 to Miru and Hirbeg Shoranzai; 3rd, deed of sale Mohurrum 1241 H., of Puttu Khan, son of Sheikh Dad and Khwaja Dad, Imdad and Walidad, three kuos of land in Hazangungi to Miru Min-	The zemindars sold these lands to the Khan, and they will prove their proprietary right. Four zemindars appear at Mustung, viz., Dad Rusim, Ali Murdan, Dad Muhammad, Pir Baksh, and stated that at the time of their sale of the lands to the Khan they did not see the Sunnuds now produced; seeing them now they attest them as genuine deeds of their ancestors. Let the lands be examined. Whatever is proved to belong to the complainants can be given to them. The rest will be the Khan's, according to the sales of	As the claim of complainants appear good according to the Sunnuds, they are entitled to be deemed proprietors of these lands. Should any remain over beyond the limits of the puttahs it may be deemed to belong to the Khan. Arbitrators should settle the boundaries.	The Khan accepts the decision of the arbitrators.	The Khan has issued orders to the Naib in accord with this decision.

Three other Arbabs arriving later made the same statements.
7	Shukar Khan Bundrani, son of Bijur Khan.	Two and a half nights of water from the Wutten Karez were granted according to the following Sunnuds free:—1st, deed of sale of Mohurrum 1230 H.; 2nd, deed of sale of Zulkud 1248 H.; 3rd, Sunnud of Mir Mehrat Khan of 9th Zilhuj 1248 H.; 4th, Sunnud of 1st Mohurrum 1276 H, from Mir Khodadad Khan; 5th, Sunnud 10th Mohurrum 1277 H., of Mir Khodadad Khan.	The Naib expresses ignorance of this case, and refers to Munshi Muhammad Murad, who also professes ignorance.	The mafi rights are proved by Sunnuds, and on the Khelat Government's part there is no proof of attachment or confiscation in Mir Nusseer Khan the Less' time; it is proper that the mafi should be released.		The Khan orders the cess to be discontinued and the mafi maintained according to the decision of arbitrators. The Naib must not interfere with complainant.	The Khan has granted complainant a new Sunnud.
8	Ditto - -	One night's water rate of Karez Dukun Singi was granted to complainant free as per Sunnuds; notwithstand the Naib levies the rate or cess—1st sanad deed of sale 1st Rumzan of 1226 H., from Malik Dushada Khan, and Safar Khan, of one day and one night's water, a cess being leviable on the land; 2nd, Sunnud of Khodadad Khan of 10th Mohurrum 1273 H.	Expresses ignorance. Refers to the Sunnuds and zemindars.	From the Sunnuds it appears that the zemindars in the first instance entered in the deeds that no "Kulong" was leviable; the complainants are entitled to the mafi. Let the Khan's agents recover the cess from the zemindars on whom the onus probandi will lie.		Khan agrees to decision of arbitrators that Government dues be not levied from complainants, but from the selling zemindars if they can't prove mafi on their own account.	Ditto.

9	Ditto - -	A piece of land in Bund Mal Khama belongs to complainant. Possesses sanads as follows:—Deed of sale of Mohurrum 1227 H. The Naib has deprived him of the land.	The Government doesn't claim the land but $\frac{1}{10}$th share as mahsul. One Butu Hoti claims the land. Let the parties settle the matter according to the Shuryut. The Khan will realise his revenue.	Butu did not appear, and his claim cannot be accepted on statement of another party. The land should remain with complainant. Butu can sue at the Shuryut if he chooses; the Government will receive its share of Butai.	Agrees to decision	Ditto.
10	Mitha, son of Jehan Khan, Shawani, Nubbee Buksh, and Imam Buksh Kalundrani.	By a deed of sale of Zulhuj 1247 H., from Dewun Gungarum of two nights of water from the Chotu Karez for Rs. 1,200 to Taj Muhammad Kalundrani, Suleiman Shahwani, Rumzan Kalundrani. Mir Mehrab Khan's seal is on the deed of sale. Land has been attached.	I did not at first see the seal on the paper. Now that it is found to bear Mehrab Khan's seal there can be no objection to it.	According to deed of sale and the Khan's seal, complainant's claim is just and proved. Nobody can interfere with them.	Ditto - -	Ditto.
11	Ditto - -	Of 13 Shabunu or night shares of water the rate for two was mafi, and they paid in the other 11. Now they are dealt with differently from what a Sunnud of Mir Nusseer Khan the Great requires, dated 10th Jamadi-awul 1183 H.	Now on seeing the Sunnuds can give no good reply, the matter must be disposed of by the Khan.	The state of this case is similar to that in No. 5, and they recommend as in that case.	Khan concurs -	Ditto.
12	Khoda Buksh and Nubbee Buksh Shawani.	According to puttah of 1283 H., the Shubji boundary between the lands Chotu and the Karez Sultan Arfin. The Hindu proprietors of the latter should be confined to the part below the limit.	The limit fixed by the puttah is correct, but the cultivated land is within the Arfin bounds, whose owners are present. The Government has a $\frac{1}{4}$th share in the Karez but not in the Chotu Karez. Let the owners and neighbours be examined.	According to the Sunnud the limit is fixed. Should any land according to this Sunnud prove to be complainants', it should be given to them.	Khan agrees -	Khan has given orders to his Naib and a Sunnud to complainants.
13	Wali Muhammad, Muhammad Shahi.	A piece of land in Thul Dura Khan, according to a deed of sale Mohurrum 1275 H., is complainant's. Mulla Faiz Muhammad has taken $\frac{1}{4}$th of produce for a year past.	When the mark of a Karez is visible, the Government is entitled to a $\frac{1}{4}$th share. Former Naibs did not levy it, but I assert the Government right. There is no mention of a Government share in the deed of sale.	As the descendants of the sellers are present, and they attest the sale and mafi, of which latter they hold the proofs, but the Naib declares that Government has taken $\frac{1}{4}$th as Butai for 18 years, and complainant denies having ever given Butai, which has been levied since last year only. Accounts were called for, but the Naib could not produce them. The arbitrators accordingly rule in favour of complainant.	Khan concurs -	Ditto.
14	Buhmu Khan, son of Abdul Ghunni Muhammad Shahi.	In Thul Hajdurra Khan there is a bund the bounds of which are in a Sunnud, property of complainant's ancestors, in Mustung. A deed of sale, from Isarmul of Mohurrum 1267 H., under seal of Mir Nusseer Khan the Less, proves it.	Although owing to the seller and owner was a Government servant, the Government had a claim, the presence of Nusseer Khan's seal shows that there can now be no claim.	The deed of sale bears the seal of Nusseer Khan, hence the Naib's claim upon this land cannot be entertained.	Ditto - -	Ditto.

15	Buhmu Khan, son of Abdul Ghunni Muhammad Shahi.	By a deed of mortgage of Jummadi-Awul 1278 H., Arbad Khwaja Husn and Abdul Ghunni a Kushur of land in Karez Tul limits was mortgaged for Rs. 600. Last year Naib Faiz Muhammad appropriated this land.	Having a claim against the Khwaja Khel, he took possession. The case can be settled according to the Shuryut. If it is not this, he will release it. The Bunhers are wealthy.	The Khwaja Khels confirm the fact of the mortgage, and the Naib is in the place of mortgager by proxy. The Naib Faiz Muhammad can sue the Khwja Khela at the Shuryut; complainants must keep the land till their money is restored.		Khan concurs -	Khan has given orders to his Naib and a Sunnud to complainants.
16	Ditto - -	By deed of sale of Jumadi-ul-Awul 1274 H. from Sahib Zada Mulla Muhammad Yakoob, 3 nights and 2 watches out of 4 nights and days of water with land on the Akhond's Karez was given for Rs. 2,250, but it has been attached.	The Naib says he and his brothers owned 6 nights share of water in this Karez, and some of the land was Government's. In Mehrab Khan's time the Akhund, who was a Vakil of the Khan, brought the land into his own possession. The Naib, for the above reasons, got all the sharers last year to surrender 2 nights of water under the Kazi's seal to himself.	The Naib having failed to produce the alleged co-sharers in the water referred to by him, the complainants' claim is deemed to be a just one.		Ditto - -	Ditto.
17	Ditto - -	The Dundla lands in Mustung belong to complainants according to deed of sale of 1257 H. From that time they never paid "Kulung" or other dues upon them. Since last year the Naib takes "Kulung" on their account.	No dues were formerly paid on these lands, but six years ago, during the Naibship of Rahimdad, revenue began to be levied. Last year the arrears due for four years were exacted.	It has been shown that no "Kulung" used to be taken on the lands referred to. If the Naib has lately taken it, he should not have done so, and the lands should be freed from it in future.		Ditto - -	Ditto.
18	Ditto - -	By deed of sale of Rumzan 1277 H. a piece of land near the Tut Karez belongs to complainants. The Government has confiscated them for 5 or 6 years.	The Naib says the confiscation took place previously to his appointment as Naib, and he knows nothing about it.	It appears from a Sunnud produced by Nek Muhammad Khwaja Khel, written in Sufar 1242 H., that this land belonged to the Khwaja Khels, who voluntarily sold it. Complainants' claim is a just one.		Ditto - -	Ditto.
19	Shadin Khan Muhammad Shahi.	By deed of sale Shabun 1251 H. a piece of land on the Tundla Karez was bought for Rs. 40, but it has	Naib's reply as in No. 17 - -	The same ruling as in No. 17 -		Ditto - -	Ditto.

20	Bahara Khan Muhammad Shahi.	By deed of sale of 1275 H. a cultivated piece of land within the Shur Karez limits belongs to complainants, and on it no "Kulung" was levied; but last year the Naib took possession.	Naib says he did make a claim, which he has since abandoned in view of the objections raised.	The Naib's reply shows that complainants are entitled to what they claim. They possess ample proofs moreover.	Ditto - -	Ditto.
21	Samandur Muhammad Shahi.	Several pieces of land—Kubr Kul-under in Mehab town have ever belonged to complainant's family. Possesses several Sunnuds, but the Naib Faiz Muhammad interferes.	The Naib denies having ever preferred any claim to these lands.	This is a clear case requiring no further investigation. Complainant's claim is just.	Khan concurs -	Ditto.
22	Daulat Khan Shawani.	Two nights of water in the Mubarik Karez are complainant's, according to a deed of purchase from one Ata Muhammad Shah for Rs. 900. The Naib Faiz Muhammad has taken possession.	This land was given long ago by Said Atta Muhammad Shah to Atta Muhammad Shah for digging a Karez, but the latter was unable to dig the whole. After that Syud Mir Muhammad, a relative of Ali Muhammad Shah, sold the land to Naib Mulla Muhammad Hussan, whose property being confiscated, these lands were included in the confiscation, and a Karez was dug on them; there has been 10 years possession.	After inquiry of Syud Ali Muhammad Shah, it is found that Atta Muhammad Shah, the seller, was sole proprietor. Muhammad Hussan the Naib's right is not proved. Complainant's claim appears a just one, and should be conceded.	itto - -	Ditto.
23	Saleh Muhammad Mingul.	Has cultivating rights in Kung, as per following Sunnuds held of the present Khan of Khelat and his predecessors, —1st Sunnud of Muhammad Khan of Rubi-ul-sani 1220 H., 2nd of Mehrab Khan 27th Zilhaj 1254 H., 3rd of Mir Nusseer Khan the Less, Shawul 1262 H., 4th of Jamadi-ul-Sani 1281 H., from Mir Khodadad Khan.	Naib prefers no claim. Let the rights conceded by Sunnud be maintained.	Complainant being in possession of genuine Sunnuds, to which no objection is made, he should be confirmed in possession of his rights.	Khan agrees to adherence to terms of the Sunnuds.	Orders issued accordingly to the Naib of Mustung.
24	Ditto - -	Uncultivated land in Kung limits belongs to complainant, as per Sunnuds. Let these be seen and the lands released from attachment.	This mafi was confiscated in time of Nusseer Khan, and cannot be released.	Muhammad Khan Isiani and Sirdar Mulla Muhammad Khan attest the confiscation in Nusseer Khan's time. Complainant's claim cannot therefore be entertained.	Concurs with arbitrators.	Ditto.
	Khan, Arit Sohrab Khan, mad, er.	The Karezes of Kalir and Piri belong to complainants, as per Sunnud of Rujub 1255 H., proving purchase from Said Ali Muhammad Shah, whose receipt they hold. The Naib has attached two nights water.	If complainants or Said Ali Muhammad Shah possess Sunnuds, let them produce them. Complainants have forcibly held possession 8 or 10 years ago in the Naibship of Rahman Khan. The mafi was suspended and night shares of water fixed for Government. If there are no Sunnuds, let boundaries be settled according to puttahs.	On investigation, it is found that the lands on these Karezes have long been held as free grants by the claimants and those from whom they purchased them. Having been attached in Mir Khodadad's time, they should be released; the boundaries to be maintained according to puttahs. Munsiffs to settle these on the spot.	Khan concurs in the decision.	Ditto.

The Government had a claim to four "khurwars" of grain annually on these lands. The Naib never took it from complainants but from Shadi Khan Khwja Khel, the real proprietor. He is now impoverished, and the Naib has taken it lately from complainants.	Complainant is in possession by right of Sunnuds possessed by him. The Naib has no right to interfere. If any partner in the lands has a claim, he can sue at the Shuryut.		Khan concurs in the decision.	Orders issued accordingly to the Naib of Mustung.
27	Ali Muhammad and Mian Khan Shawani.	According to the following Sunnuds complainants pay a $\frac{1}{5}$th share on the Chakul Karezes. The Naib exacts $\frac{1}{4}$th share—1st Sunnud of Rubi-ul-Sani 1186 H., of Mir Nusseer Khan the Greater; 2nd, of Rubi-ul-Sani 1284H., of Mir Khodadad Khan.	Faiz Muhammad Naib says that $\frac{1}{4}$th had been fixed previously to his Naibship. Whatever is in the Sunnuds can be followed.	As the complainants' Sunnuds are not disputed, their terms should be acted up to.		Khan concurs -	Ditto.
28	Saleh Muhammad Mingul Shahizai.	By deed of sale of Mohurrum 1271 H. owns a tuppah of land purchased by him, on part of which are certain buildings. The seal of Naib Abdul Aziz is on the deed. Another writing of Mir Nusseer Khan of Rujab 1266 H. proves. The Naib Faiz Muhammad has confiscated these or attached them.	The Naib rejoins that one Wali Muhammad Durani gave these lands to the Khan of Khelat as a gift five or six years ago. Let the complainant and Wali Muhammad settle the matter between themselves.	Complainant being in possession of written proofs of his claim under seal of the Khan's Naib, the lands should be released and made over to complainant. Any other claims can be settled at the Shuryut.		Ditto - -	Ditto.
29	Rustam Mehri	By deed of sale Rubi-ul-awul 1281 H., from Wuzeer, complainant owns two shares (watches) of water and two pieces of land in the Kingur land, for which he paid Rs. 100. The Naib takes cesses contrary to Sunnud.	Naib has no rejoinder to make -	The seller having attested the fact that no kulong cess was ever levied on this land, it should be released to complainant.		Ditto - -	Ditto.

30	All the Sarawan Sirdars in concert.	Complain that in the time of former rulers of Khelat, the levy of a trangar of grass from the people was not customary. The present Khan has imposed this tax for several years past. The weight or size of a trangar as a measuring test has not been fixed, and the people are oppressed by the exaction. In fact, this imposition is a chief cause of the troubles in the State. The Khan's officials do as they like with the people in this matter. Let the British Government relieve the people from this. They have no objection to give supplies on occasions of the Khan's journeys through the country in ordinary course according to old usage.	This grass contribution by trangars has been fixed by the Khan of Khelat for the camels and horses of his military force. If it is stopped, it will be difficult to maintain these troops. No fixed measure of trangar exists, every fourth day one trangar per Karez is taken. For six months this grass is collected from the zemindars. It constitutes the forage of the animals during the winter months.	As this contribution has been ordered for the first time during the Government of the present Khan of Khelat, owing to his having raised a larger military force than was customary, and especially as the size of trangar has not been fixed, and little regard is paid to the capacities of Karezes, there can be no doubt that the zemindars are much oppressed. It is advisable either that the Khan let the people off contributing half the trangar and fix the size of the other half, or, in lieu of this imposition, take a money contribution in lieu, to be collected with the ordinary revenue.	The Khan represents that the troops cannot get on without grass, and that he therefore can neither reduce the quantity nor take money in lieu. For the present year, he agrees to waive levying this contribution from the Brahooees, and for the future will be led by what the British Government may advise.	There is no doubt that this matter of levying grass trangars has been a main cause of dispute. A proper settlement of it is desirable. I have entered my views on the subject in my report for the orders of Government.

Translation of Appendix C.

Statement of Complaints by Jalawan Sirdars against the Khelat Government and the Decisions arrived at regarding them by the Committee of Arbitrators, as below appointed, with sanction of the Khan of Khelat and approval of Complainants, by Major Sandeman, to arbitrate at Mustung in July 1876.

Members of Committee on part of his Highness the Khan.

1. Nawab Mulla Muhammad Khan Wakil.
2. Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad.
3. Mulla Abdulla Khan.

Members approved by Sirdars.

1. Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari.
2. Sirdar Jamal Khan, Lugari.
3. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed Khan.

No.	Representations of Jalawan Sirdars.	Decision of Arbitrators.	His Highness the Khan of Khelat's Order.	Remarks by Major Sandeman.
1	Sirdar Mir Jam Ali Khan, in concert with all the Jalawan Sirdars, solicit the release from imprisonment of Jam Mir Khan, on their security, that the said Jam shall, in accordance with the custom of his ancestors, maintain friendship with his Highness the Khan of Khelat, who has acceded to the requisition intimating that he (the Khan) shall not without permission of the British Government commence hostilities against the Jam, and the requisitions as sureties for the Jam promise the same on the Jam's part.	The arbitrators are of opinion that there is no objection or impediment now to the release of the Jam of Lus Beyla.	Agrees to the recommendation of the arbitrators.	All the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars have unanimously made solicitations in favour of the release of Jam Mir Khan. The Khan of Khelat having acceded to their request sent a Murasila or letter to Major Sandeman soliciting the Jam's release, which has been sent by him to the English Government.
2	The Jalawan Sirdars in concert solicit that the properties left by will of one Mir Kumal Attazai in Baghbana Kutchi, &c., which had never for 25 years during the Governments of Mir Nusseer Khan, Mir Khodadad Khan, Sheredil Khan been attached, should now be released to Mir Jam Ali Khan from the attachment which the present Khan has imposed a second time during his supremacy; 8 years ago the Khan released the lands from a former attachment giving Sunnuds. Again, 4 or 5 months afterwards he caused a reattachment.	This matter is worthy of disposal by the Government of India, until the receipt of whose orders the Khan of Khelat can retain possession.	Khan agrees to proposal of arbitrators.	Particulars of this case have been reported to the Government, whose orders on it will be awaited.
3	The Sirdars declare they are ready to acknowledge Sirdar Mir Gohur Khan, in room of Sirdar Mir Taj Mahomed Khan, as Sirdar of all Zehri and Jalawan.	The Khan of Khelat having agreed, there can be no objection.	Khan concurs in the proposal.	The Khan of Khelat formally invested Mir Gohur Khan in Durbar, giving him at khillut.

4	The Sirdars make a similar requisition in favour of Mir Shakur Khan, a minor to be installed as Sirdar of the Minguls, in room of his late father Noordeen, Sirdar Mir Ibrahim, his uncle, and brother of the late Noordeen, to act as guardian until Shakur Khan come of age.	There seems to be no objection to the proposal -	The Khan concurs -	The Khan presented a khillut to Mir Ibrahim Khan in Durbar.
5	Similarly, Sirdar Mir Saleh Muhammad should be acknowledged as Chief of the Musianis, in room of Kaisur Khan, his nephew.	The arbitrators are of opinion that Umeid Ali, brother of Kaisur Khan, has a preferable claim.	The Khan agreed to confer the turban of Chiefship upon Umeid Ali, as recommended by arbitrators.	The parties agreed that the turban of Chiefship should remain with Umeid Ali, who will be aided by Saleh Muhammad in conducting affairs.
6	Again they recommend that Sirdar Futteh Muhammad Sotiani be appointed Chief of the Sotianis, in room of his deceased brother Kumal Khan.	Arbitrators approve - - - -	Khan concurs.
7	The Sirdars request that the property of the late Taj Mahomed, whether in Kutchi or in Khorassan, and his share in Mula Kelun, &c., which the Khan of Khelat and Taj Mahomed shared equally, be given to Mir Gohur Khan, and that certain taxes levied for the last 3 or 4 years from the Hindoos of Zehri be discontinued.	The transfer to Gohur Khan of the real property of Taj Mahomed Khan in Kujun Kutchi and Zehri is not objected to by the Khan, but half of Mula Kelun belongs to the Khan, and the other half was given to the Khan by deed of gift, which is producible. The arbitrators do not think this last point to be proved, because the Khan of Khelat's possession anteriorly to Taj Mahomed's imprisonment is not proved. If the tax on Hindoos comes down from Nusseer Khan's time, good and well; if not, it should be discontinued.	Khan concurred in proposals of arbitrators.	As one matter regarding a provision for the mother and widows of Taj Mahomed had to be considered, all the Sirdars, whether Sarawan or Jalawan, proposed that Rs. 1,200 and 24 khurwars of grain harvest should be given them by Gohur Khan. The Khan of Khelat concurred in the propriety of carrying out that proposal.
8	In Zehri there is a stream or canal. Three courses from it are maat, and from the other three $\frac{1}{6}$th share of produce is taken by the Khelat Government. Besides that, the Government now takes grass and other products; this is contrary to custom. It is solicited that only grass be taken, as before.	The request is proper - - - -	Khan concurs - -	The Khan has issued a fresh Sunnud to the complaining parties.
9	After Sirdar Noordeen's death, 7 months ago, Dad Muhammad Kulram and two slaves were detained. Their release is solicited.	The request is proper - - - -	Ditto - - -	The Khan on arrival at Khelat released them according to promise.
10	The property of one Khusal, which comes rightly by inheritance to Mir Saleh Muhammad, Muhammad Khan, and Mir Gohur Khan, was confiscated by the Khelat Government, and should be released.	Whatever may be shown to belong to these persons should be given them, and whatever it has been customary to give the Sirdars should be continued.	Ditto - - -	As Umeid Ali has been appointed Sirdar, the share of the Chief will be given to him. A Sunnud has been given to the others.
11	A sum of Rs. 60 kulong annually levied from Rahnju village in name of Mir Shakur Khan, and all the Jataks has been taken by the Government for 10 years past, and this year the crops of Rahnju and Kuni have also been seized. A return is solicited.	If complainant possesses a Sunnud confirmatory of the grant, and can show that he was in possession during the time of Nusseer Khan the Less, and that the attachment took place in time of the present Khan, there is no objection to release.	Khan agrees to conditions imposed by arbitrators.	The Khan has issued a new Sunnud to the claimants.

No.	Representations of Jalawan Sirdars.	Decision of Arbitrators.	His Highness the Khan of Khelat's Order.	Remarks by Major Sandeman.
12	A similar request is made regarding the property of one Ghozak Fazliwalla, which has for three years been attached.	This property was confiscated owing to murder of Shumir and a brother. Complainant says he has satisfied their relatives. If he can prove that the attachment will be taken off.	Khan agrees to conditions imposed by arbitrators.
13	One fourth of Ghozak's land produce used to be taken. Since 3 or 4 years $\frac{1}{3}$rd is taken. It is solicited that the old custom may be reverted to.	If the $\frac{1}{4}$th was fixed in Mir Nusseer's time it should be taken now. Proofs to be produced at Khelat.	Ditto - -	The Khan has given a new Sunnud.
14	Owing to Badajung and Dinarzai fight, the Khan took a bond for Rs. 5,500 as a fine. In presence of Sirdar Noordeen Khan, 7 months ago, the Khan agreed to remit the fine; but the bond remained in his office. Its return is solicited with the order of remission endorsed, as the parties will settle among themselves. The Khan was not in the habit of levying fines.	There is no objection, apparently, on the Khan's part to return of the bond, which will be given over by his officials on arrival at Khelat.	Khan concurs.
15	The property of Ali Sher Moghimzoi in Ghizuk has been attached for 7 or 8 years. Its release is solicited.	If the attachment took place in Nusseer Khan's time it will remain. If in the present Khan's time it will be released.	Ditto - - -	Orders issued accordingly to the Naib.
16	In Kutchi the whole property of Chatr Faleji in Bast Ghurdher was confiscated by Nusseer Khan the year of his death. Its release is craved.	As it was done in Nusseer Khan's time the request is not to be entertained.	Ditto.
17	After death of Sirdar Noordeen, the property of Chatr Faleji in Kutchi and Sohrab belonging to the Shubizai and Minguls was all confiscated, 7 months ago. Release solicited.	No objection to this request - - -	Ditto - - -	The Khan has granted a new writing in this case.
18	The property of Shabizai and Minguls in Kota became the property of Government owing to the issue of springs—Kalapani—in the time of Mehrab Khan on drying up of the springs. Mir Nusseer Khan restored the lands to the original owners. Again, in this Khan's time, the springs again gave out water, and he re-attached the lands; but 7 years ago they closed again. Release of this land is requested.	If the springs are dry the Khelat Government will have nothing to say to the land. If they flow again the land will be attached, as before.	Ditto - - -	Ditto.
19	Sheru, a servant of Sirdar Noordeen, after his master's death, went to Baghbana where he had property and a brother. The Naib of Khozdar, by order of the Khan, took from him Rs. 200 and a horse forcibly. Return of these solicited.	The horse will be restored by the Khan's officials, and Major Sandeman will give order as to the money.	Ditto - - -	No remark.

20	Mulla Muhammad Munshi, Mubaruk and 14 other persons, including women and children, were imprisoned by the Khan 4 years ago, and Sirdar Noordeen Khan wanted to release them, on payment to the Khan of Rs. 1,600. At time of Noordeen's death a balance of Rs. 140 was due. On account of this the Khan of Khelat's officials re-imprisoned the Munshi and his cousin, asking Rs. 400, and placing the women and Mubaruk under surveillance at Khozdar. The release of all these is requested and remission of the additional Rs. 400 asked for.	The Mulla, his cousin, and all the others will be set free. The Khan's officials have no objection to this.	Khan consents - -	The Munshi and his cousin were set free on Khan's arrival at Khelat.
21	The property of Mir Saleh Muhammed Shabizai in Nasirabad was attached 12 years ago by the Khan. Restoration solicited.	If complainant had possession at Mir Nusseer Khan's death the property will be restored; and if, owing to lands being waste, he did not hold possession, and they were not attached, they will be released.	Ditto - -	The Khan gave a new Sunnud and orders to the Naib accordingly.
22	Mir Futteh Khan Shaizai had property in Tong village. The Khan's servants seized it 7 years ago. Its restoration solicited. In Beg Meri Ilaqua, village Kori and in Kutchi, Duh Chutr and Kanori village, $3\frac{1}{2}$ shares of our inheritance were. Of these the whole of Kuria Kori and the rest were taken possession of 7 years ago. Return solicited.	As these attachments or confiscations took place in the time of Mir Nusseer Khan they cannot now be released.	Khan concurs.
23	Last year Ruhmut, a Shahwani Mingul, was imprisoned by the Khan's officials, on account of the murder of one Dada Zehri, and 400 sheep and two guns, and a sword were taken possession of. Ruhmut is still in prison. It is hoped that fair blood-money shall be taken and his release sanctioned.	The property confiscated in this case cannot be returned. The Khan will order release of the prisoner.	Ditto - - -	On arrival at Khelat the Khan ordered Ruhmut's release from prison.
24	Lands in Mal Gorukmuri belonging to Mir Mohim Khan and others were attached 4 or 5 years ago by Khan's officials. Release solicited (details of shares given).	In Mal village the Khan had no property; the Minwaris gave him some. The complainant claims two shares, and the Khan will release them. If others have claims amongst themselves, they can be settled at the Shuryut, and if the Minwaris are found to own any part of the 2 shares at the Shuryut, that part will revert to the Khan.	Ditto - - -	The Khan issued a new Sunnud.
25	The property of Gauhur Khan Dadmuri in village Sohrab was attached 2 years ago. Restoration sought. Rs. 2,700 were imposed on account of the murder of a Zehri by another person, and Rs. 200, a sword, and matchlock were actually taken. Return solicited.	Sums credited to the Khan's treasury cannot be returned, but property confiscated will be accounted for, and the Khan will not claim the balance of money due. Complainant must satisfy relatives of the murdered man, with aid of Sirdar Gohur Khan.	Ditto - -	An order to Gohur Khan was issued by the Khan, asking him to aid in settling the matter with the deceased's relatives.
26	The property of Muhammad Murad Harowni in Gurgul was taken possession of by Government three years ago. Rs. 2,000 are asked oppressively, and Rs. 100 have been paid. Let that and the land be returned.	As in last case - - - - -	Ditto.

27	Mir Muhammad Shabizai, who has long been with the Khan, should be prohibited from interfering with Jalawan possessions henceforward, and especially with Mir Ibrahim Khan and his nephew's affairs.	No objection to this request being complied with -	Khan agreed - -	Mir Muhammad and Mir Ibrahim Khan voluntarily produced a written engagement to the effect that Mir Muhammad would not interfere with Sirdar's matters again.
28	The practice of seizing camels and taking grass, &c. in certain villages (16 of which are named) which has obtained for 4 or 5 years on the part of Khan's officials towards the inhabitants, and which practice is opposed to ancient custom, should be at once discontinued.	Camels will be taken by the Khan on occasions of hostilities arising, or of travelling to or from Kutchi at the rates of hire fixed by Mir Nusseer Khan. As regards the rest remission will be accorded.	Khan consents - -	The Khan issued a new Sunnud confirmatory of this arrangement.
29	The Hindoos living in Jallawan were formerly exempted from taxation. The Khan for 4 or 5 years past has taxed them, and they won't come. Their absence is a great loss. Reversion to old system solicited.	If taxes were not taken by Nusseer Khan, the imposition will be done away with. Proofs to be produced by Khan's servants before the Sahib; if they can't produce the proofs, the taxes will be taken off.	Ditto - - -	Khan has issued orders accordingly to Naibs.
30	The Mingul Kafilas that go to Punjkoor with dates used to be free from taxation. The Khan's officials now exact 1 rupee per camel, and have done so for 3 or 4 years. Exemption solicited.	Arbitrators rule as above. If not taken in Nusseor Khan's time, exemption will be granted.	Ditto - - -	Ditto.
31	The property of Taj Mahomed in Punjkoor and Khelat was confiscated after his death. It is requested that it may be restored to Sirdar Gohur Khan.	Gohur Khan lays no claim to property in Khelat. Whatever may remain in Punjkoor will be released by the Khan, on attestation of Muhammad Khan Isiani, Futteh Khan Shabizai, Saleh Muhammad Shabizai, Isa Khan Mingul.	Ditto - - -	A new Sunnud issued by Khan in accord with this decision.
32	One Zarur Zehri was imprisoned last year by Khan's order; Rs. 2,000 are demanded of him. He paid Rs. 1,000, and was in prison two months; released on security for payment of remainder. 33	The property of Mir Murad Ali and Mir Isa Khan Shabizai in Kutchi, at Chuttur and Palaji, has belonged to the Jalawans for generations, who have always enjoyed the produce. Enclosure 5 in No. 123.

Appendix D.

Rules.

The following rules for the guidance of the Sirdars and Naibs in conducting the civil administration of the Khelat State received the assent of his Highness the Khan of Khelat on the 1st August 1876 :—

Whereas the late civil war created great difficulty in the administration of the Khelat State, which of late years, contrary to ancient usage, has been entirely in the hands of the Naibs, supported by a small body of regular troops; and whereas peace has been again restored to the country, I, Mir Khodadad Khan, Khan of Khelat, direct that the former civil administration of the country be restored, and I publish the following rules, which this day have received my assent, for the guidance of my Sirdars and Naibs :

The civil administration of the country is divided into four parts—

1. Collection of revenue, whether in cash or in kind.
2. Settlement of claims for money, &c.
3. The disposal of criminal cases.
4. The protection of the civil power by the military.

Regarding the first, I direct my Naibs not to interfere in any way with revenue free grants. These are to remain, as formerly, entirely in the hands of the Brahooees. But should a Brahooee purchase from a ryot land on which revenue, either in cash or in kind, has been fixed, the Naib will collect from him the usual assessment. Should any Brahooee refuse to pay the assessment to the Naib, the latter will at once refer to the Sirdar of the tribe to which the Brahooee belongs, who will realise the amount due. Should the Sirdar consider the Brahooees had just grounds for refusing to pay the assessment, he will refer them to the Naib, and should the latter concur, the claim will be dismissed. Should the Naib not agree with the Sirdar the latter can refer the dispute to his Highness the Khan, whose decision in the matter will be final, and the Sirdar will be responsible for putting it in force. After putting the Khan's order in force, should the Sirdar consider the Khan's order unjust, he can refer the matter through the Political Agent at Khelat to the British Government. The procedure recorded here applies to all disputes regarding the collection of revenue, whether in cash or in kind.

2. Money transactions, debts, &c.—As a rule, when the plaintiff and defendant belong to one and the same tribe, the Sirdar of the tribe will in accordance with ancient custom hear and dispose of the case. In the event of the Sirdar's decision giving dissatisfaction to either plaintiff or defendant, party dissatisfied can appeal to his Highness the Khan, whose decision shall be final. The Sirdar, on being informed of the Khan's decision, must put it in force. In the event of a Hindu or Dewar complaining against a Brahooee, the claim in the first instance must go before the Sirdar of the tribe. Should a settlement in which both sides concur be come to, well and good; if not the claim will be brought by the complainant before the Naib, who will dispose of it according to State law. Appeal from the Naib's order will lie to his Highness the Khan, whose decision is final and must be carried out by the Sirdar. In the event of the plaintiff being a Brahooee and the defendant a Dewar or Hindu, the claim in the first instance must be brought before the Naib, who will dispose of the case according to State law. From the Naib's order an appeal will lie to his Highness the Khan, whose decision shall be final. The order of the Naib need not be put in force by the Sirdar until the Khan's decision is known, then it must be put in force at once.

3. Regarding the disposal of all criminal cases. Should plaintiff and defendant be Brahooees or Belooch and belong to the same tribe, the Sirdar will according to ancient custom dispose of the case. An appeal from his order will lie to his Highness the Khan, whose decision shall be final and must be put in force by the Sirdar. In the event of the Sirdar not having the power for any course whatever, to enforce his Highness' order, in that case he will apply to his Highness for help to enforce the order of the Khelat Government. Should the Sirdar consider the act of his Highness an oppressive one, he can complain to the British Government through the Political Agent. In the event of the complainant being a Dewar or Hindu and the defendant a Brahooee, the case must go before the Naib, and the Sirdar, on the Naib's application, must seize the defendant and make him over to the Naib. The Sirdar can attend at the inquiry, and take part in it, and if the Naib and the Sirdar agree in the finding and sentence they will together dispose of the case. Should they differ in opinion the case will be referred to his Highness the Khan for final Orders, which will be binding on the Naib and Sirdar. Should a Brahooee escape to any tribe after committing an offence the Sirdar of that tribe is responsible to apprehend him, and to dispose of his offence in accordance with the procedure just recorded.

4. Protection and aid to be rendered to the civil power by the military.—His Highness the Khan has the power to place troops in any part of the Khanate, whether inhabited by the Brahooees or not, for the protection of the civil power. In the event of any tribe or portion of a tribe disobeying a lawful order of the Khan, the Sirdars will be called upon in accordance with ancient law and precedent to cause the offending tribe or portion of a tribe to submit. In the event of its being necessary to resort to arms to enforce submission, the Sirdars will aid the Khan with their followers in accordance with old custom, but before war on the tribe or portion of a tribe is declared, the Khan will obtain first the sanction of the British Government before waging it. In the event of the Naibs using the troops stationed with them contrary to the procedure laid down for their guidance, and that of the Sirdars in the rules herein recorded, the complainant must refer the matter direct to his Highness the Khan, who will inquire and do justice. Should the Sirdars consider that the Khan's decision is unjust, they will not raise the standard of revolt, but will first refer the matter to the British Government for decision.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 22nd August 1876.

1. 16th August.—Sirdar Asad Khan of Sarawan waited on his Highness the Khan with a letter from his father addressed to the Khan, the contents of which were to the effect that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed had effected a temporary settlement of the quarrel between the Brahamzai and Raisani Brahooees, but the Sirdar asked his Highness to aid him in keeping the peace with a few sowars. His Highness the Khan sent a favourable reply to the Sirdar, and directed a few sowars to proceed and aid him as requested.

A dispute took place near Khelat between one of the Khan's peons and a Brahooee, a follower of Sirdar Asad Khan, regarding the terms on which the former was entitled to a certain supply of water for his land. His Highness the Khan referred the dispute to the Sirdar, directing him to dispose of it under the rules lately sanctioned for guidance in such matters. Sirdar Asad Khan inquired carefully into the case and ultimately took the parties before his Highness. The Kazi was sent for, and the dispute was finally settled in accordance with Muhammadan law to the satisfaction of all concerned. The case, although in itself trifling, was in other respects of importance as it established a precedent for the future.

2. 17th August.—One lakh of rupees arrived in camp from Jacobabad: Rupees 80,000 for the pay of the escort and Rupees 20,000 for the use of the Civil Department. It was escorted by 50 Sind Horse and 50 Belooch Guides, and came viâ the Mulla Pass, it being the nearest route to Jacobabad. Ressaldar Itbar Khan Rind, father of Golab* Khan, who led the murderous attack made on Raza Muhammad, reported in this office No. 163, dated 23rd July 1876, was in command of the Guides, and his deposition was recorded on the subject of his son's conduct on that occasion. The Ressaldar fully admits his son's guilt, but pleads in his son's favour that the murders of Raza Muhammad and five others were committed in revenge for the murder by Raza Muhammad of Waidad Rind, which occurred about four years ago. That he was prepared to abide by his Highness' decision in the matter. His Highness the Khan is now investigating the case, and it is expected that it will be settled according to Belooch custom without further bloodshed. The relatives of the deceased Raza Muhammad and others have arrived in Khelat and are anxious that the quarrel should be thus arranged.

* Golab Khan and the other murderers have arrived at Khelat and surrendered themselves to the Khan.—R. G. S.

3. 18th August.—Kadir Dina, brother, and Dost Muhammad, son, of Sirdar Alla Dina, arrived in camp and reported that the tribal chowkies were established in the Bolan Pass, at the Siri Bolan and at the village of Kirta. That the son of Bakhtiyar Khan, headman of Kott Mundai, was in charge of the Murrees on duty in the pass. That all was going on well, and travellers and traffic passing to and fro in perfect safety. Mullick Tail Khan and other zemindars of Kirta were busy ploughing their lands, and very shortly their families would return to the village.

4. 19th August.—Kadir Dina and Dost Muhammad visited his Highness the Khan and asked the Khan to issue orders to the Naib of Shaul Kot (Quetta) to take precautions for the protection of the kafila route to the north-west of that place. His Highness issued orders on the subject, and it was arranged that the Naib and Sirdar Alla Dina should meet at Quetta to discuss the question. There was some doubt as to whether the portion of the route in question was within the Khelat boundary or within that of his Highness the Amir of Cabul. A letter from his Highness to Major Sandeman having reference to this point was sent to the Commissioner under cover of this Office No. 181, dated 14th August, asking the Amir to direct the Naib of Peshin to co-operate with the Naib of Quetta in protecting this portion of the kafila route. His Highness the Khan visited Major Sandeman at his camp. Letters had this day been received by his Highness from Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan and the Murree Chiefs in reply to his Highness' letter to their address sent by the hands of Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, particulars of which were given in diary for the week ending 21st July. The contents of the Murree Sirdars' letters were discussed. They were most submissive. The Chiefs agreed to the terms of peace offered by his Highness, and wrote that they would proceed to Kutchi to meet his Highness there as requested to make their submission. (In regard to this the vernacular expression used by the Murree Sirdars was "Kadambosi," literally to kiss his Highness' feet.) At the same time letters were also received from Sirdars Imam Buksh Khan and Jamal Khan, who delivered the Khan's letter to the Murree Sirdars, and who were present when the Murri Chiefs in Council discussed its contents. The contents of these letters were also discussed. The Sirdars wrote to his Highness that they remained for a whole week at Kahan. That Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan called into Kahan the whole of the principal Murree headmen, viz., Nehal Khan, Chief of the Loharani Murrees, Fatteh Khan (Karam Khan, head Chief, was ill) Bijarani, Murree Chief, Muhammad Khan Mamdani, Murree Chief, and Shahdad Khan Sherani, and many others. The Murree Chiefs fully discussed the contents of his Highness the Khan's letter, also what Major Sandeman wrote them, and decided to make peace and to meet his Highness in Kutchi to make their submission, &c. In the meantime, in accordance with their agreement made with Major Sandeman, they decided to maintain at Kott Mundai the sowars placed there, who would be always in charge of either a cousin or nephew of Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan, their duty being to prevent attempts by Murree thieves to plunder from that direction in the Bolan Pass or Kutchi.

Note by Officiating Commissioner. Letter forwarded to Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department.—A. A. MUNRO.

5. 20th August.—Mir Khera Khan, Sirdar of the Bezonjass, took his leave and started from Khelat for Nal. He obtained his Highness' permission to visit Mir Ibrahim Khan at Wudd to condole with him on account of the death of his brother, the late Sirdar Noordeen.

20th August.—Sirdar Gohur Khan of Jalawan arrived and paid his respects to his Highness the Khan, who sent a Chobdar to show the Sirdar where to encamp. His Highness also provided the Sirdar with tents.

6. 21st August.—To-day Sirdars Asad Khan of Sarawan and Gohur Khan of Jalawan together paid their respects to his Highness the Khan. Vakil Muhammad Khan privately afterwards informed Major Sandeman that his Highness was much pleased with the respectful behaviour of the two Sirdars, especially of Sirdar Gohur Khan.

Mannu Khan, Girani Brahooee, on duty in the Murree Hills, reported that some Murree thieves carried off some Dhoombkee cattle from Lehri in Kutchi. That Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan heard of it, and recovered the cattle, and sent to Sirdar Sorab Khan Dhoombkee to send for the cattle, and they would be at once given up to him. On hearing this news his Highness was much pleased.

The diary of the newswriter stationed at Kahan, the Murree head-quarters, was received to-day. It contains the following news :—

(1st.) A Hindu merchant, by name Badla, had sent 105 maunds of wool from Kahan to Rajhan in the Punjab.

(2nd.) A Khetran merchant had been plundered by a Boogtee of some property and money. The young Khetran Chief, Kadir Buksh, had visited Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan at Kahan (Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan married Kadir Buksh's father's widow) and asked him to help him to force the Boogtee thief to disgorge the plunder. Kadir Buksh had first applied for aid to Sirdar Golam Murteza, the Bugti Sirdar, who refused to in any way interfere. Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan collected his headmen and they agreed to help Kadir Buksh, provided the property was not restored by the Boogtees within two months. The Murree Chiefs informed the Boogtee Sirdar of this decision.

(3rd.) The Murree Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan had sent off his cousin Jalah Khan and 20 sowars to Mundai to prevent Murrees passing by that route on plundering expeditions towards the Bolan or Kutchi.

7. 22nd August.—Major Sandeman paid his usual weekly visit to his Highness the Khan at the palace or Miri. The usual conversation took place regarding the state of the Khanate.

A report was received that one Nechara and one Baranzai wounded in the recent fight reported in diary for week ending 15th August had died of their wounds.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 31st August 1876.

23rd August.—A letter was addressed to his Highness the Khan asking for certain information regarding the plunder of kafilas called for in Foreign Secretary's No. 1700, dated 24th July 1876, to the address of the Commissioner, Derajat. To-day, his Highness' Vakil Nawab Muhammad Khan intimated that the Khan had permitted the Khelat merchants to re-open their old trading relations with Wadd and the Jalawan country. A letter was received from Syud Aurung, Shah of Dadar, which stated that the people of Kutchi were this year cultivating largely, and that there were great rejoicings amongst them at the peace lately established between his Highness and the Brahooee Sirdars.

2. 24th August.—Mulla Faiz Muhammad, Naib of Mustung, paid a visit to Major Sandeman, and stated that he had received his Highness' orders to return to his duty at Mustung and Dadar, as he was Naib of these two places; that his Highness in dismissing him had presented him with a khillut. The Naib asked Major Sandeman to write to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed to aid and co-operate with him in dealing with the tribes, and stated that he (Faiz Muhammad) would do all he could to act in a friendly way towards the Sirdars and their tribes. Permission having been obtained through the Vakil from his Highness, Major Sandeman wrote to the Brahooee Sirdars telling them to work heartily with Naib Faiz Muhammad, who had promised on his part to show them and their tribes every consideration in his dealings with them.

3. 25th August.—To-day his Highness the Khan paid his usual weekly visit. The conversation turned on the Brahooee Sirdars and their tribes. His Highness produced a letter he had received from Sirdar Sir Biland Khan Barozai, informing his Highness that Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan, Murree, had stationed his cousin Jalab Khan with 20 sowars at Kott Mundai, and had also placed a few men on the frontier, to prevent Murree inroads into Kutchi and the Bolan Pass. The Khan expressed his pleasure at this intelligence.

4. 27th August.—To-day the Rind headman Mannu, Golab, Pahli, and others, the murderers of Raza Muhammad, Rind, arrived in camp with 35 sowars. The Vakil, Nawab Muhammad Khan, took them to his Highness the Khan, who very severely addressed them regarding their conduct in taking the law into their own hands, and destroying Raza Muhammad and his friends. His Highness said it was his intention to settle the case according to the State custom on his Highness arrival in Kutchi.

5. 28th August.—To-day Koti Khan, the cousin of Bakhtiyar Khan, Thingani Murree, the headman of Kott Mundai, accompanied by Yar Muhammad, the eldest son of Sirdar Alladina Koord, arrived in camp and paid their respects to his Highness the Khan. Koti Khan told his Highness that Bakhtiyar Khan had ten Murrees always on duty in the Kirta Chauki in the Bolan Pass; that not a single Murree had committed depredations in his Highness' territory during the past hot weather, and that he himself had been taken into service, and would loyally fulfil the agreement come to between the Murree clan and the Government of Khelat. A letter was received from Sirdar Muhammad Khan, Baruzai, Chief of Seebee. Its contents stated that the Murree Sirdar was acting up to his agreement, and that his cousin, Jalab Khan, had arrived at Kott Mundai with a party of sowars, to prevent Murrees raiding in the direction of the Bolan or Kutchi. Another piece of intelligence that Sirdar Muhammad Khan gave in his letter was that the Boogtees, to the number of 600 or 700, out of revenge for the destruction of Hyder Khan, Massurie, and a number of Boogtees at the hands of the Zerkhan Pathans residing in Kulu, had attacked one of the Pathan townships and carried it sword in hand, killing 90 Pathans; that the Bijarani Murree Chief, on hearing of this, wrote to the Boogtees to leave Kulu and do the Pathans no further harm. The Boogtees, in reply, told the Murree Chief that he was at liberty to try and turn them out of Kulu, but Karam Khan had declined under the circumstances to attempt it. Sirdar Shah Baz is said to have led the Boogtees on the occasion named against the Zerkhan Pathans.

6. 29th August.—With reference to the above, a letter was received to-day from Sirdar Golam Murteza confirming the news sent by Sirdar Muhammad Khan, Baruzai. The Boogtee Sirdar wrote that his tribe attacked the Pathans on account of their having killed one of his headmen and a number of Boogtees; that the Boogtees were led by his son, who was completely victorious over the Pathans, carrying one of their kots or townships by assault and killing 90 of them. They captured 20 horses, 80 cows, besides a number of arms and other articles. On their side they lost 20 Boogtees killed and a number wounded.

7. 30th August.—Nawab Muhammad Khan, Vakil, by order of his Highness, sent letters for perusal received from the Naib of Punjgur. News had been received there that Sirdar Fakir Muhammad, Naib of Kedj, had made peace with Sheik Umar, Gichki; that the latter had agreed to make his submission to his Highness the Khan, and had paid up 700 gold ashrafis as revenue. It was reported that Sirdar Azaad Khan of Kharan had invited Mir Isa Khan, Gichki, to Kharan, and had betrothed his daughter to the latter's son. Mir Isa Khan had not as yet started for Kharan.

8. 31st August.—To-day his Highness directed Sirdars Gohur Khan, Zehri, and Asad Khan of Sarawan to take up and settle the Nechara and Baruzai case, particulars of which were given in diary for the week ending 15th August. The Sirdars did so, and arranged a peace between the two sides. They informed his Highness that the amount of fine the two sides would have to pay on account of blood-money could not be settled yet, as it was doubtful whether all the wounded would completely recover. They, however, became personally responsible for the future good conduct of the Brahooees concerned, and wrote a security bond binding themselves to produce the offenders on his Highness summoning them to Kutchi during his visit there in the cold weather, when the case would be finally disposed of. His Highness was pleased to approve of this arrangement.

Very heavy rains have fallen during the week. No post has been received in consequence for days, and it is reported that the roads between Khelat and Jacobabad are quite impassable on account of the hill torrents having come down and flooded the entire country. The latest advices received from Jacobabad are dated the 22nd of last month.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In continuation of this office No. 295 of the 28th ultimo, forwarding Major Sandeman's final report, with appendices, on his negotiations with the Khan of Khelat and the Sirdars of that State, I have the honour herewith to submit a letter from Major Sandeman, No. 180 of the 14th ultimo, with its annexure, which latter document he wishes to be attached to his report No. 167 of the 31st July as Appendix D.*

2. The copy to which Major Sandaman refers as having accompanied the Khelat diary for the week ending 7th ultimo had been forwarded to the Private Secretary to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General previously to the receipt of the letter now enclosed.

Enclosure 1 in No. 126.

No. 180, dated Camp Khelat, 14th August 1876.

From Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

I submitted to you, along with diary for the week ending 7th August 1876, a translation of the rules for the better civil administration of the Khelat State promulgated by his Highness the Khan of Khelat to his Sirdars and Naibs for their information and guidance. On consideration I think it would be suitable were these rules made an appendix to this office letter No. 167, dated 31st July 1876, reporting the final result of the mediation effected by me between his Highness the Khan and his Sirdars. I shall be obliged therefore by your placing them with the appendices to that report and marking them Appendix D.

2. I make this request because already in one or two cases that have occurred since peace was declared the efficacy of these rules has been tested, and it was found that they worked well. I see prospects, therefore, of their promulgation proving of much benefit to those entrusted with the civil administration of the Khelat State, and of their aiding materially, if acted up to, in enabling the Sirdars and Naibs to maintain the peace of the country.

No. 127.

No. 302P., dated Dera Ismail Khan, 4th September 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

In furtherance of the arrangements made by Major Sandeman in concert with his Highness the Khan of Khelat and the Chiefs of tribes on the Bolan Pass for the safe conduct of caravans through that defile to and from Candahar, it seems necessary that order should be solicited from his Highness the Amir of Cabul for securing protection to caravans between Quetta (Shawl Kot) and Peshin, the latter place being in the Amir of Cabul's territory.

2. With that view the Khan of Khelat has addressed Major Sandeman in a letter dated the 2nd ultimo, which that officer has forwarded to me, with a translation under cover of his No. 181 of the 14th ultimo, requesting me to transmit them for the consideration and orders of the Government of India.

3. I accordingly do so in the hope that the Government of India may deem it advisable to cause his Highness the Amir of Cabul to be favourably moved in this matter.

Enclosure 1 in No. 127.

No. 181, dated Camp Khelat, 14th August 1876.

From Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on Special Duty, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty.

I desire to draw your attention to the remarks contained in my diary for the week ending 7th August 1876, intimating that his Highness the Khan of Khelat had restored to the Dumar Kakars inhabiting the hills between Quetta and Peshin the cash and grain allowances they used to receive from the Khelat Government, but which were confiscated on account of their misconduct on their portion of the caravan route.

2. In reference to these remarks I have now the honour to submit, in original, with translation, his Highness' letter to me on the subject, and in explanation of his Highness' remarks contained therein, asking that the co-operation of the Cabul Government may be solicited in affording protection to caravans traversing that portion of the route, I desire to state that the boundary separating Afghanistan from Beloochistan occurs between Quetta and Peshin, and at some distance from these two places. His Highness the Khan's object, therefore, is to get his Highness the Amir to direct the Naib of Peshin to act in concert and communication with the Naib of Quetta in making joint arrangements to protect caravans when traversing the road between Peshin and Quetta.

3. As I am of opinion that without some such arrangement as the one proposed the protection of caravans after they leave Quetta or Peshin, when passing to and fro between them, must remain in an unsatisfactory state, I would suggest your addressing the Government of India on the subject, with a view to their requesting his Highness the Amir of Cabul to take the protection of kafilas when traversing the portion of the caravan route referred to, into his favourable consideration, in the way requested by his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

Enclosure 2 in No. 127.

Translation of a letter, dated 11th Rujub 1293 (2nd August 1876), from his Highness the Khan of Khelat to Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

As Sirdar Alla Dina Koord is now in charge of the Bolan Pass arrangements for the protection of the caravan traffic, I have directed my Naib of Shawl Kot, Abdul Latif, to make over to the Sirdar Rs. 30 in cash and 5 kharwars of wheat and 5 kharwars of jowar, for payment to the Dumar Kakars, with a view to their allowing kafilas to pass unmolested up to the Gaza Bund. My Naib will render the Sirdar every aid possible in this matter. But it happens that the plunder of kafilas occurs between the Gaza Bund and Sibat border in the territory of his Highness the Amir of Cabul. I hope, therefore, you will communicate with the Amir with a view to his Highness issuing strict orders to his officials to make arrangements for the safety of caravans when traversing that part of the caravan route.

No. 128.

Dated Poona, 8th September 1876.

From his Highness Jam Mir Khan, Ex-Chief of Lus Beyla, to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India.

I most humbly and respectfully beg to lay these following few lines for your Lordship's favourable consideration, under the firm conviction that I shall be redressed.

It is seven years past since I am kept as a State prisoner in this country, and I am assured that your Lordship has full knowledge of the particulars of my case, consequently I do not express the same.

Under these impressions I pray to Almighty God for your Lordship's welfare and benign Government. In the meanwhile I beg to draw your Lordship's kind attention as I am given to understand that as Government had kindly sent Captain Sandeman for the amicable settlement of Beloochistan affairs, he did so, and settled the matter with my son, Sirdar Jam Ali Khan, and other Sirdars at Mustung.

With regard to the necessary arrangement of my country I have already appointed my son in charge of it, in having him full authority of the same, and I approve the agreement he may have made with Government.

I beg to crave your Lordship's attention to the fact that it is four years and half since I am in Poona, but the climate of it is disagreeable to me now. I therefore beg your Lordship will kindly allow me to remain in Bombay, that I may change the climate, pass the winter season, and the month of Ramzan festival there.

It is seven years since I am in this country, and do not desire to go to my country without permission, if your Lordship keep me ten years more. As I am disrespectfully brought from my country I do not wish to show my face there unless I am respectfully sent back to it.

Under these circumstances I beg and pray your Lordship will kindly permit me to remain in Bombay. In complying with my humble prayers I shall ever pray to God for your Lordship's long life, health, wealth, and prosperity. Answer this, please.

Khureeta, dated 10th September 1876 (Confidential).

From his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

It has given me sincere gratification to learn from your Highness' letter of the 10th of May last, and by subsequent communications received from Major Sandeman, that your Highness appreciates so cordially the efforts made by the British Government to extricate you from the difficulties with which you have long been surrounded.

My friend, it is not necessary for me on this occasion to consider the many points of detail raised in your letter concerning the past affairs of your country. I need only assure your Highness that, although the distracted state of affairs in Khelat has given the British Government just cause of concern and dissatisfaction, this Government has, at no period, had any other wish than to assist you in the maintenance of your power and dignity, to secure the peace and safety of your dominions, to promote the prosperity of your rule, and to enable you to exercise your authority in the manner most conducive to the interests of your Highness and the welfare of your people.

I need not point out to your Highness that these objects cannot be attained without a due regard to the established rights of the hereditary nobles of Khelat.

My friend, I offer you my sincere congratulations on the result of your successful co-operation in the peaceful settlement of the recent disputes between yourself and your Sirdars; and I have no hesitation in according my general assent to the principle of those arrangements, which, with the concurrence of your Highness, have been made by the British Agent for the future safe transit of trade through your country, and the lasting reconciliation between yourself and your nobles.

On such points of detail as are necessary I shall address a separate communication to Major Sandeman.

My friend, I am about to visit the western frontier in person, and it is my intention to be at Jacobabad on or about the 6th of December next. In a recent letter to my predecessor, your Highness, whilst expressing your desire to remain under the protection of the British Government, represented your wish to meet the Viceroy in person, in order to explain much that is in your heart.

My friend, it will give me much pleasure to meet your Highness on the occasion to which I have referred. I feel assurred that, by such personal conference, we may now bring our mutual relations to a satisfactory settlement, and permanently strengthen the ties of amity and friendship between the two Governments. It is my sincere desire that the reign of your Highness should henceforth be not only peaceful, but powerful and prosperous; and, so long as you continue to desire, and deserve, the friendship of the British Government, it will be my study to give effect to this desire.

As a special mark of my consideration for your Highness, I send this khureeta by the hands of Colonel Colley, a high officer of my personal staff, to whom your Highness can unreservedly explain your wishes, and settle, in communication with him and Major Sandeman, the necessary arrangements for our meeting at Jacobabad.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 8th September 1876. (Extract.)

1. 1st September.—To day Ressaldar Itbar Khan, his sons Denar and Golab, accompanied by Pahli, Mannu, and others, the murderers of Raza Muhammad, attended before his Highness the Khan, who took them all severely to task for their late conduct. The late Raza Muhammad's sons and other near relatives were also present; and his Highness, after discussing the blood feud with the two sides, made peace between them, and said he would himself, when he came to Kutchi, settle the amount of blood-money Raza Muhammad's relatives were entitled to receive from Golab and the others. Further, his Highness wrote to the Naib of Bagh in Kutchi to make arrangements to preserve the peace until the cold weather. The sons of the deceased were also warned to keep the peace.

His Highness paid Major Sandeman his usual weekly visit. A good deal of conversation took place regarding the responsibility for the kafila plundered in the cold weather by the Jalawans.

His Highness' reply to Major Sandeman's letter of the 23rd August, asking for certain information called for by the Foreign Secretary in his letter No. 1700, dated 24th July last, regarding the plundering of kafilas during the past few years, was received. A translation of his Highness' letter was submitted to Colonel Munro under cover of this Office No. 204, dated 4th September 1876.

Note by Officiating Commissioner.
Submitted in the Foreign Department.—A. A. MUNRO, Officiating Commissioner.

2. 2nd September.—Sirdars Asad Khan of Sarawan and Gohur Khan of Jalawan together paid their respects to his Highness the Khan. The Chief of the Sasolies (a branch tribe of the Jalawans) was also present in Durbar. A long-standing quarrel has existed between the Zehris and the Sasolies, about the proprietary right to certain lands. His Highness heard what Sirdars Gohur Khan and Pahar Khan had to say, as representing the two sides, and decided that the disputants ought to settle the matter according to Muhammadan law, before the Kazi. This was arranged, and a day fixed for hearing the case. The two sides were directed to produce their sunnuds, showing the grounds on which they respectively maintained their right to the disputed lands.

3. 3rd September.—Mussamut Hoor Bibi, the mother of the late Taj Mahomed, again visited Major Sandeman, and asked that a settlement should be brought about between Sirdar Gohur Khan and herself. The Sirdar was sent for, and promised to be as a son to her. She agreed to return to Zehri. His Highness the Khan also wrote to her, advising her to return home.

4. 4th September.—Sirdar Rahman Khan, of Noshki, wrote that there was a bitter quarrel between him and his nephew, Afzal Khan, about the title to the Sirdarship of the tribe. That his Highness the Khan had already arranged that the dispute was to be settled at the gathering in Kutchi in the cold weather, when his Highness and all the Sirdars would be present; but that, notwithstanding this settlement, Afzal Khan was showing signs as if he intended to put the question to the issue of a battle, and he requested that his Highness should write to Afzal Khan to tell him to behave. Sirdar Rahman Khan's letter was made over to the Vakil Nawab Muhammad Khan, who took it to his Highness for persual, who, on hearing its contents, wrote to Afzal Khan, warning him to behave, and to return to Rahman Khan certain lands of his of which he had taken possession. His Highness stated in the letter that the quarrel would be taken up and settled by him in concert with all the Sirdars on their arrival in the cold weather in Kutchi.

5. 5th September.—Major Sandeman paid his usual weekly visit to his Highness the Khan at the Miri or palace. The conversation turned on the state of affairs in Cabul, and the news lately brought by some merchants from Candahar. His Highness' Vakil Nawab Muhammad Khan said that lately the Amir had changed his habits, and was not as friendly as formerly to the British Government.

To-day the Vakil brought Pahar Khan, the Sasolie Chief, to pay his respects to Major Sandeman. Sirdar Gohur Khan was also present, and the two Chiefs were allowed fully to discuss the matter in dispute between them. The result of the discussion went to Show that Sirdar Gohur Khan had right on his side. On the Chiefs leaving, it was expected that the matter would be amicably arranged before the arrival of the sunnuds, which his Highness had directed the two sides to produce before the Kazi.

6. 6th September.—Yakub Khan, brother of Tail Khan, and Nubbee Buksh, the headmen of the village of Kirta, in the Bolan Pass, arrived in camp, and reported that 20 families had returned, and had re-occupied the village; that they were busily engaged in re-building their houses, and had also cultivated about 200 acres of land, with jowar for the autumn harvest, and were engaged in ploughing the land for the spring or wheat crop. That the Murrees were quite friendly, and some Muzerani Murrees were employed in the Kirta Chowki. These headmen were made over to Vakil Muhammad Khan, who was to take a favourable opportunity of introducing them to his Highness the Khan.

To-day Koti Khan, nephew of Bukhtiyar Khan, the Murree Chief of Kot Mundai, took his leave, and departed for his village.

7. 7th September.—Sirdar Gohur Khan, of Jalawan, reported that he and Pahar Khan had made up their quarrel, the latter having abandoned his claim to the land. That he (Sirdar Gohur Khan) had paid Sirdar Pahar Khan a visit at his tent, and they were now friends. The two Chiefs, with their headmen, visited Major Sandeman, who sent them with Sirdar Asad Khan, of Sarawan, to his Highness the Khan, to whom they stated the way the dispute had been disposed of. His Highness was much pleased at the result, and gave Sirdar Pahar Khan leave to return to his home.

The Langhaw Brahooees complained to Sirdar Asad Khan that the Khan's officials had demanded from them 1,000 loads of lucerne grass; that they could not give so much, and they asked their Sirdar to interfere. The matter was referred to the Vakil, who promised to represent the case to his Highness. It was arranged that the Langhaws would give 400 loads, and it was hoped that this amount would satisfy the Khan.

A suitable khillut was bestowed on each of the headmen of Kirta, and 200 rupees given them in cash to help them to rebuild their houses. The re-occupation of Kirta is an immense boon to the caravans passing to and fro through the Bolan Pass.

8. 8th September.—To-day his Highness paid his usual weekly visit. The proclamation, dated the 18th August, of his Excellency the Viceroy announcing to the people of India that Her Majesty the Queen had assumed the title of Empress of India, and that a Durbar was to be held at Delhi, in celebration of the event, on the 1st of January next, was carefully translated, and read to his Highness the Khan, who expressed great interest in the auspicious event. Although the question was not put to his Highness as to whether he would like to be invited to the Durbar, still, from what passed, the impression was formed that he would be glad of an invitation, which, if given, he would accept.

Were his Highness to visit Delhi to be present at the Durbar, he would require to go as the guest of the British Government, as he is far too poor to pay his own expenses.

* * * * * * * *

Sirdar Gohur Khan, with permission of his Highness, exhumed the remains of the late Sirdar Noordeen, and sent them to Wudd, to be buried beside the late Sirdar's forefathers.

Mussamut Hoor Bibi visited Major Sandeman, who was present at an interview between her and Sirdar Gohur Khan, at which arrangements were come to about her debts. On taking her leave she said she was to depart next morning for Zehri.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 15th September 1876.

1. 9th September.—This morning his Highness the Khan visited the camp of the 4th Sikh Infantry, and witnessed a parade of the troops under Captain Scott. The Khan was greatly interested in the manœuvres, and expressed himself as highly pleased with them. At the close of the parade his Highness inspected the different classes of men, viz., Sikhs, Dogras, Pathans, and Mussulman Punjabis, of which the 4th Sikhs are composed, and in taking his departure presented the men with 100 rupees. Some races were run between the 4th Sikhs and Jacob's Rifles, all of which were won by the former.

To-day Sirdar Gohur Khan visited his Highness the Khan, and asked permission to return to Zehri. The Khan granted it. The Sirdar then asked the Khan to employ him in any way he could be useful. In reply his Highness exhorted him, now that he had been recognised as the Sirdar of the Zehris, to treat his people kindly and justly; that by doing this he would continue in favour with his Highness and with the British Government. The Sirdar thanked his Highness very gratefully for speaking to him so kindly, and promised to do as advised, and hoped the Khan would always find him loyal and true to his Government.

2. 11th September.—Sirdar Moolla Mahomed reported that he had failed to settle the Rustumzai and Shahizai quarrel, particulars of which were given in diary for the week ending 31st August. He had, however, made a truce between the two sides for one and a half months. His Highness the Khan and Major Sandeman, after consulting together regarding the settlement of this quarrel, decided that the whole of the Sarawan Sirdars should assemble and consult as to what was best to be done, reporting the result to his Highness the Khan. Letters containing instructions to this effect were accordingly sent to the Sarawan Sirdars by his Highness and Major Sandeman.

Sirdar Alladina Koord and Daroga Alladad reported that the Kirta and Siri Bolan Chowkis had been commenced. Sirdar Alladina also wrote that he intended to proceed to Quetta to arrange with the Naib there for the protection of the route between Peshin and Shaul-Kot (Quetta).

A petition was received from the whole of the Barozee headmen of Seebee, also one from Sirdar Muhammad Khan, asking that he should be recognised as the Sirdar of Seebee in room of his brother, the late Sher Zaman Shah. The two petitions were sent to Daud Khan, the correspondent at Candahar, with instructions to submit them to Sirdar Safdar Ali Khan, with a view to orders being passed on them, as Seebee is a dependency of the Amir of Cabul. A reply was received from Candahar to the effect that the Barozai petitions had been forwarded to his Highness the Amir for orders.

News was received from Candahar to the effect that the merchants there were in doubt as to whether it was safe to send kafilas through the Bolan Pass, as the country was reported to be under water. After consulting with the Khan, a reply was sent to say that the pass was open to traffic.

3. 12th September.—To-day Major Sandeman paid his weekly visit to his Highness the Khan at the Miri or palace. The usual conversation took place, and Major Sandeman proposed he should go to Mustung to settle the Brahooee quarrel. His Highness approved of the proposal. During the interview his Highness asked whether all the Nawabs and Rajas of Hindustan were to be present at the Delhi Durbar, the distance Multan was from Kutchi and Multan from Delhi, and other questions showing he was interested in the matter. In last week's diary it was recorded that were an invitation to the Durbar sent to his Highness, it was believed that he would gladly accept it, but that no account of his Highness' poverty, the Government would require to pay the expenses of the journey.

The news-writer stationed at Kahan, the Murree head-quarters, reports—

1st. Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan, the Murree Chief, to be very ill with fever.

2nd. That the owners of the cattle plundered from Lehri in Kutchi had arrived in Kahan, and that the stolen cattle were being restored to them.

3rd. That three horses from the Khetran valley had been plundered by Murree thieves, but that the Murree Sirdar had recovered them and restored them to Nassir Khan Nahar, who came to Kahan to receive them.

Sirdar Alladina reported that Sherdil Mazarani Murree, who is at present residing with the Bijarani Murrees, carried off some sheep from his kinsman Kechi Khan, as there is a family quarrel between the two. The latter desired to retaliate on the former, but this Sirdar Alladina wrote he would not permit, as Kechi Khan was on duty in the Bolan. He, however, asked Major Sandeman to direct Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan to arrange the quarrel. A letter was sent to Kahan directing Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan to arrange the matter, and to cause Sherdil to restore Kechi Khan's sheep at once. The Sirdar of the Koords was directed to send the letter by the hands of a special messenger. Sirdar Moolla Mahomed was also written to and directed to see that Sherdil and Kechi Khan settled their quarrel.

4. 13th September.—To-day at half-past four in the afternoon Major Sandeman, accompanied by Captains Scott and Shepherd and Dr. Duke, at the invitation of his Highness the Khan, proceeded to the parade-ground of the Khelat garrison to inspect the troops. They were received by his Highness (who was dressed in uniform) at the Mustung gate, and the cortège proceeded to the parade-ground. The two infantry regiments called the Nurwahi and Fatteh Jang were drawn up in line, with Mir Mahmud Khan (the heir apparent) in command, who received his Highness with a general salute. Commander Fakir Muhammad then took command of the parade, and the troops went through several manœuvres. The infantry numbered about 600 and the cavalry about 200. On the whole, under the circumstances, the parade was creditable. After it was over Major Sandeman addressed a few words to the troops commending them for their loyalty to the Khelat State during the late civil war, now happily over, and said that although it was to be hoped there was no more fighting to be done, still they must not think there was no work for them, as troops were absolutely necessary to maintain the peace of the country, &c.

5. 14th September.—To-day several cases of cholera occurred in the Miri or palace. The disease was not of a severe type. There were eleven seizures, and by night one of the Khan's younger sons, Abdulla Khan (a baby one year old) and two female slaves had succumbed to the disease. The others were reported as recovering. Major Sandeman that evening visited the Khan in the palace, and condoled with him on the death of his son, sitting with him for several hours. The Khan expressed himself on Major Sandeman's taking his leave as most grateful to him for visiting him at such a time.

6. 15th September.—To-day the report from the Miri of the cholera is satisfactory Two sons of the Khan, Mir Shah Newaz Khan and Azam Khan, had been taken ill but were recovering. The other patients were doing well.

The contents of the Foreign Secretary's letter No. 1873P., dated 16th August, with enclosures, received from Colonel Munro on the subject of Dad Mahomed Rind's conduct towards the Political Agent, Gwadur, regarding certain fugitive slaves, were communicated through the Wakil to his Highness the Khan. In reply his Highness stated that the Naib of Kedj, Sirdar Fakir Muhammad, had previously written to his Highness on the subject, and that Dad Muhammad would be summoned to Khelat, when his case could be disposed of. Major Sandeman in reply said he considered the proposal a good one, and Dad Muhammad was summoned accordingly to Khelat.

The Daroga and statistical writer of the Bolan Pass, Alladad Khan, reported that the caravan season had commenced. One kafila, numbering 319 camels and 142 donkeys, had arrived from Candahar, and had been escorted through the pass in safety. Rupees 309 had been realised as escort fees, and Rupees 1,078–6 as custom dues. The value of the caravan was said to be Rupees 38,168, and to have consisted of wool, fruit, and other miscellaneous goods.

2. In forwarding these papers I am desired to state that his Excellency the Governor in Council is not prepared to offer any objection to the Ex-Jam's proposed change of residence. No. 133.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 22nd September 1876. (Extract.)

1. 16th September.—No fresh case of cholera has occurred in the Miri or palace. The two sons of the Khan who were attacked by the disease have entirely recovered. A few fresh cases are reported from the city and neighbouring villages. The disease, although epidemic, is of a mild form, and it is hoped that in a few days hence it will have disappeared entirely.

2. 17th September.—Sirdar Sohrab Khan, Dhoombkee, and Russul Buksh, the nephew of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed (residing at present in Seebee), report the death at Kahan on the 6th of Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan, the Chief of the Murree tribe. The reports stated that all the Murree headmen were assembled at the Murree head-quarters, and that Sirdar Mirulla Khan and Sher Muhammad respectively, the brother and cousin of the deceased Sirdar, had written them requesting them to be on the outlook for thieves on the frontier, and to take necessary precautions until the Murree headmen had returned from Kahan to their homes. On receipt of these letters Major Sandeman visited his Highness the Khan at the Miri, to consult with him as to what precautions should be taken for the protection of Kutchi, until the effect of the death of the Sirdar on the tribe was known. It was decided that Captain Wylie should be sent to Dadar with the detachment of Sind Horse now at Khelat as soon as the Government of India orders were received regarding the settlement come to at Mustung of Khelat affairs. His Highness at the same time wrote a letter to Sirdar Mirulla Khan, the brother of the late Chief, condoling with and comforting him, and promising to recognise him as the Sirdar of the tribe on his attending on him after his arrival in Kutchi. The letter said that the usual khillut would be bestowed on him in recognition of his having succeeded to the chieftainship. Major Sandeman also wrote to Sirdar Mirulla Khan directing him to attend on the Khan with all his headmen directly his Highness arrived in Kutchi.

In the last diary it was reported that Sirdar Alla Dina Koord was directed to go to Shawl Kot and join with the Naib there in endeavouring to arrange with the tribes for the protection of the kafila road from the Peshin border to Shawl Kot. Sirdar Alla Dina now reports that the Naib there raised difficulties about this portion of the kafila route, that it had nothing to do with the Bolan Pass, as by it the kafilas took the road to Kurrachee, &c. After great deal of conversation with the Khan and the Wakil on the subject it was arranged that Major Sandeman and the Wakil Nawab Muhammad Khan should visit Shawl Kot, and together consult as to what protection to this portion of the kafila route was really required. Major Sandeman casually mentioned to his Highness that when the arrangements for the protection of the Bolan Pass reported in this office No. 139, dated 1st July, were come to, nothing was said about their being any danger to kafilas traversing the route between the Peshin border and Shawl Kot (Quetta). His Highness in reply agreed as to this being the case, but said that he thought that Sirdar Alla Dina should be held responsible for the whole route, and that if the Government made over to him the whole of the money paid to the Bolan tribes and to the Murrees he would himself be responsible for the entire route. To this Major Sandeman replied that if his Highness took into consideration the unprotected state the kafila routes were until very lately in, which led to the Government orders, No. 2819P. of the 16th October last being issued, he would see how impossible it was to make over the pay of the tribes to him. In fact that a measure of this kind had formerly been adopted with regard to the pay of the Murrees for the protection of Kutchi, and had failed. But for all this Major Sandeman assured his Highness that he was not in any way to consider himself as relieved of his responsibilities, and, in order to prove this, the Mustung proceedings were produced and read. Ultimately his Highness directed an order to be written to each of his Naibs of Dadar and Shawl Kot (Quetta), telling them to co-operate with and to heartily aid Captain Wylie with the Bolan Pass arrangements. It was admitted that during no former period had the pass been so safe, and also that the present arrangements for the security of trade were working well. The Wakil did not attempt to conceal that his Highness was only anxious now to have sole charge of the pass in the hopes that the pay of the pass officials would be made over to him; but that in his opinion this would be a most unwise measure, and would not succeed, and he strongly advised that the settlement come to at Mustung, and to which the Khan had affixed his seal, should in its integrity be maintained.

3. 18th September 1876.—His Highness the Khan sent for perusal a letter from Gajian, the Naib of Punjgur, in which it was stated that Sirdar Azaad Khan threatened to raid Punjgur. * * * * *

5. Two Hindus, by name Hema and Parema, were introduced by the Wakil, who said that they were anxious to open shops at Kirta and Siri-Bolan for the benefit of the kafila people. Permission was at once granted, and orders sent to Darogah Alla Dad to aid them, and to establish their shops alongside the (pass) stations inhabited by the kafila guards.

6. The Bolan Pass Darogah and statistical writer reports that during the week a kafila consisting of 162 camels and 91 donkeys en route from Candahar and Herat traversed the Bolan in safety. Fees, Rupees 179-11-6, were realised on account of budrukki, and Rupees 581-15-6 on account of custom dues. The caravan was estimated at Rupees 20,057-12 in value.

Special Political. Office Memo. No 980S., dated Simla, 27th September 1876.

From Officiating Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, to Foreign Department.

It is understood in the Military Department that, at all events for some time, half the escort with Major Sandeman's Mission was encamped, "for convenience sake," eight miles from Khelat, at which place the other half of the escort was encamped with Major Sandeman.

2. The Military Department would be glad if the Foreign Department would ascertain and inform it whether the convenience in question was one of a political nature, or whether it was owing to a dearth of supplies, forage, or water, or to any other cause that would operate against a body of troops of the strength of the escort being encamped for any time in the immediate vicinity of Khelat.

No. 135.

No. 325P., dated Dera Ismail Khan, 30th September 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

On receipt of your No. 1700 of the 24th July last, I communicated with Major Sandeman, requesting him to furnish replies to the queries contained in it regarding compensation claimed for caravans plundered in the Khelat State during the last few years, and I have now to enclose that officer's detailed report, No. 204 of the 4th instant, on the subject.

2. Major Sandeman solicited the Khan of Khelat to furnish him with details, which are given in the translation of his Highness' reply embodied in paragraph 3 of the report. In paragraph 4 Major Sandeman quotes the Khan of Khelat's reply, written in February 1872, to the Commissioner in Sind, on the subject of the earlier cases of caravan plundering, which date as far back as 1871-72. In that letter the Khan explains how he felt himself called upon to pay compensation amounting to Rs. 90,000 in two cases of plunder by Brahooees and Murrees from a sum of one lakh of rupees which had been granted to himself by the British Government.

3. Having thus described the state of the case from the Khan of Khelat's point of view, Major Sandeman proceeds to reply specifically to the questions contained in your letter under acknowledgment. The note appended to his answer No. 1 suggests the advisability of a reference to the Commissioner in Sind regarding the disposal of a sum of Rupees 5,000 and the value of 12 camels realised from the Murree clan by Major Sandeman during 1874-75 and transferred to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier.

4. The balance of compensation, as estimated by the Khan of Khelat, amounts to Rupees 87,000, besides an unascertained sum said to be still due to certain Candahar merchants, whose caravan was plundered in 1872 at a place called Baghwana in Khelat.

5. The responsibility of the Khan of Khelat for the protection of caravans passing through his territory appears to have been clearly recognised in connexion with the negotiations of 1872, which proved unsuccessful. I concur in Major Sandeman's view as expressed in paragraph 8, that no relaxation of the terms on which that responsibility was then fixed is called for. The entertainment of any claims to compensation on account of the caravans plundered in the Mulla, Takari, and Gazak Passes in the early part of this year, soon after the assassination of Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, and solely in consequence of that event, is quite out of the question on a just consideration of all the circumstances. What is really due to Candahar merchants in the Baghwana case cannot be ascertained without personal communication with the claimants.

6. My deduction from Major Sandeman's description of the cases in regard to which the Khan of Khelat claims a sum of Rupees 87,000 is, that the amount cannot be deemed to be fairly due by the British Government, which had undertaken no responsibility whatever for the internal administration of the Khelat State. The reasons advanced in the last four paragraphs of Major Sandeman's report for disallowing any such claim appear to be sufficiently cogent, apart entirely from the other consideration as to our non-responsibility.

7. Had the negotiations of 1872 resulted successfully, the Sirdars actively concerned in promoting or abetting the plunder of caravans would in all probability have been held responsible for the payment of compensation. It fell to the lot of the Khan of Khelat himself, however, to disburse compensation to the various claimants, and he appears to have done so from the amount granted to him by the British Government for general purposes.

8. The point for consideration now seems to be whether in the altered state of affairs, and in the present impoverished state of the Khan's treasury, Government are prepared to give consideration to the circumstances under which the Khan was placed at the time, and to come to his relief as solicited by himself.

Enclosure 1 in No. 135.

No. 204, dated Camp Khelat, 4th September 1876.

From Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, on special duty.

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your No. 274, dated 29th July, forwarding copy of Foreign Secretary's No. 1700, dated Simla, 24th July 1876, on the subject of the compensation demanded for kafilas plundered in the Khelat State during the last few years, and directing me to reply to a list of questions which the letter contains. I will reply to the questions referred to seriatim, but will first record a letter I addressed to his Highness the Khan regarding them, and his reply; also a letter from his Highness on the same subject to the address of Sir William Merewether. I submit a copy of this letter, as its contents throw much light on the subject under reference.

2. Translation of a letter from Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, dated 23rd August 1876, to the address of Mir Khodadad Khan, Khan of Khelat: "I have the pleasure to inform your Highness that your memorandum presented to me on 6th June at Mustung, containing the terms on which your Highness had agreed to make peace with the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars, has been received by his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council, and with reference to your Highness' demand contained therein that the British Government should compensate the Candahar merchants plundered by the Jalawans in the Mulla and other passes, I have been directed by the Government of India to furnish at an early date more precise information showing—

"(1.) the caravans on account of which compensation is claimed;
"(2.) the time and place at which the caravans were plundered;
"(3.) the persons by whom the caravans were plundered;
"(4.) the loss estimated by the owners;
"(5.) the compensation, if any, paid up to date, and by whom paid.

" (6.) the balance fairly due;

" (7) A brief statement of the grounds on which your Highness claims compensation from the British Government.

" To enable me to comply with the above instructions, I shall feel obliged by your Highness giving these questions your full consideration, and by your favouring me with an answer to each. Replying to them will afford your Highness a full opportunity of placing before the Government of India the circumstances, from first to last, which led to the plunder of kafilas, and the grounds on which your Highness has formed the opinion that the Government of India, out of consideration for the difficulties your Highness' Government has lately been placed in, ought to compensate the merchants who have suffered severely during the late civil war."

3. To the above his Highness the Khan sent the following reply, dated 29th August 1876, to my address: "I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter asking, by the order of his Excellency the Viceroy, certain information regarding the kafilas lately plundered. In reply, I send you the following information: In the year 1288 (1871-72) kafilas were plundered in the Bolan Pass. Two by the Sarawan Brahooees, Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, and other Raisanis, and by Sirdars Alladina Koord, Shadi Khan Bungulzai, Said Khan Muhammad Shahi, and Samandar Khan Lehri. The two places at which these kafilas were plundered was at Dadar, at the foot of the pass, and at Khak Daho, in the pass itself. The value of these two kafilas can be ascertained from Major Harrison's papers, as he valued the merchants' losses. I was debited with Rupees 30,000, which sum I had unfairly to pay to the merchants.

" The third kafila was plundered by Sherdil Murree, at Machh. He committed this act because the Sarawan Brahooees caused the Samalani Minguls to raid his (Sherdil's) tribe, and in retaliation Sherdil attacked the kafila. He was aided also by the other Brahooees referred to above. The value of this kafila will also be found with the British records. Again, very unfairly, Major Harrison caused me to pay Rs. 50,000 compensation for this kafila to the merchants.

" In the same year a fourth kafila was plundered by Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, near Baghwana. The value of this kafila amounted to Rs. 35,000. From Noordeen a portion of the value of the kafila was realised. Major Harrison again unfairly made me pay Rs. 5,000. The entire state of the case regarding this kafila and the compensation still due can be seen from Major Harrison's papers.

" The fifth kafila* was plundered by Gohur Khan Zarukzai, Saleh Muhammad Musiani, Haibat Khan Samalani, Chakar Khan Jattak, and other Zehris in the Mulla Pass. The value of this caravan is estimated at Rs. 80,000. The owners of the plundered kafila are clamorous for payment of compensation. Haibat Khan Samalani also with his followers plundered the merchants of Khelat once in the Takari Pass, and the other time in the Gazak Pass. These two last-named kafilas valued Rs. 7,000. The Hindus, their owners, are clamorous for payment of compensation.

* This was during last cold weather, and after the death of Sirdar Noordeen, and was done out of revenge for his destruction.

" With regard to your asking me to explain the grounds on which I claim compensation from the British Government for these kafilas, in reply I beg to state that in the first year the kafilas were plundered Sir William Merewether settled my affairs with the Brahooees, who were directed by him to pay compensation for the kafilas, and for the plunder taken by them from the subjects of the Khelat State. The Brahooees also agreed to this decision. The Commissioner desired that the payment for State property plundered by the Brahooees from Kutchi and elsewhere should be excused, and to this I very unwillingly agreed, but I did so for two reasons:—(1.) Because the British Government desired that I should do so; (2.) because the Brahooees had to pay compensation for the plundered kafilas, and for the property taken from the ryots of Kutchi and elsewhere. But the Brahooees could not pay and could not fulfil their promise, and I did not attempt to force them to pay, as I was afraid of the British Government. As the last settlement was come to by the British Government through the Commissioner, Sir William Merewether, I hope the British Government will get me compensation from the Brahooees, or pay me from its own treasury. This is all I have to state. All else is well, &c."

4. His Highness's letter to Sir William Merewether on this subject is dated the 1st of Zilhaj 1289 (February 1872), and runs as follows:—

" I have received your letter dated 29th January, and have been highly pleased to read it. In reply, I beg to state that I have fully put the contents of the agreement which I wrote at Khelat on the 25th Rajab into execution, i.e., I have paid from my own treasury compensation amounting to Rs. 30,000, to the merchants of kafilas plundered by the Sarawan Brahooees, who were held responsible to pay the compensation due;

but as I saw that they were delaying doing so, I paid it myself to satisfy the merchants. But now I have arrived in Kutchi, I am daily employed in arranging to pay the remainder of the compensation due. I have very nearly paid the whole. I have also paid Rs. 5,000 as compensation for a kafila plundered by Sirdar Noordeen. For the payment of the remainder of the compensation due on this kafila the property of the Sirdar has been mortgaged.

"With regard to the payment of the kafila plundered by the Murrees, in reply I beg to state that you are quite aware that for the last few years the Murree clan is not under my orders, but they are causing injury to my country and people. Now, as the British Government desired me to compensate the merchants of the plundered kafilas, I, in order to obey its wishes and in accordance with the instructions contained in your No. 7 of 29th January, paid the merchants Rs. 55,000 as compensation from my own treasury, and I have settled all the merchants' claims. A copy of the merchants' receipts are herewith forwarded for your perusal. I consider you and the British Government my support in every matter.

"The British Government, after considering the state of my affairs, was kind enough to grant me one lakh of rupees. Out of this sum I have paid Rs. 90,000 as compensation to the plundered merchants. I paid this sum in the hope that the British Government would be kind to me, and that you would grant me an interview. You are quite aware of the income of my country, and the conduct of the Murrees and Brahooees. I don't think I can recover from them the Rs. 90,000 which I have paid as compensation. Should I try to recover the amount, great disturbances in the country would at once arise. I am very anxious to meet you to consult you regarding certain matters. Consider me your well-wisher and continue to correspond with me, &c."

5. Having given the above correspondence as an introduction to my subject, I will now return to the questions contained in the Foreign Secretary's letter under reply. For convenience sake, I will divide the time during which the kafilas were plundered into two periods, viz., those plundered during 1872, and those plundered in 1875–76. It is necessary to my purpose to do this, to enable me fully to answer the Foreign Secretary's questions. I will here again record them:—

Question No. 1.—State the number of caravans on account of which compensation is claimed?

Answer.—There are three. First, a sum is still due for the kafila plundered by the late Sirdar Noordeen in Baghwana in 1872. See Foreign Secretary's letter No. 376 P., dated Fort William, 10th February 1874, to the Secretary, Government, Punjab; also extract from Sir William Merewether's No. 1178, dated 6th September 1873, to the Secretary to Government of India; also Commissioner, Derajat's, No. 144, dated 11th April last, to Major Sandeman's address. This is the only kafila plundered in 1872 for which compensation has not been fully paid.

NOTE.—It will be observed from the Khan's letter recorded above to the address of the Commissioner in Sind that the compensation for the kafilas plundered by Sherdil (Bolan Pass) Murree was, with that for other kafilas, fully paid by his Highness the Khan; but it is well to note here, that after the settlement come to by order of the Government of India with the Murree clan by me in the spring of 1874–75, I realised from the clan Rs. 5,000 in cash, and sent the money to Jacobabad to Colonel Loch. I also recovered 11 camels from Kahan of the plunder taken from this kafila. They were also sent to Jacobabad. The money realised for them, as well as the Rs. 5,000, ought to be available to reimburse the Khan in part payment of the Rs. 55,000 paid by him for the kafila plundered by Sherdil Murree. It will be remembered that Sherdil was at this time in the Khan's service and responsible for the safety of kafilas. He turned against the Khan during the insurrection, and joined the other Chiefs in the plunder of kafilas.

Question No. 2.—The time and place at which the kafilas were plundered?

Answer.—One in Baghwana in 1872. One in the Mulla Pass in the cold weather of 1875–76, after the death of Noordeen Mingul. Also two small kafilas, in value Rs. 7,000, in the Takari and Gazak Passes, by Haibat Khan Samalani Mingul.

Question No. 3.—The persons by whom the caravans were plundered?

Answer.—By Sirdar Noordeen Mingul and Gohur Khan and other Jalawan Chiefs.

Question No. 4.—The loss estimated by the owners?

Answer.—The owners are not in Khelat, but his Highness the Khan estimated the compensation due at Rupees 87,000, plus the sum due for the Baghwana kafila.

Question No. 5.—The compensation, if any, paid up to date, and by whom paid?

Answer.—Rupees 90,000 were paid by his Highness the Khan in full compensation due for the kafilas plundered in 1872 in the Bolan Pass. A portion of the compensation due was paid by Noordeen for the Baghwana kafila plundered in 1872. Amount still due not known. The owners are at Candahar.

Question No. 6.—The balance fairly due ?

Answer.—It is estimated by his Highness at Rupees 87,000, plus the amount still due for the Baghwana kafila. It is impossible to get hold of the owners, unless I send for them, to finally dispose of the case, as they are at Candahar.

Question No. 7.—A brief statement of the grounds on which the Khan claims compensation from the British Government ?

Answer.—In order to reply fully to this question it is necessary now to record the object I had in view when I called on the Khan, in the correspondence given at the commencement of this letter, to state in writing his own reasons for asking for compensation for the kafilas plundered by the Jalawans from the British Government. Further, it seems to me of the last importance, in order to obtain a fair knowledge of the question and of what is passing in his Highness' mind regarding it, that I should give a brief statement of what I have learnt from his Highness when conversing with him on this subject.

6. I find that his Highness' mind is strongly impressed with the belief that the former settlement of his quarrel with the Brahooee Sirdars has relieved him from all responsibility for their acts, whether against kafilas or against the neighbouring clans on the frontier, leading to possible disturbances on the British border and in the Bolan Pass. His Highness has adopted this view of his position on account of what the Commissioner records in paragraph 23 of his report describing the mediation, which decreed, (1st) that the property plundered from the kafilas be given up; (2nd) that all property seized during the late rebellion by the Sirdars and their followers from the ryots of Beloochistan, whether in Khorassan or Kutchi, be restored. In reference to Commissioner's reasons for giving this decree, a copy of which was, I believe, supplied to his Highness, Sir William Merewether in his 25th paragraph says: "The second and third "stipulations I considered only equitable and unquestionably necessary. Were they "not enforced, a premium on rebellion would have been established, and the faithful "many would have been in a worse position than the rebellious few. The Sirdars and "their followers would have largely benefited by the plunder they got possession of when "engaged in lawless proceedings, and it would have been to the advantage of the unruly in future to side with any Chief who chose to raise the standard of revolt, while "traders who were passing through the country, relying on the good will of the "inhabitants thereof, and the poor people of the country, who were leading peaceful "lives, would have been the chief sufferers."

7. But these preliminary conditions of peace, and no one knows this better than the Khan himself, imposed on the Chiefs were never put in force (as we have seen by the correspondence quoted at the commencement of this letter), and the Commissioner in his letter No. 1178, dated 6th December 1873, to the address of the Foreign Secretary, gives his reasons for obliging his Highness the Khan to pay compensation for the kafilas in the way described by the Khan as follows: He writes:—"Regarding "caravan No. 3 little is known. It was plundered by Sherdil Mazarani Murree in "reprisal for the attack made on him by certain Brahooees from the neighbourhood of "Mustung. Major Harrison's referring the owners to the Deputy Commissioner of "Dera Ghazi Khan was not correct, and he has been so informed through the Political "Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier. The outrage was committed on merchants "travelling through the territory of his Highness the Khan, and the latter was "the sole responsible person, and should have been called upon to reimburse the "sufferers. From what, however, was gathered at the time, the claim by the "merchants would seem to have been greatly exaggerated." Here then was the responsibility of the Khan fully declared for the acts of the Sirdars in the Bolan Pass and elsewhere, and the Khan himself, in writing to the Commissioner in the letter given above, states that under the circumstances the only course open to him was for himself to pay. The Brahooee Sirdars had not the means, and the Khan says any attempt on his part to enforce the conditions of the mediation made by the Commissioner himself would have again thrown the country into a state of rebellion against his Government.

8. The fact of the responsibility of the Khan of Khelat in such matters as laid down by the Commissioner in the last quotation given above is incontestable. It is in accordance with the terms of his treaty with our Government, and it would have a very bad effect on the Khan and his Sirdars was this fact lost sight of. This opinion, and my reasons for holding it, I have fully placed before his Highness. I exemplified it by bringing to his Highness' recollection what passed last cold weather when I first visited him at Khelat. If you refer to my report No. 8, dated 5th February 1876, paragraph 83, you will find that I addressed a letter to the Khan pointing out that the kafila routes were unsafe, and offering to secure a safe passage for a caravan that had then arrived at Khelat from Candahar, and asked his Highness to allow it to accompany me on my return journey to British territory. His Highness did not agree, but instead attacked Sirdar Noordeen and killed him, and this very caravan, for which compensation is now demanded and for the safety of which I did all I could, was plundered in the Mulla Pass by the followers and friends of the deceased Sirdar, led by Sirdar Gohur Khan, whom the Khan up to that time and until the recent settlement come to at Mustung had refused to recognise as Sirdar of the Zehris. Surely then for such acts it would be contrary to the interests of all concerned to in any way lessen or ignore the responsibilities of the Khan and his Government.

9. I think it necessary to bring these facts before you, for the Khan, as said from conversations I have had with him, is clearly anxious to avoid his responsibilities as laid down in the treaty. Although there can be no question that Sirdar Noordeen was conspiring against the Khan at the time of his destruction, still it was the uncompromising way he and Gohur Khan were treated by the Khelat Government that led to the plunder of the two kafilas in the Mulla and Takari and Gazak Passes during the past cold weather, and which his Highness values at Rupees 87,000.

10. But there is still one other point, of even greater importance, that has to be remembered in fixing the responsibility for the recent plunder of the kafilas. Were it to rest on the Sirdars, as the Khan's letter giving his reasons for demanding that the British Government should pay the sum due to the merchants would lead one to believe was what he desired, his Highness would escape from one of the conditions of the recent peace. The reason for this is as follows: If you refer to this office No. 112, dated 24th of May last, you will find that the Jalawan Sirdars in their petitions then submitted had many real grounds for complaint against the Khelat Government. I did not ask the Khan to admit any of these, but I advised him, as the civil war had lasted for so long, to consider whether, if he really desired a permanent peace, it would not be desirable to leave the past alone. Did he agree to this, I said I would get the Brahooee Sirdars to do the same thing. His Highness agreed to this proposal, and before the Jalawan Sirdars arrived at Mustung, it was arranged that the Khan and all his Sirdars should waive all claims to blood money that either side might desire to bring forward, and which had arisen out of the late war, or to compensation for plundered property, or for the plunder of kafilas.

11. I took this step advisedly for several reasons. Amongst them are the following: The Government of India, in their Resolution No. 671 A.-P., dated Fort William, the 14th March, had desired me under the most favourable circumstances to settle Khelat affairs, and in the 12th paragraph of that Resolution they expressed their views in the following words: "Accordingly orders will at once issue that if Colonel Munro is satisfied that the Khan and principal Chiefs of all parties, including Jalawans and Sarawans, are ready to accept Major Sandeman's arbitration, he is authorised, should he deem such a course desirable under present circumstances, to arrange for a meeting between Major Sandeman, the Khan, and his Sirdars in Kutchi, or elsewhere as may be convenient, and make a renewed attempt to carry out the objects set forth in the Government Resolution of the 16th October last, that is, a general settlement of differences between the tribes themselves and between them and the Khan, and further in extension of those orders, if the Khan should show a proper spirit, the re-establishment of friendly relations between him and the British Government, &c."

12. Such being the desires and orders of the British Government, and being aware from his Highness himself that the former conditions imposed on the Brahooee Sirdars as a necessary preliminary to a reconciliation between them and his Highness had proved in practice to be an impossibility, it was resolved by the Khan and his Sirdars that the mediation entered on at Mustung should have for its basis conditions that all could fulfil. One of these conditions, as already stated, was that the Khan was to relinquish all claims for compensation for loss of property and loss to caravans, and that the Sirdars should make no claims to blood-money or any loss their property had suffered from the Khan's army.

13. It was clearly understood by the Khan from the very first that in pressing on the Government of India his demand that they should take on themselves the compensating of the merchants for the loss of their property, that the ground on which I should urge it was simply that of consideration for the empty state of his treasury, and because the money formerly granted him was used to compensate the merchants contrary to the decree given in 1872, which obliged the Brahooee Sirdars to pay for the kafilas then plundered. If my report No. 122, dated 14th June 1876, paragraph 8, is referred to, it will be found that the Khan delayed in coming to Mustung in the hopes of getting me to engraft on the new mediation the terms of the former peace, but which I steadily refused to do, knowing well that any such conditions, if imposed on the Brahoee Sirdars as a necessary preliminary to reconciliation between them and the Khelat Government, could never be fulfilled. His Highness therefore in founding his present claims to compensation on the basis of the former peace does so knowing that from the first I, before undertaking the late mediation, had rejected them. There are, however, obvious reasons why the Khan should in the present state of his affairs press these on the British Government, and these will doubtless receive the consideration they are entitled to at its hands.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 30th September 1876.

1. 23rd September.—Sirdar Abdul Karim Mirwani wrote to say that directly the Sirdars of Kedj and Mekran joined him, they would together attend to the Khan's summons and proceed to Khelat. A report was received from Sirdar Muhammad Khan, the brother of the late Barozai Chief Sher Zaman, to the effect that the Murree headmen were assembled at Kahan, and in consultation had decided to give the "dustar" of the chieftainship to Sirdar Mehrulla Khan, the brother of the late Sirdar. That the late Sirdar before his death gave Rupees 1,000 to his Murree wife and Rupees 1,000 to each of his daughters (he had no son), but to his Afghan wife he only gave Rupees 100. After the Sirdar's death the Murree headmen divided his property as follows:—Two shares were given to the eldest brother Sirdar Mehrulla Khan (one share on account of his succeeding to the Sirdarship) and one share to the younger brother Asad Khan. The headmen intended after a week's time to perform the ceremony of bestowing the "dustar" on Sirdar Mehrulla Khan. They had decided to hold to the agreement made by the late Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan for the protection of Kutchi and two headmen were always to remain on duty at Kott Mundai to prevent raids into the Bolan Pass and Kutchi.

2. 24th September.—With regard to the protection of the kafila route (vide last week's diary) from Ghaza Bund to Shawl Kot, Major Sandeman at the Wakil's request visited his Highness at the Miri to discuss the matter. A long conversation took place on the subject. His Highness was anxious that this part of the route should be included in the Bolan Pass arrangements. Both the Wakil and Major Sandeman pointed out to his Highness that this measure would not be suitable, as from the Ghaza Bund Pass the kafila routes led in various directions to Kurrachee viâ Khelat and Mustung, to the Mulla Pass, as well as to the Bolan Pass. Moreover the orders of the Government which had been put in force only contemplated Major Sandeman's securing the safety of the Bolan Pass. Major Sandeman said he was glad to accompany the Wakil when he proceeded to arrange for the safety of this portion of the road, but could not accept any responsibility in the matter without first referring to Government, and this step appeared unnecessary at present, as there seemed no reason for supposing there was the least difficulty in securing the safety of the kafilas traversing it. Major Sandeman was glad of the opportunity offered of accompanying the Wakil into camp for a few days, as he had been suffering from fever and the medical officer recommended the change.

At this meeting his Highness the Khan issued instructions to the Naibs of Dadar and Shawl Kot to co-operate with Captain Wylie in the event of that officer proceeding to Dadar. A telegram proposing that he should do so for the reasons given therein had been sent to Colonel Munro. On leaving, Major Sandeman told his Highness that for the few days during which he should be absent from Khelat, Captain Wylie would conduct any necessary business that should transpire. It was arranged that Captain Wylie and his Highness should interchange visits of courtesy.

A letter arrived from Sirdar Gohur Khan telling of the Sirdar's return home from visiting Khelat, and that all was well in the Jalawan country, and that his people had all left the hills and taken up their quarters in the town of Zehri, where they were enjoying the blessings of peace.

A translation of the District Superintendent of Police, Kurrachee's diary for weeks ending 13th and 20th August on the subject of Jan Muhammads, and Sahib Khan Choottah (brothers) having settled their affairs was read out to the Khan's Wakil, Nawab Muhammad Khan. He said that although he had heard that the brothers had arranged their affairs he had no faith in the settlement being permanent. That a permanent settlement could not be come to until both brothers were summoned to Khelat.

3. 25th September.—To-day at 4 p.m. Major Sandeman, accompanied by Dr. Duke and the detachment 4th Punjab Cavalry under Captain Shepherd, marched from Khelat for the Ziarat, a distance of eight miles.

4. 26th September.—To-day marched for Bareen Chanaw, distant 18 miles. The country through which we passed is inhabited by the Langhaw Brahooees. Water and grass very plentiful.

5. 27th September.—Arrived at Zard a distance of eight miles. There is a large village near here belonging to Madad Khan, Muhammad-shahi Brahooees.

6. 28th September.—Arrived at Sheereenah, a distance of 18 miles. Here the Naib of Mustung, Faiz Muhammad, came out to meet us and joined the camp.

7. 29th September.—Marched to Kahnak in the Mustung valley, a distance of 12 miles. Received the diary of the news writer stationed at the Murree head-quarters. The only news it contains of importance is the intimation of the Murree Sirdar's death.

8. 30th September.—Alla Dad Khan, Darogah and statistical writer of the Bolan Pass, reports that during the week kafilas numbering in all 254 camels and 9 donkeys had arrived from Candahar and Mustung, and had been escorted through the Pass in safety. Rupees 254–8 had been realised as escort fees and Rupees 792–8 as custom dues. The value of the caravans was said to amount to Rupees 13,933–8, and to have consisted of fruits, wool, and other miscellaneous goods.

Khelat Diary for the week ending 7th October 1876.

1st October.—To-day the Khan's Wakil, Nawab Muhammad Khan, came to an agreement about the protection of the kafila route from the Cabul border to Shaulkot (Quetta). The matter was reported to his Highness the Khan. The kafilas in passing Ghaza Bund enter a valley which has roads leading to Khelat and Shaulkot, and by either of these, as the case may be, caravans proceed to the Bolan or Mulla Passes en route to Sind, or by the Raj route and Lus Beyla to Kurrachee. Sirdar Mehrulla Khan, the Chief of the Murrees, wrote to say that the Murree headmen, Karram Khan Bijarani, Nehal Khan Loharani, Mir Hazar Khan Gazaini, Bakhtiyar Khan, and others had elected him as Sirdar of the tribe, instead of his late brother, Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan, and had placed on his head the dustar of the chieftainship.

2nd October.—The diary of the news-writer stationed at Kahan, the Murree head-quarters, for the month ending 13th September was received to-day; but its contents did not contain news of any importance.

A letter was received from Shahbaz Khan, eldest son of the Boogtee Chief, reporting his entire restoration to health. A reply was sent directing him to attend on the Khan in Kutchi on his Highness's arrival there.

A letter was received from Sirdar Rahman Khan of Noshki, stating that he and his nephew had quarrelled, and that the Khan's Naib's son, Ido, was acting against him on the side of his nephew. The letter was sent to the Wakil with a view to its submission to his Highness for orders.

A letter was received from Ressaldar Itbar Khan Rind intimating that, notwithstanding his Highness had himself made peace between Raza Muhammad's relations and himself, the Wudera of the tribe, Imam Buksh, was interfering in the matter. A reply was sent to the Ressaldar to the effect that as he was at Khelat he ought himself in person to bring any cause for complaint on the subject before the Khan, and ask for orders being issued regarding it.

Major Sandeman wrote a friendly letter to his Highness the Khan, informing him of the state of affairs in the country and of his arrival at Kanak, and that the Naib of Mustung, Faiz Muhammad, had met him at Shirin-ab; also that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed had joined his camp.

3rd October.—To-day information was received from Jacobabad that Colonel Colley, the Military Secretary to his Excellency the Viceroy, and Major Upperton were en route to Khelat with letters for his Highness the Khan and Major Sandeman, and intended coming viâ the Mulla Pass. Major Sandeman at once despatched an express to Jacobabad, asking them to come viâ the Bolan Pass instead of by the Mulla, as doing so would save them at least 60 miles of marching. Ressaldar Muhammad Amir Khan, 4th Punjab Cavalry, was despatched to Dadar to meet these officers and escort them through the Bolan Pass.

4th October.—To-day Sirdar Moolla Mahomed paid his respects to Major Sandeman, and afterwards took his leave of him, as he was about to proceed to Kutchi. A letter was received from his Highness the Khan in reply to the one sent from Kanak. In it his Highness stated that he had received Major Sandeman's letter under acknowledgment with great pleasure; that his Highness had received news from Panjgur, which he had communicated to Captain Wylie. A reply was sent to his Highness telling him of the expected advent of Colonel Colley and Major Upperton. His Highness was also informed that Saheb Khan Choota had received strict orders to come to Khelat, and his Highness was asked to send for Jan Muhammad, with a view to arranging their quarrel on their arrival in Khelat.

5th October.—Marched to Shaulkot, a distance of 12 miles. Atta Muhammad, the Naib of Quetta, joined the camp at Barg. Letters were despatched to the Naibs of Dadar and Bagh by the Wakil, and one to the officer commanding at Haji-ki-Shahr, directing these officers to afford Ressaldar Muhammad Amir Khan every aid in arranging for Colonel Colley's onward journey from Bagh to Major Sandeman's camp. The Guide Ressaldar, at Hajiki-Shahr, was directed to escort Colonel Colley with a party of Guides to Dadar, where he would meet Ressaldar Muhammad Amir Khan. The latter was, however, instructed to proceed as far as Bagh, should the officers referred to not have reached that place by the time the Ressaldar got to Dadar.

6th October.—Letters from Mekran state that Alladad Khan and Mohabat Khan, who were sent to summon the Mekran Chiefs to Khelat, had arrived at Panjgur. Mir Gajan Khan was to leave on the 12th Ramzan. They were about to proceed to Kedj. Mir Dad Khan, Mulla Alladad, Said Khan, Dad Muhammad, Mulla Sharbat, and other Sirdars, also wrote to the same effect. There was some doubt as to the exact time of their leaving for Khelat, as they were uncertain as to the intention of Sirdar Azaad Khan of Kharan, who was threatening to raid Panjgur. In reference to this intention Mir Gajan sent to his Highness an original letter from Sirdar Azaad Khan to the address of Mulla Dad Muhammad Kouda, Muhammad Khan, Alladad, and others inviting them to separate from Mir Gajan and join Mir Isa Khan. He advised them to destroy Mir Gajan and give up his fort. Did they refuse to do this Sirdar Azaad Khan threatened to wage war on them.

7th October.—Alladad Khan, the Darogah of the Bolan Pass, reports that during the week kafilas, numbering in all 163 camels and 274 donkeys, had arrived from Candahar and had passed through the Bolan Pass in safety. Rs. 933–14 were realised as custom dues, and Rs. 376–1 as escort fees. The value of the caravans was estimated at Rs. 50,655–14, and their contents were said to consist of silk, shawls, some gold, and a few turquoises.

Captain Wylie's diary from Khelat, for the week ending 1st October, was received Its contents are as follows:—

"Khelat, Monday, 25th September.—A kafila, consisting chiefly of wool and dried fruits, and numbering 120 camels, arrived this day at Khelat from Candahar en route for Kurrachee.

"2. Major Sandeman, accompanied by Surgeon Duke, and taking with him as escort Captain Shepherd and his squadron of the 4th Punjab Cavalry, started from Khelat on a tour in the district.

"3. Major Sandeman left Captain Wylie on especial duty at Khelat.

"Tuesday, 26th September.—Captain Humfrey, commanding the escort, called on Captain Wylie. He represented that the Government camels of his regiment were geting so weak for want of forage that he considered them unfit for work; and that if the escort were called upon to march, they would in all probability break down at once. He therefore requested that his Highness the Khan might be asked to try and procure him 24 camels to enable him to be in a fit state to march. Captain Scott, commanding detachment 4th Sikh Infantry, also made a like request on the same grounds for 15 camels.

Captain Wylie was written to requesting him to arrange to send for grazing purposes the camels to Zehri. This could easily be arranged in communication with his Highness.—R. G. Sandeman, Major, Deputy Commissioner.

"2. Captain Humfrey further requested that some arrangement might be made with the Khelat bunnias to sell milk in his camp, as, owing to cholera being in the city, he had ordered his men not to enter it.

"3. In the afternoon Captain Wylie visited his Highness the Khan in the Miri. He informed his Highness of Captain Humfrey's and Captain Scott's requests, and orders were at once issued to the Mustaufi to see if they could be complied with. The rest of the conversation between his Highness and Captain Wylie was of a purely unofficial character, and was carried on by his Highness in a very friendly way.

"Wednesday, 27th September.—Captain Humfrey wrote to Captain Wylie for permission to entertain four Brahooee syces in the 3rd Sind Horse. Captain Humfrey's request was forwarded to his Highness the Khan, who requested to see the men personally before giving his leave. Captain Humfrey was written to accordingly.

"2. Two bunnias were sent to Captain Wylie by the Khan who undertook to supply milk to the men of the escort in their camp. They were sent over to Captain Humfrey.

"Thursday, 28th September.—The kafila which arrived at Khelat on the 25th instant marched for Kurrachee by the Raj route, viz., viâ Khozdar and Lus Beyla.

"2. A letter was received from Ex-Wuzeer Atta Mahomed stating that he had started from Murro for Jacobabad in accordance with Major Sandeman's orders issued at the general settlement at Mustung.

"Friday, 29th September.—A letter was received by Captain Wylie from Captain Humfrey, requesting that accredited officials from his Highness the Khan might be sent to the camp of the escort to collect the custom fees* due on goods sold therein, as at present any of the Khan's sepoys and officials walking through the camp claim (when questioned) to be on duty as custom collectors.

* Town tax.

"2. His Highness the Khan paid a visit to Captain Wylie in the evening attended by four of his sons. No subjects of importance were touched on, except that his Highness seemed to be anxious to know whether any orders had been received from the Government of India or not. His Highness was spoken to about Captain Humfrey's request for accredited custom officers being attached to his camp, and he promised to issue orders on the subject.

"Saturday, 30th September.—A letter was received to-day by his Highness the Khan from the Naib of Panjgur, which was sent to Captain Wylie for perusal. Another letter was received in camp from Sowar Alladad, whom Major Sandeman had sent with a Motbir of the Khan's to Kedj Mekran, saying that he (the sowar) had arrived at Panjgur, and would leave on the 20th September for Kedj Mekran. Both letters were forwarded to Major Sandeman.

"2. His Highness the Khan sent two men, one Daud, Kotwal, and the other Muhammad, sepoy of artillery, as his accredited agents for the collection of custom dues in the camp of the escort. They were accordingly forwarded to Captain Humfrey with a letter to that effect.

"3. A kafila arrived at Khelat from Candahar consisting of 143 camels, bearing 47 loads of wool and 96 loads of dried fruit.

"Sunday, 1st October.—A letter was received by Captain Wylie from Major Sandeman enclosing a descriptive roll of four Brahooee syces whom the officer commanding 3rd Sind Horse wished to entertain, with directions to ask the Khan's approval. A copy of the roll was sent to Captain Humfrey, with a request that the men mentioned therein, and also the four syces mentioned in diary for the 27th September, might be sent into Khelat the following morning.

"2. This morning a large parade of the Khan's troops took place close to Captain Wylie's camp.

"3. During the past week the cholera, which has before been reported as being in the city and neighbourhood of Khelat, cannot be said to have decreased. Dropping cases here and there are reported daily, but it does not appear to be in an epidemic form anywhere.

"4. The health of the troops of the escort at and near Khelat is on the whole fairly good.

"5. The Brahooees in some considerable numbers are emigrating to Kutchi, and the country is sufficiently quiet for them to travel in single families, or indeed sometimes as single individuals, and there appears to be no let or hindrance to their proceeding by whichever route they prefer.

"6. Good accounts are daily received in Khelat of the state of the Bolan Pass."

Khelat Diary for the week ending 18th October 1876. (Extract.)

9th October.—Marched from Siriab to the village of Tiri, a distance of 18 miles.

10th October.—Marched to Mustung, a distance of seven miles. En route visited the large village of Farringabad. It is the property of the Khan's sister, Bibi Alla Denee, the wife of Jam Mir Khan of Lus Beyla, and is one of the largest and most flourishing villages situated in the valley of Mustung. A letter was received from Mir Jam Ali of Lus Beyla. Its contents were to the effect that Jam Ali had sent one of his servants, by name Dad Muhammad, to Major Sandeman to inquire about the release of his father Jam Mir Khan; that as Dad Muhammad had returned to Lus Beyla without bringing with him satisfactory news, Jam Ali wrote himself to ask Major Sandeman if he had any good news about his father to give to do him the kindness to write it. In reply Jam Ali Khan was informed that up to date noo rders by the Government had been issued regarding the release of Jam Mir Khan.

A letter was received from Mir Muhammad Khan of Seebee intimating that peace prevailed in the Khan's country, and that the people of Kutchi were busy cultivating their lands, but that the peace of Seebee was still disturbed through the intrigues of his cousin Sarbiland Khan, who aspired to succeed the writer's late brother, Sher Zaman, as Sirdar of the Barozais. The letter also stated that Sirdar Mehrulla Khan in consultation with the Murree headmen had deputed Jalab Khan, Ghazni Murree, with Murree Hazar and Sheran Khan, to Kott Mundai to prevent Murree raids into Kutchi, and that Sirdar Mehrulla Khan was doing his best to keep his tribe in order and hold to the agreement made by his late brother Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan for the protection of Kutchi.

11th October.—To-day Sirdar Rahman Khan Mingul visited Major Sandeman and complained about the conduct of the Naib of Noshki's son Ido, who, he said, was instigating his nephew, Afzul Khan, to create disturbances. In consultation with the Wakil it was decided to send an agent of the Khan's to summon Afzul Khan and Ido to Khelat, and Ressaldar Nawab Khan of the Dera Ghazi Khan Police returned to Noshki with Sirdar Rahman Khan, with a view to obtaining full particulars of all that was going on at Noshki. After doing so he was instructed to proceed direct with Sirdar Rahman Khan to Khelat, and report the whole case to his Highness for orders.

12th October.—To-day Alladad Khan, the Darogah of the Bolan Pass, arrived in camp. His accounts of the cost of erecting covering for the guards of the Pass were examined. The posts were ready for roofing, and a sum of Rupees 815 had been expended up to date.

13th October.—Arrived at Amanulla, a distance of six miles. The place derives its name from a "karez."

Mahomed Amir Khan, Ressaldar, who was sent to arrange for the onward journey of Colonel Colley and Major Upperton to Mustung from Dadar, reported his arrival at Dadar, and that he was about to proceed to Bagh in Kutchi, where he hoped to meet the travellers. It had been arranged that Sirdar Moolla Mahomed and Alla Dina Koord were to bring on Colonel Colley and party from Haji-ki-Shuhr and escort them through the Bolan Pass. The Ressaldar reported that the Sarawan Sirdars had given him every assistance in completing the arrangements for Colonel Colley's journey through the Bolan Pass to Khorassan.

Alladad Khan, Darogah of the Bolan Pass, reports that during the week kafilas numbering in all 308 camels and 15 donkeys had arrived from Candahar and had been escorted through the pass in safety. Rupees 1,336 had been realised as custom dues, and Rupees 301 as escort fees. The value of the caravans was estimated at Rupees 11,633, and their contents were said to have consisted of wool, fruits, and other miscellaneous goods. * * * *

15th October.—Received an express from Captain Wylie reporting that Colonel Colley was coming viâ the Mulla Pass, and was expected to arrive at Khelat that evening. After receipt of this news Major Sandeman next morning rode into Khelat and found that Colonel Colley had arrived at Khelat the previous evening. Visited his Highness the Khan and discussed with him the object of Colonel Colley's visit, as explained by that officer to Major Sandeman.

16th October.—Colonel Colley, accompanied by Majors Sandeman and Upperton and Captain Wylie, paid his Highness the Khan a visit of ceremony.

17th October.—To-day the Khan of Khelat, accompanied by his sons, Mirs Mahmud Khan, Shahnewaz Khan, and Azam Jam, returned Colonel Colley's visit at Major Sandeman's camp.

18th October.—To-day a grand Durbar was held at the Miri, at which all the European and Native officers of the escort were present. The letter of his Excellency the Viceroy to the address of his Highness the Khan was publicly, and with every ceremony, presented to his Highness. On Colonel Colley's producing the letter all in the Durbar rose. It was then handed to Major Sandeman, who made it over to his Highness. A salute of 21 guns was then fired. The Khan received the letter standing and with every respect, and made a " salam " to it. A translation of its contents was then read by Major Upperton. At its conclusion all sat down. A conversation then took place between his Highness the Khan and Colonel Colley on the subject of the former visiting Delhi, and the number of Chiefs who should accompany him to the Imperial Assemblage. Shortly after this Colonel Colley rose, took his leave, and the Durbar was broken up. Major Sandeman remained behind, and discussed with the Khan the terms of the new Treaty to be entered into between the Government of India and his Highness' Government. A few remarks were entered by his Highness on the translation of the draft Treaty, who then affixed his seal to it, and made it over to Major Sandeman, who then took his leave.

The following is a copy of the diary of Captain Wylie for the week ending 8th October 1876 :—

" Monday, 2nd October 1876.—The kafila of 143 camels mentioned in diary for 30th September as having arrived at Khelat left for Kurrachee by the Raj route.

" Tuesday, 3rd October 1876.—A letter was received from the officer commanding the escort stating that the Khan's officials had threatened the Sarawans of those camels which had been hired by the escort in this country that they would either seize their camels for the Khan, or levy a tax of Rupees 5 a head on them."

In the afternoon Captain Wylie visited his Highness the Khan, and in the course of conversation mentioned the above circumstance. The Khan at once promised the camels should not be seized, but that there might be some taxes to be collected from their owners, about which he would inquire and let Captain Wylie know the result.

" The Khan then informed Captain Wylie that the collectors of custom dues, which had by joint agreement been sent to the camp of the escort, had been turned out of it, and not allowed to collect the taxes. As no previous report had been made to Captain Wylie on this subject, he said that he hoped it was some mistake, and that he would make inquiries. The rest of the conversation was on ordinary subjects."

Wednesday, 4th October.—" Captain Wylie wrote to Captain Humfrey about his Highness the Khan's report that his Kotwal was not allowed to levy custom dues in the camp of the Sind portion of the escort. Captain Humfrey in reply requested Captain Wylie to visit his camp the following day and see what mutual arrangements could be made; he at the same time represented that on no former occasion had the escort of the Political Agent at Khelat paid any taxes whatever to the Government of that State."

Thursday, 5th October.—"In the evening Captain Wylie rode over to the camp of the Sind portion of the escort at Kooing, and in consultation with Captain Humfrey it was arranged that, if his Highness the Khan approved, custom fees should in future be levied in the following manner at that camp by his Highness' Kotwal.

"All entrances to the camp, save one, should be closed by sentries, who would prevent all vendors of goods or provisions from entering the camp, and who would direct all such to proceed to a market place, which was formed outside the one entrance left open. All goods should be sold in this market, and not within the lines, and that the Khan's custom officers should live in the market place and collect the regulation taxes. The place fixed upon for the market was good, as it was immediately outside an empty serai, and there was water and shade close by.

"Captain Humfrey reported that a sepoy named Alla Bux of the 30th Bombay Native Infantry had deserted the previous night. Information of this fact was sent immediately to the Khan, with the description of the sepoy, whose home was said to be at Kharan; the last information of the man's whereabouts was that he had during the night visited a woman in Khelat, at whose house the man's brother was staying. This woman gave evidence that they had left early in the morning together, and taken with them a camel, and said they were going towards Dusht-i-Goron. His Highness immediately sent men in pursuit, and wrote to his Naibs of Punjgur and Noshki, ordering them to endeavour to arrest the deserter, but up to the end of this week nothing has been heard of him.

"A kafila arrived from Candahar, consisting of 51 camels laden with dried fruits, proceeding to Kurrachee."

Friday, 6th October.—"A letter was received by Captain Wylie in the morning from Major Sandeman, enclosing one from Colonel Nuttall, Commandant at Jacobabad, informing him that the Military Secretary to the Viceroy, accompanied by Major Upperton, was about to visit Khelat with despatches, and that they would probably travel by the Mulla Pass route. He was further requested to make arrangements with the officer commanding the escort to lay post horses on 120 miles along the road from Khelat, and to send a suitable party to escort these officers on the road, Captain Wylie accordingly rode over to see Captain Humfrey on the subject, who, though he had received no orders, agreed to send out three sets of post horses, with escorts of seven Sind horsemen at each halting place for the three stages farthest from Khelat.

"His Highness the Khan of Khelat also received information through Major Sandeman that the Military Secretary was coming to Khelat with letters for both the Khan and Major Sandeman.

"In the afternoon his Highness paid a visit to Captain Wylie, when that officer took the opportunity of explaining to him all the arrangements which he, in concert with the officer commanding the escort, had made for the collection of custom dues in the camp. To these arrangements the Khan gave his cordial assent, and it was agreed that Captain Wylie should take the Kotwal of Khelat and the accredited agent for taxes to Captain Humfrey the following morning, and point out all the arrangements on the spot."

Saturday, 7th October.—"Captain Wylie, as had been arranged on the previous day, took the officials then named to the camp of the Sind portion of the escort, and with Captain Humfrey pointed out to them the market place and all the arrangements which had been made to prevent goods being sold in the lines. To these the Kotwal assented, and the Customs Agent was placed in the market to collect fees.

"A kafila arrived from Candahar, consisting of 132 camels laden with wool for Kurrachee.

"Saheb Khan Choota arrived at Khelat in obedience to an order issued by Major Sandeman. In reply to a question if the Raj route was open and peaceful, he replied that it was perfectly so, and that he had passed several kafilas proceeding to Kurrachee along it, and numbers of private travellers.

"His Highness the Khan was requested to supply Sahib Khan with a tent during his stay here, to which he agreed, and sent one over."

Sunday, 8th October.—"During the night a dâk was received from Major Sandeman; it contained a letter from his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and Major Sandeman directed Captain Wylie to present it in Durbar with all honour, and to report having done so. Captain Wylie accordingly sent word to his Highness of the honour done him by the Lieutenant-Governor, and to request that if convenient he might present the letter in Durbar that afternoon; to this the Khan gave a ready assent.

"Orders were to-day received by the officer commanding the escort to lay outpost horses for the Military Secretary and Major Upperton.

"Captain Humfrey engaged a kossid through Captain Wylie, who was sent over the hills to Jacobabad with the answer that the orders for post horses and escorts were being complied with.

"In the afternoon Captain Wylie visited his Highness the Khan, and in his Durbar, with due ceremony, presented him with the letter from his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, which the Khan opened and read.

"His Highness' mind was, however, much taken up with the news of the approach of the Military Secretary to the Viceroy, fresh information about which he had just received in a dâk from some of his people at Jacobabad, who stated that Colonel Colley was to leave Jacobabad that very day for Khelat. His Highness' conversation was full of speculations as to why that officer was being sent, and he appeared very doubtful as to whether it would be for his advantage or not. I endeavoured to calm him, but without much success. However, when I managed to change the conversation into the state of the Mulla road, and requested some help in the way of swift camels for Colonel Colley's kit, he immediately agreed, and would not let me go till I had heard him give his different officers detailed instructions as to what was to be done for Colonel Colley and Major Upperton at all the stages along the road, and he added that if he had had longer notice he would have arranged everything for them from Gundava up to Khelat. As it was, he sent off six riding camels at once to Pir Lakha for their clothes, &c.

"A kafila of 19 camels arrived from Candahar laden with fruit for Kurrachee. The kafilas mentioned in diaries of the 5th and 8th instant marched to-day for Kurrachee by the Raj route viâ Lus Beyla. This seems at present to be the route preferred, as owing to the floods in Upper Sind kafilas find it difficult to reach Shikarpur.

"In concluding this diary for the week I may mention that cholera is rapidly disappearing in the city and neighbourhood of Khelat. There have been no fresh cases reported this week, though several people have died from the after effect of attacks previous to this week.

"The Brahooee are moving towards Kutchi in large numbers.

"The weather is fine, with frosty nights. Forage is getting extremely scarce both for horses and camels.

"Reports from the country round state everything to be quiet and peaceful, with all roads open to traffic.

"The minds of the Khan and his officials appear to be very considerably disturbed by the news that the Viceroy is sending his Military Secretary to Khelat."

Khelat Diary for the week ending 27th October 1876.

19th October.—Colonel Colley, accompanied by Majors Sandeman and Upperton, and Doctor Duke, left Khelat for Mungocher. A letter was received from Mir Jam Ali, the contents of which were to the effect that he was not, as had been stated, realising more than the usual custom dues on caravans, and that he would be careful that nothing of the kind was done by the Lus Beyla officials.

The diary, with dates up to 1st October, of the news-writer stationed at Kahan, the Murree head-quarters, was received. The Murree headmen who had assembled to elect the Sirdar of the tribe had returned to their homes. Some men of the Lugari tribe had arrived at Kahan with a view to the recovery of certain stolen cattle, and the Sirdar had expressed his willingness to aid in their restoration. Thieving in Kutchi by Murrees was still going on, but the Murree Sirdar had deputed his cousins, Mir Hazar and Jallab Khan, with 21 sowars to be on the outlook to prevent it.

A letter from the Mazari Chief, Imam Buksh Khan, reports disputes having broken out between the Gurchani tribe and the Murrees likely to end in bloodshed. Mr. Gladstone was written to on the subject.

20th October.—Colonel Colley, C.B., and party arrived at Mustung, a distance of 30 miles.

21st October.—Marched for Quetta.

22nd October.—Halted at Quetta and selected a site where the detachment 4th Sikh Infantry on their arrival were to hut themselves.

Advanced to Captain Scott Rupees 1,000 for the purpose.

The diary of the news-writer stationed at Kahan for the week ending 7th October was received. It contains the following news :—

1st.—That Turk Ali Murree had carried off three camels from British territory. The Murree Sirdar on hearing this, and where the animals were, seized them and returned them to their owners.

2nd.—The cattle and sheep carried off by Sher Dil Muzerani from Kechi Muzerani, numbering 320, had been restored to the latter. Three mares and 14 cows had been restored to the Khetrans which had been plundered by Murrees.

3rd.—That the Mazari Chief had sent Gujandar Khan, Balachani, to Kahan to recover certain cattle belonging to Sohna Khosa. That Sirdar Mehrulla Khan had sent his brother Asad Khan to recover the cattle, who had seized 25 cows, the property of Sohna Khan, and restored them to him.

23rd October.—Colonel Colley, C.B., and Majors Sandeman and Upperton, and Doctor Duke left Quetta for Siri Bolan, where they arrived in the afternoon. The tribal escort stationed here, with Sirdar, Alla Dina at their head, and Alladad Darogah received the officers on arrival. The post lately erected here was inspected. Here the Khan's Wakil, Nawab Muhammad Khan, joined the camp. Rain fell during the night. Sirdar Mehrulla Khan, Murree, reports that a Gurchani carried off a woman and received an asylum with the Murrees. Her relations assembled and caught her in the village of Dad Ali, Mamdani Murree, and there killed her. Dad Ali at once retaliated and killed two Gurchanis. On the 12th instant the Durkani-Gurchanis raided the Murrees and killed the brother of Sher Dil, Muzerani Murree, and carried off his arms. The Murree Sirdar requested the interference of the British officers to prevent further bloodshed. Mr. Gladstone was written to on the subject.

24th October.—Colonel Colley, C.B., and party arrived at the village of Kirta, in the Bolan Pass. They were met at Bibi Nani by the headmen Nubbee Buksh and Til Khan. The lands of Kirta are being brought slowly under cultivation. The headmen reported that 20 ploughs are at work. A letter was received from the Murree Sirdar Mehrulla Khan acknowledging receipt of a letter from Major Sandeman. The letter was couched in most submissive terms, asked Major Sandeman not to forget that the writer was his obedient servant, and that he had deputed Mir Hazar and 20 sowars to prevent Murrees raiding in Kutchi or the Bolan Pass.

25th October.—The diary of the news-writer stationed at Kahan for the week ending 14th October was received. The writer stated that Dewa Khan Powadee Murree had collected 100 men and raided the Luni Pathans, killing one man and capturing 60 cows and seven mares. The Durkani-Gurchanis had killed five Murrees on their way to British territory to purchase supplies. Colonel Colley, C.B., and party arrived at Dadar, and were met just before leaving the Bolan Pass by Sirdar Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan and a party of Brahooee, and by Syud Aurang Shah of Dadar and other Dadar notables.

26th October.—Colonel Colley, C.B., and Major Sandeman en route to Bagh visited Mittree, and when there selected a site for the detachments of 3rd Sind Horse and 4th Punjab Cavalry to encamp on, belonging to Major Sandeman's escort on their arrival at Mittree.

Arrived at Bagh in the afternoon and found Messrs. Furnivale and Pitman had just arrived there.

27th October.—Colonel Colley, C.B., and Major Upperton left in the morning for Jacobabad. Major Sandeman halted and decided to return to Mittree with Messrs. Furnivale and Pitman to arrange for the onward journey of these officers through the Bolan Pass to Khorassan. It was arranged that Doctor Duke should accompany them and give them en route the benefit of his local knowledge.

Alla Dad Khan, the Darogah of the Bolan Pass, reports that during the week caravans numbering in all 969 camels and 182 donkeys passed through the Bolan Pass. Rupees 4,130-7-6 were realised as custom dues, and Rupees 1,408 as escort fees. The value of the caravans was stated to amount to Rupees 1,21,070, and that their contents consisted of wool, fruits, carpets, and other goods.

Captain Wylie's diary for the week ending 15th October is as follows:—

Monday, 9th October 1876.—" Sirdar Sahib Khan, Choota (who came to Khelat by order of Major Sandeman, and arrived on the 7th instant), called on Captain Wylie, and was told that he must wait to have his affairs inquired into till Major Sandeman's return. He then proceeded to the Miri to pay his respects to his Highness the Khan. In Captain Wylie's presence Sahib Khan was inclined to be rude and independent.

Tuesday, 10th October.—" Captain Wylie visited his Highness the Khan in the afternoon. His Highness had just received a letter from Pir Jan from Jacobadad, telling him that he was making arrangements through Kutchi for the journey of the Military Secretary to the Viceroy. All the conversation turned on this subject, the Khan speculating much as to what could be bringing Colonel Colley into his country.

" Fifty-one camels laden with wool arrived from Candahar and proceeded next day to Kurrachee viâ the Raj route.

Wednesday, 11th October.—" A letter was received from Sirdar Gohur Khan of Zehri in reply to one written by Captain Wylie, inquiring about the capabilities of the Zehri Valley for grazing the camp camels. The Sirdars stated that the grazing was excellent, and that even if 200 or 300 head of camels were sent he would be responsible for their safety, and give their drivers his aid and protection.

Thursday, 12th October.—" Sirdar Sahib Khan Choota again called on Captain Wylie and apologized for his conduct on a former visit. Captain Scott, commanding detachment 4th Sikhs, reported officially to Captain Wylie, and Captain Humfrey, commanding escort, spoke to that officer on the subject of an order the Khan had just issued, to the effect that no lucern grass or bhoosa should in future be sold to any one, as all was required now by the Khan himself for the winter consumption of his horses and cattle. Captain Wylie wrote to his Highness on the subject.

Friday, 13th October.—" His Highness the Khan paid Captain Wylie a visit, and entered at once into the subject of the grass referred to in yesterday's diary. He said that at this season of the year he always claimed the balance left of the lucern grass as his property; but that he had placed no embargo upon bhoosa.

" It was then represented to him that many sowars had purchased the lucern crops of fields till the end of the season, and that his order told hardly on these men, who, in making this bargain, had understood there was nothing to debar them from using the fields as long as they remained in Khelat. The Khan, on this, promised that all such fields should be left to the purchasers as long as they remained here, and that he would not take the produce thereof. Information of the Khan's ruling was given to Captains Humfrey and Scott.

Saturday, 14th October.—" Information was received in the morning from Major Sandeman that Colonel Colley, Military Secretary to the Viceroy, might be expected to arrive at Khelat that day by the Mulla road. Captain Wylie sent this news on to his Highness the Khan, who directed his eldest son, Mir Muhammad Khan, and a party of cavalry to accompany Captain Wylie on the road out to meet Colonel Colley, who was received in due form at about eight miles from Khelat. Both parties dismounted and shook hands on meeting, and then proceeded towards camp. Colonel Colley was received with a salute of 11 guns from the Miri on arrival outside Khelat.

" Two hundred and fifty camels laden with wool, " zeera," and fruits, arrived from Candahar, and left next day for Kurrachee viâ the Raj route.

" Khodadad Raisani also started by the same route with 14 horses for sale in India.

Sunday, 15th October.—" Major Sandeman arrived in Khelat about 9 a.m. 130 camels laden with wool and fruits arrived from Candahar en route for Kurrachee."

Khelat Diary for the week ending 5th November 1876. (Extract.)

28th October.—Naib Pir Jan reported that during the week caravans numbering 500 camels and donkeys had arrived at Jacobabad from Khorassan. They brought manjeeth in large quantities, dried fruits and other miscellaneous goods.

2. 29th October.—Major Sandeman and Messrs. Furnivale and Pitman left Bagh for Haji-ki-Shuhr.

3. 30th October.—Marched to Mittree, the head-quarters of the Sarawan Brahooee. The town is situated on the Nari River, and used to be a large and flourishing place until desolated by civil war. It was burnt by the Khan's troops some years ago. The remains of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed's house are still conspicuous. At one time it must have been a large and commodious building. There is plenty of grass and wood to be got here. Here the main portion of the escort are to be quartered during the cold weather.

Instructions were issued to Ressaldar Mal Guzar Khan to the effect that the Haji-ki-Shuhr Guide Post was now done away with, it being no longer necessary on account of a large portion of the escort being about to be stationed at Mitree. That the guides lately stationed there would be used to keep open the communications with Quetta. Detailed orders regarding this arrangement were issued to the Ressaldar.

A letter was received from Jam Ali of Lus Beyla stating that the Jamotes had plundered the cattle of the Doda tribe at the instigation of Jan Muhammad Choota. The Jam requested that his Highness the Khan should be asked to punish Jan Muhammad for his evil doings, and obtain from him the return of the plundered Doda cattle. A copy of this letter was made over to the Wakil Nawab Muhammad Khan, with the request that he would ask the Khan to do what was right in the matter, and to send for Jan Muhammad.

4. 31st October.—To-day Messrs. Furnivale and Pitman, accompanied by Doctor Duke, left Mittree for Khelat, and were to travel by the Bolan Pass, visiting Quetta en route. Sirdar Alla Dina was directed to arrange for an escort of Brahooee to accompany these officers under command of two of his sons.

A letter was despatched to Sirdar Iman Buksh Khan, Mazari, asking him to join Major Sandeman without delay, with a view to aiding in the settlement of the Murree quarrel with the Khelat Government. Letters were also sent to the Murree Chiefs asking them to join Major Sandeman without delay. The Commissioner, Colonel Munro, was informed by telegram of these arrangements.

5. 1st November.—To-day the detachments 3rd Sind Horse and 4th Punjab Cavalry under the command of Captain Reynolds marched into Mittree.

6. 5th November.—A letter was received from his Highness the Khan to the address of Sirdar Mehrulla Khan, Chief of the Murree clan, summoning him and his Chiefs to meet his Highness at Gundava. The letter was at once sent by an express messenger to Kahan, the Murree head-quarters.

The Commissioner, Colonel Munro, sent for perusal the diary of the District Superintendent, Police, Kurrachee, for the week ending 17th September, in which it is stated that Major Sandeman presented Mirs Jam Ali Khan, Gohur Khan, and Ibrahim Khan with Rupees 500 each, and directed them, three months after date, to appear at Jacobabad to meet his Excellency the Viceroy. The report is untrue. Nothing of the kind ever took place. The other statements in the diary as to what occurred at Mustung are also very inaccurate.

The following diary for the week ending 1st November 1876 has been received from Captain Wylie from Khelat:—

"Thursday, 19th October 1876.—Colonel Colley, Military Secretary to the Viceroy; Major Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty; Major Upperton and Surgeon Duke, left Khelat in the afternoon en route for Quetta and Dadar. Orders were issued for the distribution of the escort as under:—

"Detachment, 4th Punjab Cavalry,	Dadar.
Ditto, 3rd Sind Horse,
"Detachment, 4th Sikh Infantry,	Quetta.
Ditto, No. 2 Mountain Battery,	To form escort to Captain Wylie.
Ditto, Jacob's Rifles,

"Captain Wylie was ordered by Major Sandeman to remain at Khelat in political charge, and when his Highness the Khan was ready to march, to accompany him to to Gundava by the Mulla Pass.

"Friday, 20th October.—Sirdar Sahib Khan Choota having obtained leave from Major Sandeman, marched for Gundava. Gajihan, Naib of Punjgur, with several leading men of that district and about sixty followers arrived to see his Highness the Khan and Major Sandeman. It was arranged that his Highness should take these men down to Gundava with him when he marched.

"Saturday, 1st October.—His Highness the Khan advanced the treasure chest of the Mission Rupees 5,000, to be repaid at Jacobabad. This money was required by the detachment, 4th Sikh Infantry, both on account of pay and as an advance to enable them to hut themselves at Quetta.

"The Khan called upon Captain Wylie in the afternoon, and had a long talk about the journey to Delhi and the Durbar which was to take place there. He seemed to take a keen interest in everything connected with it, and to be looking forward very much to going there.

"Sunday, 22nd October.—The 3rd Sind Horse, under command of Captain W. Reynolds, marched for Mungocher en route for Dadar, with the exception of a detachment which had not rejoined from Colonel Colley's dâk.

"Monday, 23rd October.—The detachment, 4th Sikh Infantry, under Captain Scott, marched for Gurock en route for Quetta. The detachment, 3rd Sind Horse, from Colonel Colley's dâk, under command of Lieutenant Hogg, marched into camp.

"Tuesday, 24th October.—Captain Wylie paid a visit to his Highness the Khan. The conversation, as on the previous day, turned principally on the approaching grand Durbar at Delhi. It was arranged definitely that his Highness should march from Khelat on the 3rd November, and that Captain Wylie should precede him with the guns and detachment of Jacob's Rifles on the 1st, and that both parties should make a day's halt at Sohrab, Nurr, and Paneewant, to rest their camels on the road down. Captain Wylie was informed that the Naib of Punjgar had not been able to pay his respects to either him or the Khan since his arrival in Khelat, owing to illness.

"Sirdar Hubbeeb Khan, Shawani, of Skulko, paid Captain Wylie a visit, and pressed that officer to ride over and see his town and valley. This is mentioned merely as one of many little instances which are almost daily occurring, and which tend to show on what thoroughly friendly terms the people of the country and their Sirdars are with the British officers employed up here.

"Wednesday, 25th October.—The detachment, 3rd Sind Horse, under Lieutenant Hogg, marched viâ the Robdar Pass to rejoin their regimental head-quarters at Dadar.

"As a summary of the week it might be added that everything has been strictly quiet. The greater portion of the Brahooees have left the country for Kutchi. Reports from all parts state the roads to be quite open and safe for even single travellers.

"Thursday, 26th October.—Captain Wylie, accompanied by Haytoo Ram, the Superintendent of Major Sandeman's Office, visited the valley and village of Skulko, inhabited by Shawani Brahooees. It is situated about eight miles north-east of Khelat. It is watered by a spring rising at the base of the Great Harbui Mountains, which form the eastern boundary of the village. The whole ground, being on a considerable slope to the westward, it is, for purposes of cultivation, terraced, and the whole place appeared cleaner and kept in better order than any spot the writer has seen in Beloochistan. The Sirdar Hubbeeb Khan was most civil, as indeed were all the inhabitants, and they seemed greatly pleased at a 'Sahib' paying their town a visit. Like all Belooch towns, it was half empty, and partly in ruins, proving that both the population and the desire for peaceful occupations have decreased of late years, probably on account of the constant wars from which the country has suffered. Every man feeling that whatever he built might not be his own in six months' time. The people all expressed pleasure at the idea of a British force being permanently stationed up here.

" Friday, 27th October.—His Highness the Khan called according to custom. He showed a letter to Captain Wylie which he had received from Sirdar Mirulla Khan, Tomandar of the Murrees, in answer to one he had written condoling with the Sirdar on the death of his brother, Ghuzzun Khan, the late Chief. Mirulla stated that when the Khan came down to Kutchi he would come and pay his respects to him there. The Khan showed Captain Wylie a reply he had written to this letter, in which he informed Mirulla Khan that he would be in Kutchi about the 20th November, and summoned him to meet him there.

" During this interview his Highness was attended by Ghajian, Naib of Punjgur, a nice-looking, gentlemanly man of about 35 years of age. In reply to a query as to whether the Kedj people were coming in or not, he said that up to the present there was no certain information about them.

" Saturday, 28th October.—The Khan sent to inform Captain Wylie that as he wished to see Khozdar, he proposed proceeding to Gundava viâ that place instead of by the direct Mulla route. As this would only lengthen the journey by two days, Captain Wylie said he had no objection to the proposed change.

" The Commandant of the Khan's troops, Mosun, who has been on (so called) leave at his home, returned last evening from Peshin to Khelat, on a distinct promise that he should not be asked to accompany the Khan down to Kutchi, Jacobabad, &c. This man, I believe, to be one of three whose influence is being exerted to prevent a settlement of the Khan's difficulties and of a reign of peace and order being established in the Khelat State. The other two I have good cause for believing are the Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad and the Khan's sister, the Bibi Aladini, wife of the Jam of Lus Beyla. These three people are trying to influence the Khan, for their own ends, against the British Government.

" Their reasons for wishing the country to remain in a disturbed state are, I believe, as under :—

" At the time of the murder of the late Sirdar Noordeen Mingul, who was known to be in league with the then Wuzeer Atta Mahomed, the Commandant Mosun and his regiment were employed to attack Atta Mahomed's house. The plunder obtained there was believed to be considerable, and was retained by Mosun. The Khan was endeavouring to get this plunder back from Mosun when Major Sandeman's mission entered Khelat territory for the second time. The Khan, therefore, thought it advisable for the present to abstain from pressing Mosun for the late Wuzeer's wealth. Mosun, about last August, on the Khan's return to Khelat from Mustung, took three months' leave, and went to his home in Peshin, taking with him the plunder alluded to, and it was generally understood that he would not return to Khelat again, but it appears the Khan has induced him to do so by a promise that on the Khan's departure to meet the Viceroy at Jacobabad, he (Mosun) should be left in command at Khelat.

" Of course it will be seen that if a peace is really established between the Khan and his Sirdars and people, the Khan will naturally have the time and opportunity to inquire what Mosun has done with Atta Mahomed's wealth, and to require him to pay it into the State treasury, and also all chance of Mosun's obtaining money in future by looting the people would be at an end. A further reason for his wishing for no settlement is that the former Commandant of the army, by name Shukur Khan, is in confinement in British territory; he would probably be released, and might again obtain the Commandantship.

" Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad's reasons for wishing the country to remain in a state of anarchy are much the same. The former Mustaufi is in confinement in British India, and if released would probably obtain his old office. Fakir Muhammad's father, moreover, is Naib of Bagh, and is very fearful of the Khan's taking up his accounts. This the Khan cannot very well do as long as the country is so disturbed as to prevent his summoning the Naib to his presence." The Bibi Alladini's reasons are somewhat different. She fears the release of her husband, the Jam of Lus Beyla, as in that case she may have to rejoin her husband, and to this arrangement she appears to have a very decided objection.

"It will be seen from what I have said what a difficult position the Khan himself is in, surrounded by people ready to dissuade him from accepting the terms of the British Government, or indeed from making any arrangements which may lead to the peace and better government of his country.

"Monday, 30th October.—Captain Wylie was informed in the morning that his Highness the Khan had ordered the Commandant Mosun to accompany him to Kutchi, &c.; that Mosun was very angry at the Khan's breaking his promise to him, but there was no way of escape for him.

"This will remove from Khelat a man who might do much damage in the country during the absence from it of the Khan and Major Sandeman. Captain Wylie was further informed that a betrothal had been arranged by the Khan between his two little boys, Mir Shahniwaz Khan and Mir Bahram Khan, and two young daughters of his Senior Commandant, Fakir Muhammad. This Fakir Muhammad is a good man, a Bonairwal, and, it is believed, loyally disposed towards the British Government.

"Tuesday, 31st October.—Captain Wylie called on his Highness the Khan. The latter was in very good humour, and rather twitted Mosun, who was present, at having to go to Delhi, telling him how much he would see and learn. * * *

"The Khan seemed thoroughly happy at the coming move, and at all he was to see at Jacobabad and Delhi.

"It was arranged that as the Khan was to have a very large camp going down the Mulla and 3,000 followers (much of the baggage of which camp was directed to precede him by one day) that Captain Wylie and the detachment of artillery and Jacob's Rifles should march two days ahead of him.

"Wednesday, 1st November.—The detachments No. 2 Mountain Battery and Jacob's Rifles, under command of Major Humfrey, marched to Rodinjo en route for Gundava viâ the Mulla Pass. Captain Wylie accompanied them.

"A list of the kafilas recently passed through Khelat is appended.

(Signed) R. SANDEMAN, Major,
Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

No. 265, dated Camp Mittree, 7th November 1876.

Endorsed by Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

Submitted to Colonel A. A. Munro, Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

No. 148.

No. 360, dated Dera Ismail Khan, 20th November 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division (on special duty), to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department.

I have the honour to enclose, for information, copies of orders issued by Major Sandeman, in connexion with the distribution of the troops composing his escort to Khelat, rendered necessary in furtherance of the arrangements for maintaining communication through the Bolan Pass, recently made by Major Sandeman, in personal communication with Colonel Colley, C.B., Military Secretary to the Viceroy and Governor-General.

2. Major Sandeman's letter, No. 260, of the 2nd instant, explains the circumstances under which the instructions were issued, and that letter is also forwarded, together with a copy of the directions given to Captain Scott, of the 4th Sikh Infantry Regiment, detached to Shawl Kot or Quetta, as received under Major Sandeman's endorsement, No. 266, of the 8th instant.

Enclosure 1 in No. 148.

No. 260, dated Camp Mittree, 2nd November 1876.

From Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Officiating Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

I have the honour to forward, for your information, copies of the orders issued by me to the officer commanding my escort for the march of the troops consequent on the departure of his Highness the Khan of Khelat for Gundava, preparatory to proceeding to Jacobabad to meet his Excellency the Viceroy.

2. These orders for the march of the escort were issued in concert and communication with Colonel Colley, C.B., Military Secretary to his Excellency the Viceroy, during his recent visit to Khelat. With his approval I advanced to Captain Scott, commanding at Quetta, Rs. 1,400, with which to hut his men as speedily as possible before the severe cold of the winter sets in.

3. I also submit for your information copy of the written instructions given to Captains Scott and Reynolds, commanding respectively at Quetta and Mittree.

Until Captain Wylie's arrival here I have sent for Mr. Bruce, who will for the present be in political charge of the Bolan Pass arrangements.

A copy of the orders issued and arrangements made to keep open the communications between Quetta and Mittree are also submitted. These arrangements will be under Ressaldar Mal Guzar Khan, who will employ the 150 Belooch Guides on the duty supplied to me in April last, when setting out on this mission. The duty of keeping open the communication is a very important one, and I believe it will be well performed by these Guides, who are in every way suited for that sort of work.

P.S.—The copy of the instructions referred to in the commencement of paragraph 3 will be forwarded hereafter, as they have been left at Khelat.

Enclosure 2 in No. 148.

No. 259, dated 1st November 1876.

From Major Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Major Humfrey, Commanding Escort.

In continuation of this Office No. 241, dated 16th ultimo, on the subject of the march of the escort consequent upon the departure of his Highness the Khan from Khelat, I have the honour to request that on your arrival at Gundava with the portion of the escort under your immediate command, that you will march with it for Mittree, where the main portion of the escort, as per margin, will for the present encamp.

Detachment, 3rd Sind Horse.
Detachment, 30th Native Infantry.
2 mountain guns.

2. On the arrival of the Khan at Gundava it is my intention myself to relieve Captain Wylie, now in personal attendance on his Highness. I have requested Captain Reynolds, in command of the cavalry, and who is to arrive here to-morrow, to place on duty with me the detachment, 4th Punjab Cavalry under Captain Shepherd, and this portion of the escort will take the duty of the troops under your immediate command on your marching for Mittree.

Enclosure 3 in No. 148.

Dated 29th October 1876.

From Major R. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Ressaldar Ma Guzar, Commanding the Belooch Guides at Haji ki Shahr.

The Haji post is to be done away with, as the cavalry is to be permanently stationed at Mittree. You will march at once for Quetta, placing the men under you at convenient distances along the route between the village of Mittree and Quetta. There ought not to be less than five sowars in each chowki to keep open the communications with Captain Scott at Quetta. The following chowkis you are to establish :—

5 sowars at Mittree.
5 ,, at Dadar.
5 ,, at Koondlanis.
5 ,, at Bibi Nani.
10 ,, at the chowki of Abgum, called the Chowni.

Captain Scott has Jemadar Denar Khan with 10 sowars at Quetta, who will bring his communications to the first Bolan Pass chowki. I have placed 10 sowars at the top of the Bolan Pass, as the distance to Quetta is great, but on seeing Captain Scott you might ask him to place five of his men at Siriah.

I put you in charge of the communications, as I feel certain you will perform the duty well. All your men have to do is to carry the dâk or topal. They have nothing to do with the protection of the Bolan Pass, with which you will not interfere. You might establish your own head-quarters at Dadar, and go backwards and forwards to see that your men are on the alert. You will use the Jemadars under you on this duty. Directly the sowars, now absent in Jacobabad, join you, the line of posts is to be continued from Mittree to Jacobabad, and also to wherever my camp may be. Give the matter your serious attention and carry out the duty well. A copy of this order will be sent to Mr. Bruce and Captain Scott. Mr. Bruce will be asked to send you the absent men at once.

Enclosure 4 in No. 148.

Instructions issued to Captain Scott for guidance in accordance with the provisions of this Office Letter No. 241, dated 16th October 1876, to the Officer Commanding Escort, paragraph 1.

Captain Scott is clearly to understand that he is on escort duty. That in no way is he to interfere with the Khan's Naib of Shawl Kot. Should he have any complaints at any time to bring against the Khan's officials, they must be made to the Assistant Political Officer in charge of the Bolan Pass.

A suitable site will be pointed out to him for lines for his detachment, on which he will hut his men as speedily as possible. He will do so in such a way as to permit of an increase to the lines of the escort being made at any time.

Major Sandeman will advance to Captain Scott from time to time from his treasure chest whatever funds he may require for this necessary work. Captain Scott will give receipts for whatever sum he receives, and will furnish monthly accounts of the work done.

His Highness the Khan has issued the enclosed orders to the Naib of Shawl Kot to render Captain Scott every assistance in the work of erecting huts for the escort.

It is to be understood that the Shawl Kot escort is on duty there in attendance on Assistant Political Agent in charge of the Bolan Pass. The Bolan Pass Darogah, Alladad Khan, has been directed to report himself to Captain Scott. He will be under that officer's order until the arrival of the Assistant Political Agent. The officer commanding Guides at Haji ki Shahr will detach 10 Guide Sowars to be under Captain Scott's orders. He will send a post twice a week by them to the nearest Bolan Pass chowki. It will be forwarded by the officer on duty there to Dadar, and thence to Jacobabad.

Captain Scott should march, if possible, on Monday next, taking the Sheereenab route.

No. 149.

15th November.—A letter was received from Mir Jam Ali Khan of Lus Beyla stating hat he was to leave his country for Gundava on the 9th of November.

2. 16th November.—Arrived at Gundava. Received a letter from Sirdar Gohur Khan, Zehri, stating that he would join Mirs Jam Ali and Ibrahim Khan and the Jalawan Sirdars, and, together with them, would proceed to Gundava. Major Sandeman agreed to this arrangement, and wrote and told Sirdar Gohur Khan to do as he proposed.

3. 17th November.—Captain Wylie and Mr. Furnivall arrived at Gundava and joined Major Sandeman's camp.

4. 18th November.—Colonel Nuttall, Commandant-in-Chief, Sind Frontier Force, arrived in camp on a visit to Major Sandeman.

5. 21st November.—His Highness the Khan to-day arrived at Gundava. His Highness was met about three miles from the palace by Major Sandeman, Captains Wylie and Shepherd, and a detachment of the 4th Punjab Cavalry. Sirdars Moolla Mahomed of Sarawan, Rahman Khan of Nushki, and Sirdar Kaisar Khan, Magussie, also accompanied Major Sandeman to meet his Highness and escort him to the palace. On the way, about half a mile from Gundava, the infantry of the Khelat army, to the number of about 1,000 men, were drawn up and saluted his Highness as he passed. The guns fired several salutes.

In the afternoon Major Sandeman proceeded to the palace, and in public Durbar presented his Highness the Khan with his Excellency the Viceroy's letter inviting his Highness to attend the Delhi Assemblage. The Khan received the letter standing and with marked respect. The contents were read out to his Highness, who expressed great pleasure at the kind and cordial terms in which the invitation was couched, and said he not only would gladly go to Delhi, but wherever his Excellency the Viceroy desired his presence. His Highness there and then directed a suitable reply to be written accepting the invitation, and the Durbar broke up.

The Darogah of the Bolan Pass reports that during the week a caravan (donkey) numbering 93 donkeys passed through the Bolan. Its contents were said to consist of poshteens and fruits, and to have valued Rupees 2,946. Rupees 88–14 were realized as custom dues, and Rupees 33–3 as escort fees.

6. 22nd November.—A Committee assembled in camp, consisting of Wakil Nawab Muhammad Khan, Naib Abdul Aziz of Bagh, Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad, and Lalla Hittu Ram to draw up a paper for the guidance of troops when on the march in Khelat territory. The paper would show the stages troops should halt at, the aid in supplies, &c. the Naibs could give, and the procedure necessary before these could be obtained. When ready a copy will be sent to the Officer Commanding at Jacobabad, and one to each of the Officers Commanding at Mittree and Quetta.

To-day the Munshi of Mir Jam Ali, of Lus Beyla, arrived in camp. He reported the arrival of the Jam and Mirs Gohur Khan and Ibrahim Khan at Kotra, one march from Gundava.

The following diary has been received from Captain Wylie :—

"Rodinjo, 1st November 1876.—As shown in Khelat Diary for week ending 1st November 1876, Captain Wylie, on special duty with his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and the portion of the escort to the mission left with him consisting of two guns, No. 2 Mountain Battery, and the left Wing, 30th Bombay Native Infantry, under Major Humfrey, marched from Khelat to Rodinjo, en route for Gundava viâ the Mulla Pass. His Highness the Khan arranged to march on the 3rd instant, and it was also settled that the escort should keep two marches ahead of his Highness during the journey, except when a meeting should be necessary between the Khan and Captain Wylie.

"Captain Scott, commanding detachment 4th Sikh Infantry at Quetta, took advantage of this move to send down 21 invalids with Captain Wylie, the men to be replaced from regimental head-quarters.

"The troops which his Highness the Khan was taking with him to Kutchi, numbering by report 300 cavalry, 1,200 infantry, and two guns, moved from barracks into camp outside the walls of Khelat.

"Gundagen, 2nd November.—The troops marched from Rodinjo to Gundagen. His Highness the Khan moved into camp outside the walls of Khelat.

"Sohrab, 3rd November.—The escort marched from Gundagen to Sohrab, and his Highness the Khan from Khelat to Rodinjo.

"Sohrab, 4th November.—The escort halted at Sohrab. The Naib of Sohrab visited Captain Wylie in camp. He reported that three days before a bunniah and a Brahooee woman had been murdered by some Rodenhi Brahooees, who had fled in the direction of Kharan. On inquiry it was ascertained that the man and woman had been found in adultery, and been killed according to Belooch law.

"Two large camel kafilas of wool passed through Sohrab, while Captain Wylie was there, en route for Kurrachee viâ the Raj route.

"Sohrab, 5th November.—The escort marched in the morning for Anjira, but Captain Wylie remained at Sohrab until the afternoon in order to see his Highness the Khan, who marched in with his troops about 1 p.m., and received Captain Wylie in his Durbar tent.

"The Khan appeared well and in the best of spirits. He told Captain Wylie that Mustaufi Fakir Muhammad had just paid a lakh and a half of taxes into his treasury. He further said that Jam Ali of Lus Beyla would not come in as his country was in too disturbed a state. The conversation, however, principally turned on the approaching Imperial Assemblage at Delhi. His Highness made minute inquiries as to what his position would be, the etiquette of a Durbar, the ceremonies to be observed, &c. He also asked about the other Native Princes who would be there, and the number and description of troops, and appeared in the highest state of delight at the prospect of going there.

"After a long and friendly talk, Captain Wylie took his leave and rode on to Anjira.

"Bapow, 6th November.—The escort marched from Anjira to Bapow, while the Khan halted at Sohrab.

"Pissee Bent, 7th November.—The escort marched to Pissee Bent, his Highness the Khan to Anjira. On the line of march Captain Wylie received a message saying that Sirdar Gohur Khan of Zehri was close by, and would, with his permission, pay him a visit in camp. To this Captain Wylie agreed, and in the afternoon Gohur Khan, with about a dozen followers, arrived at Pissee Bent. He was spoken to about the unsatisfactory news received about Jam Ali of Lus Beyla, but replied that the accounts were greatly exaggerated, and that in his opinion Jam Ali would certainly come into Major Sandeman's camp, and go to Jacobabad or Delhi or anywhere he was ordered with pleasure. For himself, he said, he was just about to be married, but after spending three days with his bride, he would march for Gundava, and reach that place on the 22nd instant.

"Gorombabad, 8th November.—The escort marched to Gorombabad and the Khan to Bapow, where he was met by Gohur Khan's brother, and not by Gohur Khan himself.* This I was sorry for, but the Khan did not seem to consider it as any insult, nor has he alluded to it since in conversation.

* The peace established is too recent to admit of Sirdar Gohur Khan going alone to the Khan's camp.—R. SANDEMAN, Deputy Commissioner.

"Pasht Khana, 9th November.—The escort marched to Pasht Khana, and the Khan to Pissee Bent.

"Nurr, 10th November.—The escort marched to Nurr, and his Highness the Khan to Gorombabad.

"Nurr, 11th November.—The escort halted, and his Highness the Khan marched to Pasht Khana. Letters were received from Major Sandeman for Jam Ali and Sirdars Gohur Khan and Ibrahim Khan, these were forwarded by Captain Wylie to their destinations. The Jah Noshin of Khozdar arrived at Nurr to pay his respects to the Khan. He informed Captain Wylie that Sirdar Ibrahim Khan had already commenced his march from Wudd to Kutchi, but said he had no news from Lus Beyla.

"Nurr, 12th November.—The escort marched to Pir Lakha, and the Khan to Nurr. Captain Wylie met him there and had a long talk. The Khan seemed happy, and was much pleased at a letter which Hittu Ram, the Superintendent of Major Sandeman's office, read him out of a vernacular paper about the preparations made by the Maharaja of Jummoo for the reception of the Viceroy. The rest of the conversation was about Major Sandeman's plans, and the march to Mooltan, &c. Captain Wylie rejoined the escort after his interview with the Khan.

" Hattarji, 13th November.—The escort marched to Hattarji, and his Highness the Khan halted at Nurr.

" Paniwaut, 14th November.—The escort marched to Paniwaut, and the Khan to Peer Lakha.

" Nowlung, 15th November.—The escort marched to Nowlung, and his Highness the Khan to Jah. In the evening Dr. Duke arrived in Captain Wylie's camp from escorting Messrs. Furnivall and Pitman through the highlands of Beloochistan. He reported everything quiet at Khelat and Quetta, and that he had received every assistance from the Khan's officials. Mr. Furnivall he had left behind in his Highness' camp at Jah.

" Nowlung, 16th November.—The escort halted, and his Highness the Khan did the same. Dr. Duke left for Gundava to rejoin Major Sandeman, and Mr. Furnivall, Under-Secretary to Government, Public Works Department, Railway Branch, arrived in Captain Wylie's camp. He gave the same account as Dr. Duke about the state of the country, and the civility with which he had been treated by the Khan and his officials generally.

" Peer Chhutta, 17th November.—The escort marched for Pir Chhutta, and his Highness the Khan for Paniwaut.

" Kotra, 18th November.—The escort marched for Kotra, while his Highness' camp moved to Kaboo.

" Gundava, 19th November.—The escort marched into Gandava, where Major Sandeman was found encamped with an escort consisting of Captain Shepherd's squadron, 4th Punjab Cavalry. His Highness the Khan marched to Pir Chhutta.

" Gundava, 20th November.—His Highness the Khan marched to Kotra.

" Gundava, 21st November.—Major Sandeman, Captain Wylie, and Captain Shepherd, with 50 sabres, 4th Punjab Cavalry, proceeded half way to Kotra and met his Highness the Khan of Khelat on the line of march from that place to Gundava, and accompanied him to his Miri in the latter place. The entry was performed in considerable state. Salutes of artillery being fired, whilst the troops were drawn up in line and saluted as his Highness passed."

His Excellency then proceeded to express in cordial terms the great pleasure it afforded him to welcome his Highness to British territory as a guest of the British Government, observing that in journeying from his distant capital to visit his Excellency in India, his Highness had given fresh proof of the anxiety he had often expressed in letters, to cultivate friendly relations with the British Government.

The Khan replied that it gave him the greatest pleasure to proceed to British territory to pay his respects to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, whose servant he was, and whose orders he would implicitly obey.

After thanking the Khan for the cordial reception given to Major Sandeman's Mission, for the readiness wherewith he had agreed to submit the dispute between himself and his Sirdars to arbitration, and the loyalty with which he had accepted and carried out the awards that had been made, his Excellency observed that he had learnt from Colonel Colley, who had recently visited his Highness in Khelat, that there were already gratifying signs of the beneficial results of that arbitration and of the return of peace in the rebuilding of deserted villages, and the increase of cultivation, and expressed a hope that the peace would be a lasting one, and that the amicable relations now existing between his Highness and the Sirdars would continue and be strengthened, and that both parties would show their appreciation of the efforts of the British Government on their behalf by adhering faithfully to the terms agreed on. The Khan from time to time expressed his assent to all that was said, and repeated his sincere desire to carry into effect all that had been agreed upon.

The Sirdars and officials were then presented, after which the Khan took leave.

On arrival and departure a salute of 19 guns was fired, and a Guard of Honour presented arms.

Return Visit.—At the return visit, which took place shortly afterwards, the conversation was chiefly of a complimentary character, but the Khan took occasion to express his gratitude to the British Government for having sent Major Sandeman to Khelat, and his great esteem for that officer. He also expressed his regard for Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, and Sirdar Jamal Khan, Lughari, the British Belooch Chiefs, who accompanied Major Sandeman, and bore testimony to the assistance they had rendered in settling disputes.

Execution of New Treaty.

At 3.30 p.m. on the 8th, December 1876 the Khan, accompanied by his principal Sirdars and officials, and by Major Sandeman, paid a private visit to the Viceroy for the purpose of executing the new Treaty.

The following officers were present on the occasion :—

T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Foreign Secretary.

Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Commissioner, Derajat Division, Punjab.

Lieutenant-Colonel O. T. Burne, C.S.I., Private Secretary.

Colonel G. P. Colley, C.B., Military Secretary.

The new Treaty, the provisions of which had been previously explained to the Khan and Sirdars, was then executed in duplicate, one copy being retained by his Excellency and one by the Khan, after which the Viceroy addressed his Highness to the following effect :—

His Excellency commenced by expressing the sincere pleasure he felt in meeting his Highness at Jacobabad, and in signing with him a new Treaty on behalf of the British Government.

This Treaty, his Excellency proceeded, would, it was hoped, prove the lasting basis of close and cordial relations between the two Governments, and also serve to maintain unbroken the peace and good order of Khelat.

In order to strengthen still further the bonds of friendship between his Highness and the British Government, and at the same time to afford his Highness material assistance in replenishing his treasury, which had been exhausted by the anarchy of recent years, his Excellency had now the pleasure of offering for his acceptance a sum of three lakhs of rupees, which sum would be made over to any officer his Highness might depute to receive it. The Khan received the announcement with great gratification.

His Excellency then adverted to the pleasure with which he looked forward to again meeting the Khan at Delhi, observing that in his journey thither through British territory his Highness would see further evidence, not only of the power and prosperity of the great Government with which his Highness was now closely allied, but also of its friendly feeling towards himself.

The reception of his Highness at Delhi would be marked by all the honours which, as representative of the Queen and Empress of India, his Excellency gladly offered to the representative of an important and friendly State in firm alliance with the British Government, and so long as his Highness continued to act in a manner worthy of his high position he might confidently count on the continuance of our friendship and protection.

"But in order," his Excellency continued, "to act in accordance with the principles of the Treaty now signed with your Highness, it is necessary (and of this I am sure I need not remind you) that you should scrupulously respect the rights of your Sirdars and subjects, and that you should abstain from all oppression.

"By this Treaty the British Government has undertaken serious obligations on your behalf. It therefore expects that your Highness will listen to its counsels, which will always be dictated by a sincere desire for your welfare and that of your subjects.

"It expects that you will loyally act upon the advice tendered to you by its representative, and abide by his decision in all cases referred to his arbitration."

His Highness replied that he fully understood and accepted all the obligations, and recognised all the duties imposed upon him by the Treaty.

Then, addressing the Sirdars, his Excellency reminded them that they had been named in the Treaty, and were therefore equally bound by its terms; that the Treaty imposed obligations upon them as well as upon the Khan, their suzerain; and that any breach of these obligations by further acts of rebellion would bring upon them the displeasure of the British Government.

They replied that they fully understood and accepted the duties imposed upon them.

Then, addressing both the Khan and Sirdars, his Excellency continued—"Those who "have entered into an engagement with the British Government for the common "advantage must remember that if they fail to carry out the terms of the engagement, "they must forfeit the advantages secured by it."

The Viceroy proceeded to inform the Khan that he had selected Major Sandeman to reside at the Court of his Highness as the representative of the British Government. "I have done so," his Excellency said, "for two reasons: first, because it is to Major Sandeman that your Highness is indebted for the renewed friendship of the British "Government; and, secondly, because Major Sandeman possesses my entire confidence; "I trust this appointment will be agreeable to your Highness."

The Khan replied that the arrangement was entirely satisfactory to him, as Major Sandeman was an officer for whom he had the highest esteem and regard.

With regard to the Khan's representative, his Excellency continued, he might for the present continue to reside at Jacobabad, or at the head-quarters of the Government of India, or at any other place in British territory which might be more convenient to his Highness.

His Excellency then informed the Khan that having learnt from Major Sandeman that it was his Highness' wish that certain persons, viz., Shukur Khan, Commandant, and Munshis Saleh Muhammad and Gul Muhammad, now detained in British territory, should be released, it was his Excellency's intention to comply at once with the wishes of his Highness, trusting that he would recognise in this act a further proof, not only of the friendship of the British Government, but also of his Excellency's personal confidence in the continued loyalty of his Highness' own Government.

Further, that having considered his Highness' recommendation in favour of the return of Mir Khan, the Ex-Jam of Lus Beyla, he was prepared to accede to it on the following conditions:—

(1.) That the Jam acknowledges the Khan's suzerainty in accordance with ancient usage.

(2.) That he accepts and abides by all the conditions of the reconciliation which his son, the acting Jam, agreed to on his behalf at Mustung in July 1876.

(3.) That he accepts as final and agrees to respect the decision given by Major Harrison and confirmed by Colonel Sir William Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, on the 3rd June 1869, regarding the Kamal Khan estate, whereby the said estate was awarded to his Highness the Khan.

(4.) That he agrees to accept as binding on himself and successors all the terms of the engagement executed this day between the British and Khelat Governments on behalf of their respective subjects and officers, so far as those terms may in any wise effect or be applicable to him.

"And now," his Excellency concluded, "I have only to wish that, under the benign protection of Almighty Providence, your Highness may long continue to enjoy all health and happiness, whilst also promoting the happiness of your Sirdars and your subjects."

His Highness, after expressing his gratitude for the favour shown him, and repeating his desire to carry out to the utmost the wishes of the British Government, whose servant he was, said he would venture to prefer one request, viz., that whenever the British Government contemplated the location of any cantonments in Khelat territory, or the establishment of lines of telegraph, or the construction of railways, the Governor-General would, before carrying out the intention, cause him to be informed and consulted in regard to it.

His Excellency, in reply, assured his Highness that nothing could be further from his intention than to take any action of the kind without previously informing his Highness and carefully considering all he had to say in the matter; and he further pointed out that it was expressly provided in the new Treaty that such measures as those referred to by his Highness were to be carried out in concert with him.

The Khan expressed himself fully satisfied.

No. 414, dated Camp Rajanpur, 16th December 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division, to T. H. Thornton, Esq., D.C.L., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

I have the honour herewith to submit a letter, No. 307 of the 14th instant, with annexures, in original, from Major Sandeman, reporting an outrage lately committed by Murrees at the village of Mull near Seebee, in the territory of his Highness the Amir of Cabul.

2. Major Sandeman has lately communicated with the Murree headmen on the subject during their visit to Jacobabad; and he hopes to effect a reconciliation between the contending parties, who, it appears, have been long at feud.

3. The instructions mentioned in the 3rd paragraph of Major Sandeman's letter were called for in the circumstances, as the scene of the outrage is not within the limits of Khelat territory; and he solicits orders from Government as to his ultimate disposal of the case.

Enclosure 1 in No. 156.

No. 307, dated Camp Rajhan, 14th December 1876.

From Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, to Colonel A. A. Munro, Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

I have the honour to submit, in original, for orders, two letters from the officers commanding at Mittree, on the subject of an outrage committed by a few Murree footmen on the villagers of Mull in Seebee territory, resulting in the death of one villager and the kidnapping of another.

2. I took advantage of the Murree Chiefs being at Jacobabad to pay their respects to his Excellency the Viceroy to question them regarding this outrage. They firmly denied all knowledge of it, but said it had doubtless occurred, as there is a long-standing blood-feud between the people of Mull and their clansmen the Sherani Murrees. This feud, they said, they were quite prepared to make up did they come to a final settlement with the Khan of Khelat. This I trust to be able to negotiate very shortly.

3. As the village of Mull is not in Khelat territory, but in that of the Amir of Cabul, I told Colonel Malcolmson verbally the other day at Jacobabad that he ought to recall the Duffedar and eight sowars placed in that village by Captain Reynolds. That I thought it would be quite sufficient for him to keep a good look out from Mittree, and in the event of Murrees entering the plain country, I considered he ought to attack them and drive them back into the hills. More than this, I said, I did not think the Government expected of him.

4. Doubtless it is an unfriendly act to all appearances this outrage on Mull, but on the other hand, in considering it we ought to remember that up to the present time the people of Seebee and the Murrees have been at deadly feud, and an improvement between the two sides can only be brought about gradually. Such outrages will, moreover, be liable to occur unless we decide to take upon ourselves the protection of all the plain country, Seebee territory included, a responsibility we could hardly accept without first communicating with his Highness the Amir of Cabul.

Enclosure 2 in No. 156.

No. 6, dated Camp Mittree, 28th November 1876.

From Captain W. Reynolds, Officer Commanding Troops at Mitri, to Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty.

I have the honour to report that Sirdar Hussad Khan informed me this morning that he had received intelligence that yesterday evening about 5 p.m. seven Murrees on foot attacked two zemindars about three or four miles from Mull in the direction of Lehri, killed one outright, the other was wounded and died about an hour or two after. The latter before his death stated that a young lad, who was with them, was carried off by the Murrees ; also that the said Murrees took away two swords, a shield, and two bullocks, their property. The name of one of the murdered men is Mahmood. To prevent the recurrence of such a raid in that direction, I have, in accordance with the spirit of the verbal orders received from you at Khelat, detached a Duffedar and nine sowars of the 3rd Sind Horse to Mull to remain there until further orders.

Enclosure 3 in No. 156.

No. 7, dated Camp Jacobabad, 1st December 1876.

From Lieutenant-Colonel Malcolmson, Commanding Political Escort, Mittree, to Major R. G. Sandeman, Assistant Commissioner, on special duty.

In forwarding the accompanying letter from Captain Reynolds, I should be glad if you will give me written directions as to the intention of placing the troops now quartered at Mittree, and inform me whether, in the event of similar outrages to that now reported occurring, I am to take any steps as to capturing the perpetrators, and whether parties are to be stationed at any point I may think fit to prevent their recurrence. In fact, whether I am to take measures for preventing anything of this nature, or whether I am to remain passive, unless I accidentally come across these robbers.

I should also feel much obliged if you could (in the event of my having to send out patrols) supply me with some more Jukrani horsemen.

The Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, under instructions previously issued, will forward the three men to their destination, and inform Major Sandeman accordingly, as desired by the Government of India.

2. The original warrants will be returned in due course, the Political Superintendent, Thur and Parkar, having been directed to return them to this office.

2. I am to state that this Government presumes that the expense of conveying the Ex-Jam and his party to the Sind frontier will be borne by Government.

2. The Ex-Jam represents that his household consists of about thirty persons, and he prays that Government will be pleased to grant him a sum of money sufficient to enable him to return to his native country.

3. The delay in submitting this report has been caused by my absence from Poona on duty.

Also, as to how he should act in case Murrees commiting raid in Khelat territory.

3. Mr. Bruce, Assistant Commissioner, on special duty, replied that Seebee being in Cabul territory no direct interference should be exercised there, [illegible] troops enter the Amir's territory; but that with regard to Khelat the Assistant Commissioner was of opinion that the Officer Commanding at Mittree was [illegible] repel any body of raiders caught hot-handed in the act of committing [illegible] the territory of his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

With reference to your letter No. 414-3, dated 16th December 1876, I am directed to inform you that the Government of India cannot undertake the duty of protecting the inhabitants of Seebee, a possession of the Amir of Afghanistan, from outrage.

2. Major Sandeman was therefore right in requiring the Officer Commanding at Mittree to recall the Duffedar and sowars whom he had despatched to Mull in Seebee with the view of preventing the recurrence of Murree raids in that quarter.

3. His Excellency in Council, however, is glad to observe that Major Sandeman hopes to put an end to the blood-feud which gave rise to the outrage in question, by arranging a final settlement of the disputes between the Murree tribe and the Khan of Khelat.

No. 165.

Khelat Diary, No. 1, for the week ending 7th January 1877.

1st January.—Buland Khan Lehri personally reports that four days ago he had left Shikarpur in charge of a horse-load, weighing one maund, containing silk and cotton cloth and some metal cups, sent by Sait Eessar Dass for Siloka and Aishi Buniahs of Dadur. On reaching half-way, in the desert between Kandah and Burshori, he was suddenly seized by three sowars, who forced him to accompany them to Mal near Shahpur. Late at evening they released him, carrying away the mare with the merchandise and other property valuing Rupees 7 or 8. The value of the merchandise is unknown.

Inquiries being made.—R. J. B.

As the thieves had their faces covered he could not recognise them, but from their language he concluded they were Murrees.

2nd January.—Malguzar Khan, Ressaldar, reports from Dadur that he has received information that Murrees are collecting their men to raid on either the Khetrans, Hassanis or Musà Khels.

Four men of Shawl Kot on returning from Mustung with six others were looted by 40 sowars of Dhumar clan. One of the former, by name Mar Sang Koord, was severely wounded.

This was apparently in prosecution of some feud ...veen the Dhumars and Koords. Further inquiries ...ho these people were, and the cause of the ...&c., are being made.—R. J. B.

Langhanis, finding the villagers on the alert, returned unsuccessful.

The Revenue Collectors of the Cabul Government are expected here at the end of this month (Zilhija).

4th January.—Colonel Malcolmson, commanding political escort at Mittree, writes that Ahmed, camelman of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, reports that he has recovered seven camels out of the nine carried away by Murrees on the 22nd December (vide Khelat Diary for the week ending 31st December) without any payment. The other two, being good ones, have been regained on paying a ransom (bunga) amounting to Rupees 7–8.

Further inquiries being made.—R. J. B.

5th January.—Ressaldar Malguzar Khan reports from Shawl Kot that Rupees 50 had been extorted by robbers from Haji Khan of Pishin, near Dozan (Bolan Pass). Gul Muhammad, sowar of Alla Dina Koord, recovered the amount from the culprits and made it over to the owner in presence of Captain Scott, Commanding at Shawl Kot.

Further particulars called for.—R. J. B.

Caravans are passing through the Bolan Pass in safety.

7th January.—Sirdar Alla Dina Koord intimates from Dadur that up to the 5th January 1877 all caravans have crossed in safety through the Bolan Pass, and that he and his sons are attentive in the protection of it.

No. 166.

Khelat Diary, No. 2, for the week ending 15th January 1877.

8th January.—Sirdar Mehrullah Khan, son of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, writes that to-day a band of Murrees (Singanis led by Piara Mukaddam) committed a raid on a Panni village (in Seebee-Cabul territory), carried away 200 camels belonging to Brahooees and Pannis. The latter pursued the marauders, but before they could overtake them they had crossed the hills and effected their escape with the booty. The pursuers, after consultation, dismissed the footmen, and looted a herd of goats belonging to Murrees (Mazaranis). On their return journey they divided themselves into two parties. When they arrived near their own ilaqua, the Khajjak clan attacked one of the parties, and a fight ensued. The Khajjaks rescued the booty from the Pannis, and killed one of their horses. As the Khajjaks have acted unjustly there will be enmity between the two clans in future.

From inquiry it appears that the Mazaranis (Murrees) were living under Khajjaks' protection.—R. J. B.

2. Naib Pir Jan, his Highness the Khan's Agent at Jacobabad, reports that he is informed by Miah Khan that a buniah named Wadhu and his nephew were going to Mazarani Murree Hills with a donkey load of merchandise. On the bank of Boharwah they were met by two Murrees, who plundered them. The Hindus defended themselves, and were severely wounded. Wadhu has since died, and the other is doing well.

3. He further states (with reference to paragraph 6 of Diary No. 1 for the week ending 8th January) that the nephew of Palia Kingrani with four sowars carried away seven camels belonging to Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani. Some men of the Takani clan met them on the way back and rescued the camels, and returned them to the owner.

4. 9th.—Sirdar Mir Muhammad Khan, Barozai, reports from Kuruk to the same as Sirdar Mehrullah, Raisani (vide paragraph 1 of this diary).

5. 10th.—Ressaldar Malguzar Khan reports from Bagh to the same Mehrullah, Raisani (vide paragraph 1 of this diary).

6. Sirdar Muhammad Khan, Khajjak, reports from Seebee to the same Mehrullah, Raisani, regarding Murree raid on Pannis, and, in addition, that the Pannis pursued and overtook the Murrees near the Nari River, but returned unsuccessful. When the Pannis reached the Khajjak ilaqua they found the cattle of Mazarani Murrees, whom they well knew to be the clan. Khajjaks on being informed collected their men, and sent one Khair Shah Syud to intercede for them with Pannis, and recover their cattle. Pannis wounded the Syud, who, in return, wounded one of their men and a horse. A fight ensued, in which another Khajjak was wounded. Pannis at last dispersed, leaving a part of their spoil behind them.

7. 11th.—Naib Azim Jan writes from Lehri to the same effect as Sirdar Muhammad Khan, Barozai (vide paragraph 6 of this diary). He further states that the camels plundered belonged to Sirdar Sarbuland Khan, Barozai, and Phullu Gola. With regard to the men wounded in the fight, he relates that five men of Khajjak were killed and two wounded.

This information is incorrect, only two Khajjaks and one Panni were wounded. None killed.—R. J. B.

8. Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, writes from Delhi that he entirely approves of the opinion of Mr. Bruce (in charge of Khelat political affairs) with regard to political relations with Seebee country (vide Khelat Diary for the week ending 31st December last).

9. 12th.—Aishi, Tiloka, and others report from Dadur to the same effect as Bulanda Lehri (vide Khelat Diary No. 1 of 1877, paragraph 1).

10. 13th.—R. J. Bruce, Esq., in charge of Khelat political affairs, has written from Jacobabad to Sirdar Mehrullah Khan, Tomandar of Murrees, that he has been fully informed of the late depredations committed by Murree tribe on Seebee country. That it will be better for his (Tomandar's) own reputation, and for the satisfaction of the English Government, to stop such acts for the future. That he should have taken precautions to prevent these occurrences, and that Mr. Bruce hopes that he (Tomandar) will return the plundered cattle to their lawful owners, and give assurances that he (Tomandar) has thoroughly restrained his people from committing such outrages for the future, which, if allowed to go on unchecked, will spread to the injury of himself and of his tribe.

11. 13th.—Captain Scott, commanding political escort, reports from Quetta having completed four barracks, with native officers' houses, huts, and cook-houses, each barrack calculate to accommodate 80 men.

12. Further reports the arrival of some sowars from Candahar to collect his Highness the Amir's rent in Seebee. Durani Sirdar will accompany them to collect the rent, and receive his allowances, returning to Quetta in a few days.

13. 14th.—Captain Scott, commanding political escort, writes from Quetta, demi-officially, that a short time since a mare, belonging to the Subadar of his regiment, was stolen by a Pathan cooly working on the barracks. The mare was traced to the village of Sirdar Azim Khan, Arbab of Kasi, and returned to the owner. The accused had absconded and taken refuge in his Highness the Amir of Cabul's territory.

14. 15th.—Alla Dad, Darogah of the Bolan Pass, reports from Quetta that from 23rd to 31st December 1876 caravans, numbering 140 camels and 14 donkeys, have passed in safety through the Bolan Pass. The value of the caravans was estimated at Rupees 16,855, the contents being wool, raisins, madder (majith), posteens, &c. Octroi fees (sung) amounting to Rupees 474–8, and safe conduct fees (badraki) aggregating to Rupees 143–4, was realised from the merchants.

No. 7, dated Camp Quetta, 30th January 1877.

[illegible]. Scott, Commanding Detachment Her Majesty's 4th Regiment Sikh [illegible] Major R. G. Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, [illegible]cobabad.

[illegible] report that, agreeably to your instructions received on 16th [illegible]ment of the 4th Regiment Sikh Infantry under my command [illegible] reaching Quetta on 2nd November 1876.

On the 3rd and 4th of November I proceeded with Naib Atta Muhammad to visit the different sources of water, and to select one for a supply to feed my works.

On the 5th I commenced to mark out the position of the different barracks, &c. to be erected, and on the 10th the foundations commenced to be cut.

Barrack site.

Barracks, &c., on the site fixed by you according to the plan attached, to accommodate a full wing of a regiment, at a cost of Rupees 2,300, were completed on 16th January 1877 under the following adverse circumstances :—

1st.—Most of the Brahooee inhabitants of the valley having migrated to Kutchi to escape the winter, I was dependent on labourers from the hill tribes around, or those occupying the inner slopes of the "Tukatu" and "Zarghun" Hills. With the aid of the Naib the following high rates marginally noted were fixed. For four days there were 120 men employed daily at the works, but on the fifth day they all struck work and demanded higher wages. As their manner was most overbearing, I assembled them in front of the detachment, quarter-guard, paid them their dues, and informed them they might return to their homes, and at once turned out the detachment in reliefs to carry on the works.

Labour.

Mason	- -	8 annas.
Diggers	- -	4 „
Coolies	- -	3 „

This summary procedure surprised them, as also the detachment turning out so readily to proceed to the works. After some ten days, however, they returned in large numbers, and took up work again of their own free will, accepting the reduced rates noted in the margin. As I could not depend on these men as fixed labourers, employing some 70 of them, the detachment continued furnishing working parties.

Mason and diggers	-	4 annas.
Coolies	- - -	3 „

2nd.—Rain, hail, severe frosts, and snow combined at first injured my walls to a very great extent. Snow commenced to fall on the hills around so early as 9th November 1876, severe frosts set in and bit the walls, causing them, as they dried, to crumble away. I was therefore obliged to mix straw (bhoosa) and litter with the mud, and protect it from the frosts at night by strewing straw thickly over it.

Weather.

3rd.—My water supply from the Hunna River, which fed my works, was constantly being interfered with and cut off, owing to a difference of opinion between the Naib and the late Mûhammad Said Khan, Durani, as to who was the actual owner.

Water supply.

4th.—No material for roofing but green poplars and mulberry, or the small lana bush and hill grass was procurable in the valley, nor could I at first make any arrangements for its supply. Through the aid however of the late Muhammad Said Khan, I contracted for a supply of timber and matting from the Hunna and Pishin valleys, but carriage (camels) was required to bring these in.

Timber roofing.

5th.—No camels were in the valley, and I was obliged therefore to keep back the regiment camels attached in the detachment for this purpose. The severity of weather, entire scarcity of grazing, and the long marches into the valleys soon reduced their former good condition, and has for the present rendered them unfit for use, five have since died. On the 18th instant I was forced to send them down to the Sind camp at Mittree, and they will remain there until again required.

Carriage.

All these difficulties, I am happy to say, have been overcome, owing in a great measure to the cheerfulness and goodwill with which the whole detachment set to work to complete their barracks. They received no working pay beyond two days, when I gave them two annas each and extra rations, costing Rupees 70 on 1st January 1877.

I need hardly remark that in consequence the saving to Government has been great, and further I feel confident that the lines would not have been completed this winter, had not the detachment pushed them on with such spirit.

Since the completion of the lines we have had very severe weather, and the heaviest snowstorm that has fallen as yet fell on the night of the 23rd instant, 6 inches being on the ground in the morning, this was followed by sleet, and then heavy rain fell and continued to pour until 8 p.m. on 24th. Rain fell again for several hours on the 25th, and another heavy storm set in on night of 26th, continuing until 3 p.m. on 28th instant. Notwithstanding this severe test to new buildings, the barracks, beyond leaking a good deal, have received no damage. We are all still under canvass, but having made the men build small temporary huts for themselves on first arrival, they are protected from the wet and cold, and all are, I am thankful to say, well and comfortable.

In conclusion, I would bring to your favourable notice the great support given me by the late Said Muhammad Khan, Durani, and his son, Abdul Wasid, in arranging for wood, &c. with the Kakur and other tribes, without which I fear the barracks would not have been roofed in for sometime yet.

Naib Atta Muhammad aided me as much as he could, but having no influence with the tribes beyond his own district he was not able to do much.

I enclose a letter from Assistant Surgeon E. Tootell regarding the barracks, and also copies of the thermometer reading since arrival here.

Enclosure 1 in No. 167.

Dated Quetta, 1st February 1877.

From Surgeon E. Tootell, Medical Officer in charge of Detachment Her Majesty's 4th Regiment Sikh Infantry, to Captain A. Scott, Commanding Detachment Her Majesty's 4th Regiment Sikh Infantry.

Having examined the newly constructed barracks, I have the honour to report—

1st.—That they are fit for the occupation of the men, both as regards dryness, warmth, and ability to stand severe weather without leaking (the latter point having been tested by the very severe weather which we have lately experienced).

2nd.—That the accommodation, though not so great as might be wished, is still amply sufficient for the men, without risk of any of the consequences of overcrowding. The amount of cubic space per man is 263⅓ cubic feet, and this might be increased to 372 cubic feet by raising the roof to 12 feet. The amount of superficial space is 30 square feet per man, which is decidedly a small allowance, though at present in tents the men have less.

3rd.—That the ventilation is sufficiently provided for by the number of doorways in each barrack and a number of holes pierced in the centre wall opposite each doorway, thus allowing a free circulation of air throughout the whole building.

4th.—That the site is higher than the immediately surrounding lands, and the aspect is one which affords plenty of light and air.

5th.—That there are admirable facilities for good water supply and drainage, and favourable sites for latrines.

These three last points I have not reported on at large, as the arrangements for their completion have not yet been carried out.

I have also the honour to attach the readings * of the minimum and maximum thermometers, with remarks on the weather, for the months of December 1876 and January 1877.

No. 14, dated Camp Sukkur, 30th January 1877. (Extract.)

From Captain H. Wylie, on special duty with his Highness the Khan of Khelat, to Major R. G. Sandeman, C.S.I., Deputy Commissioner, on special duty, Calcutta.

I have the honour to report for your information that his Highness the Khan of Khelat arrived at Sukkur yesterday in the Government Steamer "Chenab." His Highness is in good health and spirits, and expresses himself on every occasion as much pleased and gratified with his whole trip, and with the arrangements made for his comfort and amusement.

2. Before leaving Mooltan his Highness visited the Chenab, and was so much pleased with her that he made it a particular request that he should be allowed to embark at Sher Shah, instead of going by rail to Bakree.

Captain Plummer agreed to this if 50 men and the camels were sent by country boat, and it was arranged so to do, but at the last moment his Highness again changed his mind, and sent his camels and the detachment, for whom there was no room on the steamer, by land viâ Dera Ghazi Khan to Jacobabad.

3. The steamer and flat were of course very much crowded, but Captain Plummer did everything in his power to make all comfortable, and his never failing attention, and the capital way in which he brought down his vessel elicited repeated praises from the Khan.

This was the more creditable as the river was very low and difficult of navigation. The Khan specially requests that Captain Plummer's conduct may be brought to the favourable notice of Government, and I would mention that by Captain Plummer's taking upon himself to bring such a crowded and heavily laden steamer from Sher Shah, Government have been saved the expense of conveying the Khan to Bakree, and of a couple of country boats, the hire of each of which was Rupees 550.

4. On arrival here his Highness the Khan mentioned that he particularly wished to visit place called Ranipur, distant 38 miles, where lives a certain very holy peer, whose blessing he is anxious to secure. I telegraphed to you about this wish of the Khan's and have received your affirmative reply, and his Highness will start to-morrow or next day for Ranipur, the whole expenses of the journey being defrayed by himself. He goes there in two marches, returns in two more, and halts one day at Ranipur. In the meantime his heavy luggage, troops, and followers will go to Shikarpur, and await him there.

* * * * * * * *

6. Disturbances are reported as having taken place in Noshky and several men as having been killed: of all these reports the Khan hopes to have authentic information when he reaches Gundava, and he will then tell the Political officer with him.

8. I hope to reach Jacobabad with the Khan on the 7th February.

This case is under inquiry.—R. J. B.

7. 22nd.—Sirdar Gholam Murteza Khan, Tomandar of Boogtees, writes from Dera Bibrak, that Massuris (Boogtees) are making preparations for a raid on the Afghan country. The result will be reported as soon as known.

8. A statement showing traffic through the Bolan Pass from 1st April 1876 to 31st December 1876 is herewith appended.

9. Sirdar Mehrullah Khan, Tomandar of Murrees, has sent a reply to Mr. Bruce's letter, referred to in paragraph 10 of Diary No. 2 for 1877, stating that he had already sent his sowars to Kot Mundai to collect and keep the plundered cattle, and that he was also ready to start for that place to return the cattle to the owners, and requested that Manu Garani might be sent direct to Kot Mundai to assist him.

10. The bearer of Mehrullah Khan's reply states that the Tomandar having ordered him to start for Jacobabad left for Kot Mundai.

11. He further states that he was informed that the sheep and goats belonging to Mazarani Murrees, and carried away by Pannis (vide paragraph 1 of Diary No. 2 for 1877) have all been returned to the owners through Mehrullah Khan, son of Sirdar Mulla Mahomed Raisani.

No. 171.

Note by Major R. G. Sandeman, C.S.I., on special duty, dated Calcutta, 8th February 1877.

The Secretary has sent me, demi-officially, Khelat Diaries for the weeks ending respectively the 31st December 1876 and the 7th January 1877, and has called my attention to two passages in them marked by him.

The first passage states that four Murree sowars carried off nine she camels from Kutchi. By referring, however, to an entry in the diary for the week ending 7th January, I find that on the 4th January seven of the reported stolen camels were restored to their owners.

I think it is very unlikely that the camels were in the first instance stolen. The Brahoocs permit their herds and flocks to graze right up to the Murree Hills, and even inside them, and when animals wander they are at once reported as stolen. Generally such cases are made over to the Chiefs for disposal, who, as a rule, settle them. In the event of their not being able to do so, reference is made to the Deputy Commissioner, who keeps a register of all pending cases, and when a suitable opportunity offers he takes up the case and settles it.

Entry No. 2, referred to me, states that the Murree tribe contemplate attacking the Upper Afghans. This statement is of no importance. The Murrees are at feud with all their Afghan neighbours, and the two sides are continually fighting each other.

I enclose telegrams from Messrs Bruce and Gladstone on the unsettled state of the Murree tribe. This is caused by the death of the late Sirdar Ghuzzun Khan. The new Chief (as is generally the case in such tribes as the Murrees) has a strong faction opposed to him, and will require, both from the Punjab and Sind, the hearty support of our officers to enable him to maintain his own.

I have directed the two officers referred to above to meet at Boogtee Dera, and in concert and communication with the Khelat authorities there to inquire into all tribal quarrels, and to do their utmost to settle these. Mr. Bruce has been directed to give the Sirdar every legitimate support.

I trust these measures will meet with approval.

Enclosure 1 in No. 171.

Telegram, dated 5th February 1877.

From Deputy Commissioner, Dera Ghazi Khan, to Major Sandeman, Calcutta.

I received to-day a report from Baham Khan, Mazari, that Meia Khan, Mamdani Murree, had informed him personally that the Murrees had a month since made a raid on Kutchi, carrying off 180 of Moolla Mahomed's camels, and have subsequently made two raids on Kutchi, carrying off cattle and goats without number. This is so far not confirmed. I will telegraph again when I have fully ascertained.

Enclosure 2 in No. 171.

Telegram, dated 7th February 1877.

From Deputy-Commissioner, Rajanpoor, to Major Sandeman, Calcutta.

Imam Buksh, Mazari, confirms his son's report about Murree raids. He accuses Mirullah of complicity in hopes of obtaining more pay. He says more raids are to be apprehended.

Enclosure 3 in No. 171.

Telegram, dated 7th February 1877.

From Major Sandeman, Calcutta, to Mr. Gladstone, Hurrund viâ Rajanpoor.

Bruce goes to Kutchi and Boogtee Dera to fully inquire into state of affairs. It would be an excellent plan if you and Sirdar Imam Buksh could meet him there. Communicate with Bruce and cordially co-operate together.

Enclosure 4 in No. 171.

Telegram, dated 7th February 1877.

From Deputy Commissioner, Rajanpoor, to Major Sandeman, Calcutta.

I meet Bruce at Boogtee Dera on 10th instant. You may depend on cordial co-operation.

Enclosure 5 in No. 171.

Telegram, dated 7th February 1877.

From Mr. Bruce, Jacobabad, to Major Sandeman, Calcutta.

Have received information from Imam Buksh, Mazari, the late Seebee raids were instigated by Mehrulla Tomundar in hopes thereby to get his Government allowances increased; that on same grounds other depredations may be anticipated in Kutchi. Sher Muhammad Shah Buksh, other Murrees at Rojhan, were apparently his informants. This is in direct opposition to information received from Brahooees and others, who state that leaders committed raids to get Tomundar into disrepute. I believe latter version correct, and that there are intrigues against Tomundar, who is acting in good faith. There being no Munshi at Kahan, difficult to maintain proper relations with tribe. He is at Rojhan on two months' leave, which there is nothing on record to show that you gave him.

Enclosure 6 in No. 171.

Telegram, dated 8th February 1877.

From Major Sandeman, Calcutta, to Mr. Bruce, Jacobabad.

Full instructions sent you by post. Give Sirdar Mehrulla your full legitimate support.

Enclosure 7 in No. 171.

Telegram, dated 7th February 1877.

From Mr. Bruce, Jacobabad, to Major Sandeman, Calcutta.

Your telegram. Have telegraphed Gladstone to meet me at Sahaf and bring Imam Buksh, Mazari, with him. Murree sowars just arrived, strengthen my views regarding Tomundar as communicated last telegram, who will require your hearty support if intrigues are against him.

Enclosure 8 in No. 171.

Telegram, dated 8th February 1877.

From Major Sandeman, Calcutta, to Mr. Bruce, Jacobabad.

Be sure and fully consult Khan in all matters connected with tribes, and mode of procedure in regard to settlement of quarrels. Khan's hearty co-operation once secured success is certain.

Memorandum No. 63, dated 10th February 1877.

With reference to former correspondence, has the honour to forward a memorandum relating to Major Browne's visit to Kutchi in connexion with the proposed railway line to Dadur or Quetta.

Enclosure 1 in No. 172.

During the month of January Major Browne, R.E., visited Thal, Gora, Nari, Tullar, Lehri, Mal, and Dadar, and closely inspected that part of country with reference to the proposed line of railway to Dadur or Quetta.

He is now engaged in the examination of the direct line viâ Barshori and Bagh, intending to return again by the northern line.

No. 317P., dated Fort William, 15th February 1877.

From T. J. C. Plowden, Esq., Officiating Under Secretary to Government of India, Foreign Department, to Lieutenant-Colonel A. A. Munro, on special duty.

With reference to paragraphs 2 and 3 of the Khelat Diary for the week ending the 31st of December 1876, forwarded with your endorsement No. 428, dated the 22nd of January 1877, I am directed to state that the Governor-General in Council approves of Mr. Bruce's reply to the letter from the Officer Commanding at Mittree, on the subject of the petition of Sirdar Mir Muhammad Khan, Barozai, of Kuruk, in Afghan territory, praying for aid against the Murrees.

No. 174.

Khelat Diary, No. 4, for the week ending 31st January 1877.

25th January.—The Murree news-writer reports from Kahan that on the 4th January Dewa Khan, Powadi Murree, with 900 Murree sowars and footmen, made a raid on the Musa Khail Pathans, plundering 1,500 cows and killing 10 men.

2. 30th January.—Alladad, Darogah of the Bolan Pass, reports that from the 12th to 21st January caravans, consisting of fruits, cloth, wool, &c., numbering 760 camels, 502 donkeys, and 11 ponies, valued at Rupees 98,007, passed in safety through the Bolan Pass from Candahar and other places. Rupees 2,830–4 were realised as custom dues (sung), and Rupees 894–7 as escort fees (badrakki).

3. The value of caravans and amount of custom and escort fees from the 1st January are respectively—

	Rupees.
Value of caravans - - - -	1,63,870–0–0
Custom dues - - - - -	5,837–4–6
Escort fees - - - - -	1,817–12–3

4. 31st January.—Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan, Mazari, reports his arrival at Rojhan on the 30th January, and that Muhammad Khan and Shah Buksh, Mamdani Murrees, who were there with their sick brother, Mian Khan, gave him the following information.

1st. That Piara, Thingani Murree, with 40 men, raided Kurk village in Seebee country and carried away 180 camels.

2nd. That Daru, Langhani Murree, with 20 men, plundered a large number of sheep and goats from Seebee.

3rd. That some Thingani Murrees carried away some cows and bullocks from Seebee, and that the Murrees, in concert with Sirdar Mehrulla Khan, Murree, intended to raid in Kutchi. Taking the usual propensities of the Murree Chief into consideration, Sirdar Imam Buksh Khan is of opinion that the raids in Seebee country have been committed through his instigation, as he believes that by doing so his Government allowance will be increased. The Mazari Chief has also received information from other sources that the Murrees are still preparing to commit raids in Kutchi. Sher Muhammad Khan, Murree, when lately at Rojhan, promised to send the Mazari Chief full information of the Murree's doings, which, when received, will be communicated. The Mazari Chief is of opinion that it would be advisable to withhold the Murree pay, and also to punish them

This does not agree with the information received by the undersigned, which shows that the Murree Tomundar is working in good faith, recovering the stolen property to be returned to the owners.—R. J. Bruce, Officiating in charge of Khelat Mission.

so severely that others may take example by it. It is also reported that the Murree Chief has gone to Koot Mundai, but whether to recover the plundered cattle or to instigate further depredations is not yet known.

No. 19, dated Camp Badalwah, 15th February 1877.

Endorsed by Officer in charge of Khelat Mission.

Submitted to Colonel A. A. Munro, Commissioner and Superintendent, Derajat Division.

No. 175.

Khelat Diary, No. 5, for the week ending 7th February 1877. (Extract.)

2nd February.—Sirdar Sohrab Khan of Lahri reports that on the 1st February four Hindus went out to cut "khar" at the foot of the Murree Hills, where at mid-day Alam Khan, Shaheja Murree, with three sowars, robbed them of their clothes.

2. Mehrulla Khan, son of Sirdar Moolla Mahomed, Raisani, writes—(1st) that the report of a Murree raid on the Samalanis is incorrect, but that 10 or 12 Thingani Murrees, headed by Shakru Murree, made a raid on the Sangan village, but finding nothing there returned empty handed; (2nd) that his Highness the Amir of Cabul has sent by the hands of Pista Khan, Mir Akhor, and Sirdar Mir Golam Mohiyuldeen, the nephew of Sirdar Saido Khan (who were sent by the Amir's order to realise the Government revenue of Seebee), a khillut and dustar of Chieftainship for Sirdar Muhammad Khan, Barozai. The above-named officers collected all the Pannis, and with their consent gave the Sirdar his khillut, and elected him Chief. Surbiland Khan, with three or four persons of his faction, alone declined to join the assemblage, or acknowledge the Chief.

3. 3rd February.—The news-writer stationed at Kahan, the Murree head-quarters, writes to the same effect as Mehrulla Khan, Raisani, vide paragraph 1 of Diary No. 2. He further reports that Dad and other Langhani Murrees, with 20 followers, raided on Golam Bolaks (Seebee country), carrying off a number of goats. That the Thingani Murrees had three times stolen cattle from Kutchi, and that Sirdar Mehrulla Khan, Murree, had gone himself to Mundai to recover the property plundered from Seebee and Kutchi.

4. 4th February.—Alladad Khan, Darogah of the Bolan Pass, reports that Zarif Khan, Paihlwanzai, stated to him that a few Murree thieves carried off three camels belonging to the Paihlwanzai tribe residing in Dahna Gharri. That he (Zarif Khan) pursued the culprits, but could not overtake them. He reported this occurrence to Colonel Malcolmson (at Mittree) and to Sirdar Alla Dina Koord. The latter told him to come after four days, when he would arrange to obtain the restoration of the stolen animals.

Resolution—By Government of India, Foreign Department (Extract.)

Read—

The Treaty between the British Government and the Khelat State, dated the 8th of December 1876.

Observations.—1. Article 4 of the Treaty recently executed between the British Government and the Khelat State declares that, "for the further consolidation of the "friendship herewith renewed and re-affirmed between the two Governments, it is agreed "on the one hand that British Agents, with suitable escorts, shall be duly accredited by "the British Government to reside permanently at the Court of the Khan and elsewhere "in his Highness' dominions, and on the other hand, that a suitable representative shall "be duly accredited by his Highness to the Government of India;" and Article 6 that "Whereas the Khan of Khelat has expressed a desire on the part of himself and his "Sirdars for the presence in his country of a detachment of British troops, the British "Government, in accordance with the provisions of Article 4 of the Treaty of 1854, "and in recognition of the intimate relations existing between the two countries, hereby "assents to the request of his Highness, on condition that the troops shall be stationed "in such positions as the British Government may deem expedient, and be withdrawn "at the pleasure of that Government."

2. In conformity with the above provisions it is in contemplation to station Political Officers at Khelat and Quetta, and detachments of troops at Quetta and Mittree, namely:—

At Quetta—	At Mittree or its vicinity—
One regiment of infantry.	One regiment of cavalry.
One squadron of cavalry.	One wing of infantry.
One mountain battery.	One mountain battery.

3. Under these circumstances, * * * it becomes, in the opinion of the Governor-General in Council, matter of extreme importance that Quetta should be connected without delay with the British telegraph system by a line proceeding by the Bolan Pass; a branch line being ultimately made connecting Khelat with the main line either at Quetta or at some point below the Bolan Pass.

4. In Article 7 of the Treaty it is agreed "that such lines of telegraph or railway as may "be beneficial to the interests of the two Governments shall be from time to time constructed "by the British Government in the territories of the Khan, provided that the conditions of "such construction be a matter of previous arrangement between that Government and "the Government of his Highness;" and in accordance with the proviso of the last clause, the proposal of the British Government as above described has been fully explained to the Khan, and he has cordially assented thereto.

5. The cost of the extension from Jacobabad to Quetta is approximately estimated as follows:—

Rupees 72,900 cash;
„ 1,05,700 stores;

the estimate being based on a rough survey by an officer of the Telegraph Department who accompanied Colonel Colley on his mission to Khelat. It is therefore Resolved—That the Department of Public Works be desired to arrange for the extension of a line to Quetta by the route indicated without delay.

Resolution—By the Government of India, Foreign Department.

Read—

Resolution of Government of India No. 2819P., dated 16th October 1875, and papers referred to therein.

Also Government of India's letter No. 150P.. dated 13th January 1876, to address of the Punjab Government, and subsequent correspondence relating to Khelat affairs.

Also Treaty concluded with his Highness the Khan of Khelat, dated 8th December 1876.

1. In the early part of 1873 the disturbed condition of Khelat necessitated the withdrawal of the Political Agent of the British Government and suspension of the subsidy paid to the Khan under the provisions of the Treaty of 1854.

2. Circumstances, which it is unnecessary to detail, led to the deputation, towards the close of 1875, of Captain (now Major) Sandeman, Deputy Commissioner of the Dera Ghazi Khan District of the Punjab, to Beloochistan, for the purpose of effecting, if possible, a peaceful settlement of inter-tribal disputes and opening the way to a renewal, under certain conditions, of friendly relations with the Khan's Government. Major Sandeman returned in January 1876 with a satisfactory letter from the Khan, and the result of his mission was sufficiently encouraging to induce the Government of India to depute him a second time to Khelat territory with a letter from the Viceroy (Lord Northbrook) to his Highness in reply. During his second mission Major Sandeman succeeded in re-opening the Bolan Pass for traffic, and in effecting a reconciliation between the Khan and his Sirdars. At the commencement of the cold season the Khan and his Sirdars proceeded with Major Sandeman to British territory, and on the 8th December 1876, a new treaty of friendship, re-affirming and supplementing the Treaty of 1854, was executed at Jacobabad by his Excellency the present Viceroy and his Highness the Khan.

3. In the new Treaty it is agreed, inter alia, that the British Government shall aid the Khan, in case of need, in the maintenance of a just authority and in the protection of his territories from external attack (Article 3); shall assist, if need be, in settling disputes between the Khan and his Sirdars (Article 5); shall station troops in Khelat territory in such positions as may be deemed expedient (Article 6); and (Article 7) shall construct from time to time such lines of telegraph or railway as may be beneficial to the interests of the two Governments.

It is further agreed (Articles 9 and 10) that the British Government shall, in addition to an enhanced subsidy of one lakh of rupees per annum, contribute Rupees 20,500 annually towards the establishment of posts and development of traffic along the trade routes in his Highness' territories, provided such money is expended by the Khan in the manner approved of by the British Government; and (Article 4) that British Agents, with suitable escorts, shall be accredited to reside permanently at the Court of the Khan and elsewhere in his Highness' dominions.

4. Friendship between the Khelat and British Governments having been thus renewed and strengthened, his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council is pleased, subject to the approval of Her Majesty's Government, to sanction the re-establishment and extension of the Khelat Agency in the manner herein-after set forth.

5. The charge of the political relations of the British Government with the Khelat State and its dependencies shall be vested in Major R. G. Sandeman, C.S.I., under the designation of Agent to the Governor-General for Beloochistan.

6. As Agent to the Governor-General, Major R. Sandeman will be the representative of the British Government in Khelat and its Dependencies; will correspond directly with the Foreign Department of the Government of India, and have custody of the Khelat Records, now in the charge of Lieutenant-Colonel Munro; he will further be entitled to be referred to, and consulted by, the authorities of British districts adjacent to the Khelat border, whether in the Punjab or in Sind, in respect of administrative matters which may affect, or be likely to affect, the interests of the Khan or of his subjects, and the officers of the Sind Frontier Police will supply him with the reports and information now furnished to the Commissioner of the Derajat.

7. The Agent to the Governor-General will have his head-quarters and ordinarily reside in Khelat territory, but he shall have general permission to proceed on duty to any part of British territory lying Trans-Indus between Dera Ghazi Khan and the sea, for the purpose of conferring with the local authorities on matters connected with his special duties, in regard to which they will be expected to furnish him with any information he may require.

8. Until further orders Major Sandeman will receive a salary of Rupees 2,500 per mensem, and take rank with residents of the 2nd Class in the Gradation List of the Political Department, but will retain for the present his place in the Punjab Civil List.

9. Subordinate to the Agent to the Governor-General, there shall be three Assistant Agents; the head-quarters of the first will be, until further orders, at Quetta, whence he will supervise the arrangements for the protection of the Bolan Pass; the second will, for the present, have his head-quarters at Jacobabad and act as Commandant of the Belooch Guides, whom it is proposed to transfer from the Military Department and place under the orders of the Agent to the Governor-General; and the third will remain in attendance at the Court of the Khan.

10. Until further orders the First Assistant will draw a salary of Rupees 1,200 per mensem, and take rank with Political Agents of the 2nd Class; and the Second and Third Assistants salaries of Rupees 1,000 per mensem, and take rank with Political Agents of the 3rd Class; and they will further retain for the present a lien upon the appointments now held by them.

11. Mr. R. I. Bruce, Assistant Commissioner, Punjab, is appointed First Assistant; Captain E. S. Reynolds, of the Sind Horse, Second Assistant; and Captain H. Wylie, of the 1st Punjab Cavalry, Third Assistant.

12. In addition to the above officers, and in like manner subordinate to the Agent to the Governor-General, there shall be a medical officer, to be designated Medical Officer to the Beloochistan Agency, who will reside ordinarily at Khelat, but may be employed under the orders of the Agent to the Governor-General in any part of Khelat and its Dependencies, and will supervise the dispensaries, which it is proposed, with the assent of the Khan, to establish at Khelat and Quetta; until further orders he will receive the salary of a Residency or 1st Class Civil Surgeon, together with an allowance of Rupees 350 per mensem, and will retain a lien on his present appointment.

The Governor-General is pleased to appoint Surgeon O. T. Duke, 3rd Punjab Cavalry, Medical Officer.

13. For the above officers his Excellency in Council is further pleased to sanction the establishments and charges contained in the annexed Schedule A.

14. With regard to the Belooch Guides, the Military Department will be requested to arrange that Colonel Nuthall, Commanding the Sind Frontier Force, and Major Sandeman shall submit jointly proposals for effecting the transfer of this Corps from the Military Department of the Bombay Presidency to the Political Department of the Government of India, care being taken that such transfer is effected without prejudice to the interests of the men, and that provision is made for placing a number sufficient for duty at the outposts at the disposal of the Officer Commanding the Sind Frontier Force.

15. From the date of this Resolution the mission of Major Sandeman shall be deemed to have closed, and no time should be lost by that officer in preparing and submitting the accounts for final adjustment.

No. 187.

Khureeta, dated 23rd February 1877.

From his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India to his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

I have the pleasure to inform your Highness that, in fulfilment of the promise made by me at Jacobabad, and in accordance with the provisions of Article IV. of the new Treaty, I have arranged for the re-establishment of the Khelat Agency by the permanent deputation of Major R. G. Sandeman to represent the British Government in your Highness' dominions.

Major Sandeman has received the high and honourable designation of Agent to the Governor-General, and will correspond directly with the Government of India; he has my entire confidence, and you will find in him a friend always prepared to co-operate heartily with your Highness in securing tranquillity in Beloochistan, and promoting arrangements for the development of trade, the improvement of communications, and other measures likely to be beneficial to the interests of the Khelat and British Governments.

I feel assured I may count upon your Highness reciprocating the friendly spirit which has dictated his appointment.

Major Sandeman will have under his orders three Assistants and a medical officer, with each of whom you are already well acquainted; one of them is Mr. Bruce, another Captain Reynolds, late Assistant Superintendent at Jacobabad, the third is Captain H. Wylie, and the medical officer is Dr. O. T. Duke.

Major Sandeman has conveyed to me the wish expressed by your Highness that it may be so arranged that the officer in charge of the British relations with Khelat should be also in administrative charge of the British district of Jacobabad.

I regret that considerations of importance prevent my acceding, for the present, to your Highness' request, but, in order to meet as far as possible the object your Highness has in view, instructions have been issued which I trust will secure the cordial co-operation of the officers of districts adjacent to the frontier with Major Sandeman in reference to matters affecting the interests of Khelat.

Your Highness has already been informed by telegram, that in accordance with your previously expressed desire, Major Sandeman, on his return to Khelat is to proceed to Mekran and Punjgoor for the purpose of settling, if possible, the affairs of that distant portion of your territories. I feel sure your Highness will gladly afford Major Sandeman, while so employed, your cordial assistance and support.

In conclusion, I beg your Highness will accept the expression of my best wishes for your welfare and that of your Sirdars and people, and my earnest wish that the friendship which has been so auspiciously renewed between the Khelat and British Governments may continue and increase; and that the arrangements now determined on may result in securing the maintenance of peace, and the increase of prosperity throughout your Highness' dominions.

No. 192.

Minute recorded by the Honourable Sir E. C. Bayley when signing the Despatch to Her Majesty's Secretary of State, No. 50P., dated 23rd March 1877, on the subject of Khelat affairs.

While I cordially concur in the policy which has now been adopted in Khelat, and which is reported in this Despatch, I am sorry that I am unable to coincide in the historical review which occupies the first 10 paragraphs of the Despatch. I should not however have thought it necessary to say so, but for two reasons.

The first reason is, that these paragraphs give a view of the internal constitution of Khelat and of our relations to that State which I not only hold to be erroneous, but to have exercised a most pernicious influence in the past on our dealings with that State, and which, if allowed to prevail, may again work mischief. The second reason is, that while the Despatch agrees that the policy now working successfully is the necessary outcome of the action of the Government of India in 1872, it yet, by the adoption of the views stated in the first 10 paragraphs, virtually condemns that action, particularly by the adoption of the views of the Bombay Government quoted in the 10th paragraph.

I was not part of the Government of India in 1872, but I think it only just to say that it seems to me that the policy of 1872 was the policy which the Government of India had, at least ever since 1854, consistently enjoined. It was, however, practically enforced, though very partially, and for the time unsuccessfully, in 1872. It has now been followed to its legitimate conclusion, and its success I believe to be due to the fact that it is the only policy which has correctly recognised the true condition of the country, and which has dealt with that condition in a right and just spirit.

I desire only to say this much at present, because, in order fully to illustrate my views, it will be necessary for me to enter into a somewhat lengthened review of the past history of Khelat and of our dealings with it. This will take some time to prepare, and as it is not of immediate urgency, while it is very desirable that the present Despatch should be at once forwarded, I beg leave to send it in the shape of a memorandum, or further minute to be appended to this Despatch, and to send it by an early future mail.

(Signed) E. C. Bayley.

Calcutta, the 23rd March 1877.

No. 193.

Minute by the Honourable Sir E. C. Bayley, K.C.S.I., on Khelat Affairs.

In continuation of my Minute of the 23rd of March last, I now give at length my own view of the early history and condition of the State of Khelat, which differs in important respects from the view adopted in the first 10 paragraphs of the Despatch No. 50P., dated the 23rd March.*

I do so because the policy which from 1857 to 1872 has been followed upon the frontier of Sind, by the local authorities and by the Bombay Government, has been no doubt founded on a similar view of facts to that enunciated in the Despatch.

That policy (practically in part at least continued till 1875) can hardly be said to have had favourable results. I believe that I can show that its failure was the inevitable consequence of the mistaken view of facts on which it was based.

The present issue of the opposite line of policy for the first time practically insisted upon in 1872 by the Government of India (but not then first initiated) has been, as the closing paragraphs of the Despatch show, a signal success. This is, I believe, due wholly to the fact that it is founded on a correct appreciation of the real condition and requirements of the country, and because it deals with these on a just and equitable plan.

I trust also that I shall be able to make it clear that the general lines of policy which the Supreme Government has all along laid down have been consistent only with our later course of action towards Khelat, and that the present policy involves no change of opinion whatever on the part of the Supreme Government. I must express myself at some length, however, because I cannot otherwise explain the full importance of my disagreement from some of the simple statements of purely historical facts contained in the 4th paragraph of the Despatch.

In the first place, I believe it an error, and one fundamentally affecting the whole treatment of the question, to say that the institutions of Khelat are mainly of a feudal character, or that the position of the Chiefs resembles that of the barons during the feudal period of western society. It seems to me quite clear from (1) the history of the origin of the state of Khelat, (2) from the accounts of Masson, Pottinger, and Leech, and (3) from the action of the Khan and Chiefs at various points of the discussion during the last 19 years, that the institutions of Khelat are federal and not feudal. So far as I can discover, there is but one element, and that an accidental one, of a feudal character in the entire political constitution of the State of Khelat. Nor do I hold it to be correct to say that the position of the tribal Chiefs has never been sharply defined. On the contrary, the State of Khelat possesses an elaborate constitution of indigenous growth, which was undoubtedly thrown into a very definite shape more than 100 years ago by Nusseer Khan I. The constitution thus established seems to me, looking at the then condition of the country itself and of its surrounding States, a marvel of political sagacity and practical statesmanship. There is but little in it which, if we are wise, we should wish to change at the present day. It no doubt will require from time to time some slight modifications to meet changing circumstances, but it contains within itself, I believe, the means of effecting those changes, and in its essentials it seems admirably adapted to the condition and spirit of the people, even as they now stand.

I must observe here that the tribes of Beloochistan are very different in disposition from their Afghan neighbours. I am not prepared to explain the reason why this is so, but probably two centuries of comparatively good and settled government have had a considerable effect on the national character.

The people of Beloochistan no doubt are—especially some tribes—more or less predatory in their habits; they are brave, and if not equal to the Afghans in war, at least are by no means contemptible enemies. I can remember when they cut off Walpole Clarke's detachment of irregular horse, defeated Colonel Woodburn's column, and compelled Captain Lewis Brown, after a gallant defence, to surrender the fort of Kahun. No one who reads Sir Charles Napier's papers can doubt that he thought them no despicable antagonists.

On the other hand, they are chivalrous and true, as the Afghans are the reverse. When Walpole Clarke was killed, they themselves sent us word how bravely he had

---

* Note.—In reference to what I said in my former Minute, I may mention that I now find I signed a Despatch in June 1872, reporting the policy adopted in 1872, but that policy was virtually settled before I joined the Government.

died, and how many of their own number had fallen before his sabre, and they of their own motion erected a monument over his grave.

When Captain Brown surrendered they not only observed strictly all the terms of the capitulation, but treated our troops with honour and even with kindness. Nor are they either fanatical or bloodthirsty. No attempt has ever been made on the life of a British officer except in the case of Lieutenant Loveday, who was sacrificed to the popular fury when the whole country rose in not unjust indignation at our policy and compelled us to change it.

Neither are the people of Beloochistan wholly reckless of human life. Even in the times of Nusseer Khan I., and the theory is still accepted, no sentence of death could be executed without the Khan's sanction.

I now turn to the very curious early history of Khelat. Although much is not known about details, the following outline seems to be pretty clearly established.

Up to the beginning of the seventeenth century the people of the town and district of Khelat itself were Hindu in race and religion and had been governed by a Hindu dynasty. How this came to be the case, or how a petty Hindu State had existed when for many hundred years all its neighbours had become Mahomedan, is not clear. But there seems little doubt of the fact. However, in the early part of the seventeenth century this dynasty came to an end; it is not quite certain in what manner, nor is this important. The people, isolated and pressed apparently by the power of Persia, sought to strengthen themselves by the aid of their neighbours, and invited the younger son of a neighbouring Brahooee Mussulman Chief, a Chief, that is to say, who ruled an independent Mahomedan tribe in the neighbouring hills, to ascend the throne of Khelat.

This Chief, from whose patronymic the dynasty still is called "Kambarani," and his immediate successors, appear to have pursued a policy of surrounding themselves with men of their own or kindred tribes, and by a process not by any means unfamiliar in India, the bulk of the landed property, and in Khelat itself the major part of all political influence, passed by degrees from Hindu to Mahomedan hands, till at last the large majority of the Hindus either embraced Mahomedanism or left the country.

But Khelat proper was still a very small and uninfluential State. The Khans, therefore, gradually engaged the assistance of the Chiefs of their kindred tribes in the neighbourhood, by giving them jaghirs in Khelat itself. They were bound to furnish in return troops in certain specified quotas raised among their own independent tribes, and these Chiefs so far became no doubt quoad these jaghirs quasi-feudal vassals of the Khan's, though at first wholly independent in their own territories. By means of the troops so raised, the territories of the Khan were gradually extended through conquest, but the force furnished by Chiefs was the only one at the disposal of the Khan up to the reign of Nusseer Khan II. Thus connected together, and finding the necessity for mutual cohesion and co-operation in the presence of three formidable kingdoms—Persia, Afghanistan, and Sindh—on their west, north, and east frontiers respectively, the independent tribes, the petty State of Khelat, and their joint conquests, gradually became more or less voluntarily amalgamated into one federal State under the authority of the Khan. As will be seen, however, the conditions of the arrangement apparently still secured to the confederate Chiefs practically entire self-government within their own previously independent territory.

In the first half of the eighteenth century the Ruler was one Muhabbat Khan, and he was the chief aggrandiser of his dynasty. Adroitly joining Nadir Shah, Muhabbat Khan obtained from that conqueror Kutch Gandava and other lowland districts which had hitherto really appertained to Sindh. Jaghirs were assigned to the Chiefs in these new acquisitions, but the direct administrative authority in this part of the country seems to have been retained by the Khan, whose sway over these and other acquisitions by conquest and over his own district of Khelat has ever been more direct and positive than elsewhere. His Naibs or Governors have always there ruled the principal towns and their adjacent districts. No Naibs were, I believe, ever appointed in the territories of the Chiefs; indeed, as I am informed, the attempt to do this on the part of the present Khan was one of the main causes of the outbreak which led to his dethronement in 1863.

Muhabbat Khan, however, incurred at a later period the disfavour of the great "Ahmed Khan Durani," and was removed by him in favour of his own younger brother Nusseer Khan I. Nusseer Khan, whose reign extended through a large part of the latter half of the eighteenth century, was the great organiser of his race and the consolidator of the power of his family.

It is to "the laws of Nusseer Khan" that appeal is made at this day, and it would seem, not only from the assertion of the people now, but of early British travellers, that he reduced into a regular system the various customs which immediate exigencies had from time to time called into existence during the reigns of his predecessors: he introduced simultaneously some wise and and statesmanlike reforms as regarded especially the administration of justice and the encouragement of commerce, the just treatment of the Hindus, &c., &c.

No fully detailed account of the political constitution of Khelat as he left it has come down to us; but from the facts stated in various places by Masson, Pottinger, and Leech, confirmed by the appeals made to this constitution by the Chiefs during recent controversies, the following outline may, I think, fairly be considered as established. By one of Nusseer Khan's early predecessors the kingdom had been divided into two great provinces, Sarawan and Jalawan, answering to highland and lowland, and "Sirdarships" or Supreme Chiefships had been established over each, and these Chiefships were made hereditary, that of Sarawan in the Raisani, and that of Jalawan in the Zehri, family.

These Sirdars possessed an important authority in affairs of State, though apparently rather consultative than executive; they occupied chairs in durbar on the right and left hand of the Khan, and were admitted to some substantial share in all deliberations affecting the kingdom generally.

Another curious arrangement was also continued as it had been handed down from the first origin of the Kambarani dynasty. The Wuzeership was hereditary in a family, which, though converted to Mahomedanism, was of indigenous Hindu origin, and this mode of selecting the Wuzeer was maintained.

It may, I think, also be fairly gathered that, save so far as it may have been controlled by the consultative functions of the two Chiefs and by the Wuzeer, the power of the Khan as regards external matters was supreme and absolute.* He could make peace or war on behalf of the State. He had a right to call out any or all of the levies which each Chief was bound to furnish, and could utilise them for war or the maintenance of order. He could make treaties binding on the State, although it would seem that, if any particular Chief was endamaged by such treaty, he had a claim for compensation.

As regards internal authority, the Chief had apparently power to a certain extent to make general laws for the State. No sentence of death could be executed without his confirmation. There was a general right of appeal to the Khan, especially in regard to boundary questions.

Within the small district of Khelat itself and the conquered and annexed territories the Khan ruled directly by his Naibs or Governors. But within their own territories, subject to the exceptions above noticed, the Chiefs seem to have had almost entire freedom of internal self-government. The Chiefs themselves were elected by the elders of the tribes, and their election was subject to the confirmation of the Khan, but this confirmation once given, the Chiefs were only bound to obey the Khan in external matters, to submit to his orders when appeals were made, to require his confirmation to sentences of death, and to furnish their quota of troops when called upon, and in some cases also it would seem that they paid a small tribute.

On the other hand, the Chiefs elected the Khan on the occasion of a vacancy, though no doubt the Khanship was practically hereditary in the Kambarani family. And what was a very important point and one which the Chiefs very carefully guarded, the Khan had no other armed force whereby to maintain his authority, except that of the levies furnished by the Chiefs.

It seems to me that, as this outline indicates, Nusseer Khan's constitution was merely the consolidation into a regular system of the various agreements and compromises which had been arranged during a century and a half of mutual relations between the Khan and the Chiefs, and to me it seems also that it was framed with singular wisdom. To call this system "feudal" is surely to use an absolute misnomer, and one which gives wholly incorrect impressions as to the condition of the people and the relative positions of the Khan and of his Chiefs. There was, as above noticed, no doubt one feudal element, and one only, in the constitution of Beloochistan as thus settled, viz., that the Chiefs of the tribes received jaghirs in the Khan's own personal territories on condition of maintaining troops for the common service of the Government; but this was an accidental not an essential incident of the constitution.

As a matter of history, the kingdom of Khelat was, as I have shown above, founded by a voluntary federation, and this federation has naturally impressed its character on the institutions of the country, and it is remarkable that in 1869, when the Chiefs put forward the statement of their grievances, to which they have since steadfastly adhered,

* NOTE.—The Chiefs generally had perhaps some sort of share even in the decision of external matters, but it is not clear whether it was direct or merely through the two chief Sirdars as their representatives.

they made it one of their chief demands that all engagements with the British Government should be made not by the Khan personally, but by him as the head of the Belooch Confederation.

Indeed, the Chiefs themselves, though their appointment is subject to the confirmation of the Khan (it is recorded that by Nusseer Khan I. this confirmation was always given as a matter of course), are not as regards their tribal territory feudal barons exercising personal and hereditary authority over vassals who have little or no voice in their own government, and who are bound by the tenure of their lands to follow their Chiefs in war or politics. On the contrary, the Chiefs are merely the elective heads of free communities made up of subdivisions of tribes, and beneath these again, of villages, the heads of which are all elective. It is true that the higher the authority the more usual the selection from the family of the elective head or Chief; but this has not, I believe, by any means been an invariable rule.

No doubt on forming the Confederation by which the kingdom of Khelat was formed, the chiefs and their tribes parted with something of their external independence, and even agreed to make their own election subject to the confirmation of the Khan, and accepted a few general laws to guide them in their internal administration. But they still otherwise retained, and their people retained also, the full right of self-government. On the other hand, the Chiefs appear from the first to have had either directly or through their representatives some voice in the conduct of the external affairs of the Confederation, and an absolute voice in the election of their federal head, the Khan.

Surely, whatever its merits or demerits, nothing can be further from a truly feudal constitution than this system. I have been led to dwell on this point at length because I think it is exactly the error of treating that institution as feudal which has been the real cause of all the recent difficulties and complications in Khelat.

It is necessary for me, however, first to show that the local authorities in Sind held a totally different opinion on the point. For example, Sir W. Merewether in 1870, while remarking on a report from Colonel Phayre, thus spoke of the claims of the Chiefs made in December 1869, who claimed that the treaty with the British Government was made with the Khan merely as Chief of the Brahooee confederacy. On this point Sir W. Merewether, setting his opinion be it remembered against the unanimous assertion of the Chiefs, says:—

"The treaty is undoubtedly with the Khan as responsible Ruler of Beloochistan and not merely as head of a confederacy. This is one of the unfortunate errors the Chiefs will persist in."

Again, in his letter of the 26th January 1870, paragraphs 35, 36, and 37, Sir W. Merewether writes—

"Exactly the same course of events that occurred in Beloochistan is now going on in Afghanistan. His Highness the Amir, finding it impossible to trust to the doubtful support of his nobles and their treacherous levies, is putting an end to the feudal system * * * Colonel Phayre conceives * * that the Chiefs being a grievously ill-used set of people, measures should be taken to compel His Highness the Khan to treat them in a different manner. * * * * It is scarcely necessary to point out that this would now be a style of interference totally opposed to the orders of Government and unjust to His Highness the Khan. * * * It would destroy his power for good as Ruler of the country, and it would infallibly lead to greater dissensions than had ever occurred before, a scramble for power, ending in the country being parcelled out among a number of rival chieftains."

Again, on the margin of Colonel Phayre's report of the 6th December 1869, No. 1725, Sir W. Merewether writes as follows, commenting on Colonel Phayre's strictures upon the mercenary levies of the Khan:—

"It has to be proved that this system is a bad one. No Government, with a lot of ambitious Chiefs fighting for powers, would indeed be a dangerous matter in a country next to ours * * * ."

It is therefore the more necessary that there should be a strong Government in Beloochistan, and not that the country should be parcelled out among a number of mountain Chiefs.

But the entire view of the local authorities is well summarised in part of a minute recorded by Sir Seymour Fitzgerald, then Governor of Bombay, on the 10th February 1871. He writes thus:—

"Colonel Phayre seems to consider that the Chiefs have rights which it is our duty to see maintained, and he quotes from despatches written at various times by General Jacob in support of his views.

"But the state of affairs in General Jacob's time was very different from what it is now. In truth the change appears to be taking place in Beloochistan of which history gives so many examples in the old world, when feudal relations between a Sovereign and his Chiefs are, from the force of circumstances, from the growing power of the Sovereign, from his ability to maintain a regular force, and in consequence to suppress rebellion, succeeded by a regime in which the power of the Sovereign become paramount and his feudatories take the diminished rank of powerful subjects. I do not believe it our policy to prevent this result."

I do not stop to discuss the abstract theories laid down in this passage. All I have to say is that the argument it contains is, as I hold, founded on two cardinal errors. It assumes that the relations of the Chiefs were feudal and not federal, an assumption which I have tried to demonstrate above is opposed to the deduction from history and to actual fact.

It assumes also that the Sovereign had power to crush his so-called feudatories and to compel them to assume the position of subjects. I shall now proceed to show that this was an error in fact, and that the present Khan's endeavours to effect this object throughout his reign, although backed by the entire moral support of the local British authorities, have wholly failed. It was this attempt that has been the real cause of the disorder and anarchy which has so long prevailed in Khelat.

It has been, I believe, the practical recognition of that error now, which has at once solved all difficulties and has restored peace and order. But to show this I must enter at considerable length into the actual story of our relations with Khelat.

I will premise that the rough constitution, which had grown up in substance by voluntary arrangements since the inauguration of the Kambarani dynasty, had worked at least fairly well for some hundred and fifty years, up to the time, that is to say, of Nusseer Khan I.; and it may be said that its consolidation under him secured to the country nearly another century of substantial prosperity and peaceful government, although the character of his immediate successors was most unpromising. His son, Mahmud Khan, was indolent and debauched. Mehrab Khan, his grandson, was ambitious, violent, and cruel. Still the position of the Khan, Chiefs, and people, appears, according to the statement of English travellers, to have remained materially unchanged. Something of this, perhaps, was owing to the personal character of Nusseer Khan I., who had, according to Leech, made himself the spiritual as well as the temporal head of the people, and a part of the reverence so paid to him may have descended to his successors. The same traveller, indeed, relates that, even after Mehrab Khan had done much to alienate the people by his cruelties, the wild Brahooees from the hills used to kiss his door-posts as they passed.

Mehrab Khan was, however, the first to make a breach, and as it proved a fatal one, in the constitution of Nusseer Khan I., by removing the hereditary Wuzeer and by appointing a man of another family, a creature of his own, to the office. It is unnecessary to recapitulate here this sad story: Mehrab Khan fell fighting against us; and we placed the descendant of another branch of the Kambarani family on the throne without consulting the Chiefs, and disposed of part of the country as by right of conquest.

The Chiefs elected according to their constitution the son of Mehrab Khan as their Khan; the country rose as one man against us and our nominee. We were wise enough (under Outram's advice) to recognise the popular sense of right, and to reinstate Mehrab Khan's son. That act of justice has stood us in good stead and has made the people understand that, however mistaken we may be, our intentions are honest and our instincts equitable. Indeed, but for their reliance on our good intentions, our recent difficulties with these people would hardly have been so easily arranged, nor would they have been so long patient in the hope of our ultimately doing them right.

Mehrab's son was installed as Nusseer Khan II. At first matters went on pretty smoothly, but trouble soon arose. The treachery of the last representative of the hereditary family of Wuzeers had rendered a choice from that family impossible, and, as in the case of Mehrab Khan, disturbance arose from the substitution of a favourite in the place of the hereditary Wuzeer. This man for his own aggrandisement endeavoured to sow dissension between the Khan and Chiefs, and to exalt the Khan's authority at the expense* of that of the Chiefs. This favourite, however, was removed, and for a time the Chiefs and the Khan were reconciled. The Khan then fell into other and still worse hands, and under the advice of these new favourites apparently gave grievous offence to the Chiefs in various ways, but particularly by raising a small body of mercenary troops, a measure which the Chiefs regarded not unnaturally as a serious encroachment on their material power. The Khan, however, had apparently again shown signs of coming to amicable arrangement with the Chiefs, when in 1857 he died suddenly, as there is good reason to believe from poison administered by the new Wuzeer and his adherents, who feared he was about to abandon them.

* This had been the case also with Mehrab Khan's favourite; but, as is related in touching words by Leech, Mehrab Khan, though too late, described himself as alive to the folly of this policy, and expressed his regret at his past acts of ambitious violence, and his determination to rule in concert with his Chiefs for the future.

Khodadad Khan, the present Khan and brother of Nusseer Khan II., was then a mere boy, and was said to have been already under the influence of the favourites, and even to have connived at their crime.

Be this as it may, matters were so managed that the Chiefs assembled in the usual way, and their choice fell upon Khodadad, who was the natural heir.

The struggle which has just terminated began from that day. The Chiefs seem after his election to have remonstrated somewhat rudely and sternly with the Khan in regard to the grievances which they considered themselves to have experienced during the latter years of the reign of Nusseer Khan II., and to have desired their redress. Khodadad's first act under the advice of his Wuzeer was without warning to open fire with his guns upon the Chiefs as they lay encamped near the city of Khelat. They fled at once and assumed an attitude of hostility.

Lieutenant Macaulay, who was in communication with them, says, however, that the main body of them, even then, still sought nothing beyond the removal of the evil advisers of the Khan.

Azaad Khan of Kharan, however, who shortly afterwards assumed the lead of the movement, would appear to have had more ambitious views. An attempt made by Sir Bartle Frere and General Jacob to arrange matters failed, the Chiefs having been led by the intrigues of two of the Khan's unworthy favourites (Gool Mahomed and Gunga Ram) to distrust the sincerity of the British Government. However, the Khan selected from among his "Khanazads," or household slaves, a new Wuzeer, one Shahgassee Wullee Mahomed. I see that General Jacob, writing to Sir H. Green, approves at this crisis of the action of the Chiefs.

Meanwhile the insurrection spread and Azaad Khan put forward a descendant of Muhabbat Khan's line as a claimant for the throne.

His favourites endeavoured to persuade the Khan that this was done by British influence, but in vain. And he appealed to Major Green, the then Agent, for assistance. Major Green promptly responded, and addressed the Chiefs. These again disclaimed all disloyal intention, but pressed generally for a redress of their grievances.

Major Green called upon them in the first place to show their loyalty by driving away Azaad Khan and the representative of Muhabbat Khan, whom he supported, and even to suppress an insurrection which had meanwhile broken out in Mekran.

They cheerfully complied with everything Major Green asked, and returned to Khelat, bringing the rebel Chiefs from Mekran prisoners. With this exhibition of their loyalty the revolt for the time being terminated, but there is nothing to be traced as to the redress of the Chiefs' grievances, nor apparently was even any inquiry made into them. There is nothing in fact to show that the British authorities exerted themselves for this object.

Shortly after this, Major Green appears to have advised the Khan to attack the Murrees, who certainly seem to have given ground for complaint; and subsequently by the aid of a British gunboat the Khan made a successful progress through Mekran, re-asserting his authority in that province.

The Government of India noticed these proceedings by commending Major Green's tact, temper, and perseverance, but at the same time distinctly said that the Government of India would not fight the Khan's battles against his own feudatories, and an intimation was conveyed to Major Green that he had shown a disposition to interfere more actively than the state of affairs demanded, or than treaty obligations warranted. Nothing, however, was done by the local authorities beyond continuing the support which had been given to the Khan's authority, and the Khan who, as it will be seen, had from the first ignored the grievances of his Chiefs and taken up a line of policy hostile to them, was encouraged in it, and made, it is stated, no voluntary effort to secure good-will, but on the contrary gave himself up to vice and excess.

Naturally the country fell into disorder, though from time to time temporary improvements followed pressure on the part of the Agent.

In August 1860 Major Merewether wrote:—

"The absence at any time of the support we have been in the habit of according to His Highness in the measures for the improvement of his territory, or the existence, even for a short time, of the feeling that we could or would no longer accord that support, would at once lead to the dismemberment of the kingdom.

These words amount to a direct admission that the local authorities were in the habit of giving assistance to the Khan "in the improvement of his country," and that this support alone kept him in his throne. As a matter of fact, the opposing interests only could be those of the Chiefs (and this the formulated statement of their grievances in 1869 proves) against whom the Government of India had directed there should be no interference. Apparently at this time it had already come to be considered that the "improvement of the country" and the maintenance of the Khan's absolute authority, were synonymous terms. But the Government of India seem to have overlooked this. Things went on for some time still further. The Khan, it is recorded, showed the Chiefs every discourtesy possible, and at last his action in this respect and his general misconduct drew down a serious warning from the Political Agent,—the only instance up to 1872 of any active interference of any sort in favour of the Chiefs, on the part of the local authorities.

This remonstrance had, however, no effect, and matters went on from bad to worse. Early in 1861 the Chief of the Jalawans, Taj Mahomed, broke into revolt.* But he was brought into order by the Sarawan Sirdar, who, however, did not disguise his sympathy with Taj Mahomed. Later in the year the Jam of Lus Beyla and the Mingul tribe, with which he was connected by marriage, rebelled. The Khan, however, managed for the time to coerce them. The next year passed quietly, but the country was, it was reported by the local authorities, evidently seething with discontent. In March 1863 the storm burst. Sherdil Khan, a cousin of the Khan's, attempted his assassination, but succeeded only in badly wounding him.

* The immediate cause of his outbreak is said to have been a marked insult offered to him by the Khan.

It was at a time when all the Chiefs were assembled; Sherdil Khan fled to their tents. This was a signal for a general insurrection, which was gradually successful, and Sherdil Khan was declared Khan, while Khodadad Khan retired with a small body of followers to a village near the British frontier.

Oddly enough an incident now occurred which showed how strongly the constitutional principle prevailed among the Chiefs. A small minority still adhering to Khodadad Khan, Sherdil's own supporters proposed that they should proceed to a regular and formal election. Preparations were accordingly made for this. But on the eve of the election Sherdil was killed in a personal brawl with a mercenary follower, and the Chiefs, having no other candidate before them when the election took place, again selected Khodadad Khan, after, it is said, taking from him agreements for his better treatment of them in future.

The Khan took the Chiefs of Jalawan and Sarawan to reside with him at his capital, and entered into marriage relations with them, but peace was not of long continuance. The Jam of Lus Beyla and the Mingul Chiefs again broke out in revolt, though Noordeen, the Chief of the Minguls, had taken the lead in the re-election of Khodadad.

For the time this insurrection was put down, the contingent of Taj Mahomed, the Chief of the Jalawan, loyally aiding in its suppression. Within another year, however, the Murrees attacked Kutch Gundava, and about the same time the Khan suddenly accused Taj Mahomed, the Chief of the Jalawan, of attempting to seduce his regular troops from their allegiance. He was seized after a short skirmish and imprisoned; thereupon Moolla Mahomed, the Chief of the Sarawan, fled from Khelat, and became a discontented wanderer, ready to instigate or lead revolt. In 1867, before he had been a year in prison, Taj Mahomed died. The great body of the Chiefs declared he had been poisoned. Later in the year Moolla Mahomed returned and set up the standard of revolt; few Chiefs joined him, and he was defeated and again fled. Failing in getting shelter from the Murrees, he asked Sir H. Green to intercede for him with the Khan. This the Agent promised to do, provided both parties would agree to abide by his decision, and the Khan assenting an interview took place, which for the moment satisfied the immediately contending parties. Sir H. Green, in reporting this interview, admitted that the Khan was only the head of semi-independent tribes, and that it was for the interest of the British Government to stand well with both parties. Nevertheless, in effect, the Agent supported the Khan entirely. He had before described Taj Mahomed as a desperate intriguer and traitor, and had expressed an opinion that so long as he was at liberty the Khan's life was not safe. Now he praised the Khan's mode of dealing with his Chiefs, and recommended the recognition of his loyal conduct by the grant of an extra subsidy. Before the year was out, however, there was a fresh outbreak, in which the Minguls, the Jam of Lus Beyla, and Azaad Khan of Kharan took part. After some indecisive fighting, negociations took place, and the Khan made certain promises, the chief of which was an engagement to restore to the revolted Chiefs and to Moolla Mahomed "all the land which they or he had held, or been deprived of, since the days "of Nusseer Khan."

Sir W. Merewether was now Chief Commissioner in Sindh, and he reported that the outbreak had been owing to the general aversion of the nobles to the Khan, "who has "insanely neglected to follow the excellent advice given him by Sir Henry Green, and "has entirely alienated the nobles of the country from himself." Sir W. Merewether, however, subsequently qualified these words, saying that there had been faults on both sides, "the Khan having from suspicion and jealousy withheld certain privileges which "had led to revolt and confiscation in reprisal."

The British Agent, who had been withdrawn ever since Khodadad's dethronement in 1863–64, was now restored, and Captain Harrison being deputed as Agent, the Chiefs represented mainly by Alladina Khoord and Moolla Mahomed, waited on him, and for the first time laid before him a full and regularly formulated statement of their public and private grievances.

The latter may for the present be neglected, but the former were contained in a very striking document, of which one article indeed related to the death of Taj Mahomed and was of a temporary character, but the gist of the remainder was a demand for the restoration of the political status of the country as established by Nusseer Khan I. The Chiefs claimed, that is to say :—

1st. The observance of the laws and forms of Government of Nusseer Khan I.

2nd. The disbandment of the mercenary troops and the restoration to the Chiefs of the jaghirs assigned for the support of the federal levies.

3rd. The reversal of the Khan's act in appointing his own son to the Sirdarship of the Jalawan instead of appointing one of the family in which that office was hereditary.

4th. The restoration to the Chiefs or their representatives of the right as of old to share in the civil and military councils of the State.

5th. That all treaty engagements should be made with the British Government by the Khan, not simply as Khan but as head of the Belooch Confederation.

6th. That since it had become impossible to continue the selection of the Wuzeer from the family in which that office had been hereditary, the Chiefs asked that the office might now be made elective, the Wuzeer being elected by the Chiefs.

Sir W. Merewether, who was still Commissioner in Sindh, expressed no opinion on these clauses at the time, but the Khan at once yielded the point as to the Sirdarship of the Jalawan, and in 1870 Sir W. Merewether admitted that the 4th clause was correct as regards the Sirdars of Jalawan and Sarawan, and allowed subsequently that its extension in some degree to other Chiefs might not be unfair, and even that the 1st might be granted if the Chiefs would be moderate, but he overruled entirely the 2nd, 5th, and 6th.

However much the Chiefs' claims may be disputed as of right, or on the ground of expediency, still it has never been denied, even by Sir W. Merewether, that the exposition of the actual state of facts in this document as to the position taken up by the Khan towards the Chiefs was in substance correct.

It may therefore, I think, be taken as certain that the laws of Nasir Khan I. had practically been abrogated, mercenary troops largely entertained,* and the jaghirs of the federal troops resumed to pay for the mercenary troops; that the rule of succession to the Jalawan Sirdarships had been set aside, and that the Chiefs had been excluded from all share in the Government.

* As a matter of fact, the small body organised by Nusseer Khan II., and the raising of which was no doubt one of the acts that gave offence to the Chiefs, had been raised to a far larger and really formidable amount by Khodadad Khan.

Neither is it to be disputed that up to the time of Mehrab Khan† there had been no such infractions of these customs,‡ and indeed there had been but very partial infractions in the time of his son Nusseer Khan II., and even these had been resented by the Chiefs.

† See Masson, Pottinger, and Leech's accounts generally.

‡ Except the fatal mistake as to the appointment of his favourite as Wuzeer.

It is clear, therefore, that the conduct of Khodadad Khan, which had alienated the Chiefs—and of which they complained as a violation of the federal pact by which the State was constituted, and to which they attributed all the disorders of the State—was in substance a series of invasions of the political power of the Chiefs.

I return, however, to the course of events. Nothing immediately came of the negociation thus commenced in 1869 through Captain Harrison, except a flat refusal by the Khan to yield anything. He subsequently agreed, indeed, to make large concessions, but at the last moment the managers of the Chiefs' party withdrew, though the exact reason why they did so is not known, as the British authorities refused to listen to Moolla Mahomed's explanation on this point.

Shortly after this, another insurrection broke out in Lus Beyla, which was completely suppressed by the Khan's troops. In 1871, however, a more general and formidable revolt occurred.

Various reasons were given for this rising. But Colonel Phayre, then in Civil employ in Sind, asked if we could afford any longer to ignore the national feeling, the result of absolute despair.

He said, "there is not a man of any influence who does not feel keenly that our "connexion with the Khan involves a certain amount of responsibility for his acts as "a ruler, because both the Khan himself and they too are perfectly well aware that, "if it were not for our support, he must either respect the just rights of the people or "lose his throne." He added at various times that the relation of the Khan and Chiefs was really federal, and that the Chiefs had rights which ought to be respected.

Colonel Phayre was, I believe, quite right, but pressing these views beyond the point of official decorum was subsequently removed from his appointment; still the Government of Bombay themselves referred the rebellion to the non-satisfaction of the claims of the Chiefs made in 1869, and this opinion was subsequently corroborated by the words of the Chiefs themselves.

The Government of India was now (in 1871) called upon by both Sir W. Merewether and the Government of Bombay to support the Khan by force of arms.

It was then argued (as I have shown above*) in substance that the idea that the Chiefs possessed anything but certain, more or less obsolete, feudal rights was absurd, it was argued at length that even those feudal rights were relics of a past age, and unsuited to modern times, incapable of preservation, and that it was impossible to revert to the past organisation or in any way to build it up again. It was urged that it was necessary to our position in the frontier to have a settled Government on the frontier, and that this could now only be gained by supporting the Khan's absolute authority by force of arms, if necessary, against the claims and pretensions of the Chiefs.

The Government of India absolutely refused to have recourse to arms in support of the Khan, but in order to terminate the disputes, desired both parties to submit their disputes to the arbitration of the British authorities, promising to the Khan a payment of one lakh of rupees if these terms were fully accepted and acted upon.

The Government of India insisted also that the Khan should be bound by the Commissioner's arbitration, and should agree to remedy all the well-founded complaints of the Chiefs in regard to confiscation of property, resumption of jaghirs, and oppressive taxation, and the Government of India also required him to agree to such a change in the administration as to give the principal Chiefs a due share in the administration of the country.

I cannot consider that, as the 4th paragraph of the present Despatch intimates, these conditions of 1872 involved any departure from the policy which the Government of India had hitherto enjoined on the local authorities. That policy had certainly been not to take the Khan's part against the Chiefs.

It is, however, quite true, no doubt, that since 1857 a contrary policy had practically been adopted by the Government of Bombay and by the local authorities in Sind.

It is in fact admitted again and again by Sir W. Merewether and by numerous authorities throughout the correspondence, that it was the moral support of the British Government alone which maintained the Khan on his throne from which he had been once actually driven by the Chiefs, and, as is evident from what has been already said, the opposition of the Chiefs, by which alone the Khan's position was threatened, arose entirely from the fact that the Khan had very materially invaded the authority which previous to his time the Chiefs enjoyed, and the Chiefs themselves have in plain words declared the same thing again and again, avowing that this invasion of their rights was the main cause of their hostility. The support therefore which the local authorities had so long and so effectively given to the Khan was in effect support given to him in aggressive action against the Chiefs' rights.

But the Government of India had never either fully accepted this theory of the relative position of the Khan and his subjects, nor the policy of interference based on it; on the contrary, they had again and again expressly forbidden the latter; when, therefore, Sir W. Merewether justified the policy of supporting the Khan's absolute authority on grounds of expediency, and the Government of Bombay supported him in urging the Government of India to carry it out to its logical conclusion, and to support the Khan by force of arms against the Chiefs, the Government of India in absolutely refusing this request, only maintained the policy which it had prescribed (though it had hardly enforced) from the first, and the recognition of the Chiefs' rights by the Government of India in 1872, though never pronounced, was hardly then made for the first time.

* See Sir Seymour Fitzgerald's minute quoted at page 355.

A brief notice of events down to the present deputation of Major Sandeman will suffice to carry on the narrative by which I have endeavoured to elucidate and substantiate the above contention.

While the correspondence was going on between the local authorities and the Government of India, the Khan's Vakil had an interview with the Chiefs; they again took their stand on their formulated grievances of 1869, and the Vakil agreed to recommend compliance to the Khan. The Khan, however, indignantly repudiated these terms, and was supported by the strong approval of Sir W. Merewether; the Vakil was therefore disgraced and dismissed.

At length, after much hesitation and consultation, both sides agreed to the terms laid down by the Government of India, and Sir W. Merewether undertook the arbitration.

Considering the strong views already expressed by Sir W. Merewether, it was hardly to be doubted what shape that arbitration would assume.

He told the Chiefs that the Khan (who it is to be remembered began the quarrel immediately after his election by treacherously turning his guns on their encampment without warning) had committed no fault or error whatever, except perhaps that he had been too lenient. He further said that the entire fault lay with the Chiefs, who deserved everything that the Khan had done against them. He told them that they must absolutely submit themselves to the Khan, and implicitly obey him, and informed them that the rights which they had claimed never had any existence, and that no such limitations as they pretended had been placed on the authority of the Khan by Nusseer Khan I.*

* Sir W. Merewether says Nusseer Khan simply; the Chiefs certainly referred to Nusseer Khan I., but there is in several paragraphs an evident confusion between the two Chiefs of that name; as for example in paragraph 2 of his letter of the 26th January 1870, No. 42, Sir W. Merewether talks of Gul Mahomed having been Wuzeer to the Great Nusseer Khan. The Great Nusseer Khan was Nusseer Khan I., and Gul Mahomed was certainly never Wuzeer to him.

On the other hand, he promised that if they would now obey the Khan without hesitation, and if they would restore the property which they had plundered from the Khan's subjects and from the kafilas in the Bolan Pass,† he would recommend the Khan to restore to them the jaghirs and allowances which had been forfeited.

† The closing of the passes is a kind of recognised way by which malcontents make known their grievances, as "Baharwuttia," or wholesale dacoity, is in Central India.

It will be observed that these terms take no notice of the third condition insisted by the Government of India, viz., the admission of the principal Chiefs to a share in the Government. So far as I have been able to discover, this condition was absolutely ignored.

It need hardly be said that these terms did not satisfy the Chiefs, though they made partial attempts to recover the value of the property recovered from the kafilas, and something less than half of the estimated loss having been collected, the Khan consented to advance the balance required to complete the accounts, and compensation was made to the owners of the kafilas whose claims the Amir of Cabul was pressing somewhat urgently.

But this settlement was not calculated to produce final peace, and the Khan, it was soon seen, was as discontented as the Chiefs. He was well aware that there was no hope of compelling the subjection of the Chiefs without the use of force, and this the Government of India had refused to supply; on this as an ultimate resort he had doubtless calculated, and he apparently well understood he had little prospect of maintaining his policy successfully, or indeed of retaining his throne, from which he had been already once ousted, without such material support. He showed his discontent by various means, and ceased from attempting to repress, if he did not actually encourage, the fresh disorders which soon sprung up. Still further to complicate matters the Khan quarrelled with his Wuzeer Shahgassee Mahomed,‡ who had long been his most faithful and trusted supporter. He got a new set of advisers, who were apparently not well-wishers of the British Government. By a threat of withdrawing the Agent the Khan was compelled to dismiss these men, but did little else, and when Lord Northbrook saw him, he thought apparently of little but their restoration.

‡ I have learned that their quarrel arose from domestic matters and that the Khan had good ground for taking offence.

Continued disturbances followed, which the Khan did nothing to repress or compose, and in spite of the efforts of the Wuzeer, aided by Moolla Mahomed Raisani, the country fell day by day into greater confusion. At length, in May 1873, Sir W. Merewether called on Major Harrison, the Agent, to withdraw, and on his doing so the Wuzeer withdrew with him. The reasons assigned were:—

1st. That the Khan persisted in following the advice of certain evil advisers rather than that of the Political Agent.

2nd. That the Khan was persistent in demanding the restoration of the three advisers banished to Sind.

3rd. That he evaded all means for securing the peace of the border, and that he neglected all arrangements for the good government of Lus Beyla, and for the suppression of outrages on the British frontier.

The action taken by Sir W. Merewether was approved by the Government of India, and payment of the Khan's subsidy was suspended.

There is little to add; the practical result was that plundering and anarchy prevailed over the whole country save in the immediate neighbourhood of Khelat and on the Punjab frontier; the Bolan Pass remained closed to traffic for some three years, and the Khan maintained an unfriendly attitude towards us.

Sir W. Merewether at one time proposed the despatch of a British force to bring the Khan to his senses, but the Government of India refused, thinking that he had committed no act of a hostile character sufficient to justify such a course.

At last the Murree Chiefs on the Punjab border addressed Major Sandeman, begging his interference so far as their interests were concerned, and he was permitted to use his efforts in the matter, though not until another formidable insurrection was actually imminent, which would probably have ended in the Khan's death or dethronement.

The policy which Major Sandeman has followed has been the recognition of rights, claims, and the satisfaction for injuries on both sides, the practical adoption, that is to say, of the policy all along enjoined by the Government of India, and especially enforced by them in 1872, though no doubt an entire reversal of that followed for many years by the local authorities in Sind. I need not further follow what is said of the course of Major Sandeman's action; nor do I in the least dissent from the account of his success given in paragraph 23 of the Despatch; on the contrary, I entirely endorse it.

My conviction is that the policy which he has adopted, and which has so far proved successful, is precisely that which the Government of India has all along enjoined, rather than the result of an accidental departure from that policy in 1872.

It is, I believe, founded on a correct appreciation of the real state of the country as elucidated by its past history, and the application to that state of a simple, equitable, straightforward, and conciliatory course of action.

It is true that, in order to remedy the state of anarchy into which the country fell, we have been compelled to interfere between the Chiefs and the Khan more than it was the original policy or wish of the Government of India to do. It is true also that after the bitterness produced by the injuries and bloodshed of the past years it may be necessary to maintain this interference more or less for some time. But as matters settle down to their ancient condition the less interference is exercised, and the more we return to our original policy, except in case of urgency, the greater will be our influence, and the more vigorous the Native Government.

It is because the first ten paragraphs of the Despatch seem to differ from this view, and to express approbation of the policy previously enforced on the Sind frontier by the local authorities that I have expressed my dissent from them.

I cannot disguise my own opinion that this policy was founded on a grave misapprehension of the mutual relations of the Khan and the Chiefs, and that it dealt with these in a method that was neither just nor wise. The relations between the Chiefs and the Khan were never feudal, nor were they even as feudal, obsolete, and undeserving of consideration.

This is not the place for a discussion on feudalism. I am willing to admit, for the sake of argument, that it may be desirable in the abstract that feudalism should be crushed by the growing power of the Crown. When this is a natural process, it means that a majority of the people go with the Crown against the feudal Chiefs, and that feudalism has played its part. But here, neither was the system feudal, nor were the majority of the people opposed to it; on the contrary, as events have shown, the people are passionately attached to their existing form of Government, and there can be no reasonable doubt that if the parties had been left to themselves without external assistance the Khan, who attempted to make himself absolute, would long since have been driven from the country. As it was, our moral support has enabled him to carry on his scheme of "Thorough" for some 19 years, during which there were seven general revolts, besides numerous minor disturbances; and this policy finally ended in estranging from us alike the Khan and the people, in closing for three years all the external routes of communications, and in reducing the country to a complete state of anarchy. The return to the opposite line of policy, the recognition of the fact that the Chiefs and the Khan have, if not co-equal, at least co-existing rights, and the treatment of their quarrel on this basis, has at any rate in less than nine months resulted in reconciling heartily to the British Government both the Khan and the Chiefs, and in the establishment of some sort of cordiality between the latter themselves. It has opened again the routes of external communication and enabled them to be traversed in safety, and it has restored to the entire country peace, order, and rapidly returning prosperity, though of course it is not to be expected that this happy state of things will be, especially at first, wholly unexampled.

I think, therefore, that, even judging by results, there can be no question as to the merits of the two rival policies, and I have endeavoured to show that there should be none on à priori grounds. It is because the Despatch seems to lend approval to the early local policy, and to deal with the recent policy as apparently, however fortunate, the accidental result of independent action in 1872, that I have thought it necessary to put on record this Minute, and, as far as I can, to show that the policy of 1872 was not only essentially right, but a necessary development of the principles consistently laid down from the first by the Government of India; at the same time I have endeavoured to show also that the opposite policy is clearly responsible for all the anarchy, misery, and bloodshed of the past nineteen years, and, so far from being deserving of praise, it was, I believe, (however honourable and conscientious the men who initiated it, carried it out, and who have defended it,) founded on fundamental errors, both of fact and principle. I think it therefore my duty to express my entire dissent from the adoption of any allegation of fact, or from any implied approbation of the principles on which it was based, or from any measure which may render possible the reversion to such a policy in the future.

Government of India. Foreign Department. Political.

To the most Hon. the Marquis of Salisbury, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India. Encls. Nos. 74 to 193.

My Lord Marquis, Fort William, 23rd March 1877.

The letters we have from time to time addressed to your Lordship on the state of our Western border, the unsettled condition of Khelat, and our policy in reference thereto, will have furnished Her Majesty's Government with information up to a recent date of the general progress of affairs in that quarter. We have now to report the completion of arrangements for what is we trust a satisfactory and durable settlement of the various questions which in connexion with this subject have long caused us serious anxiety.

2. Your Lordship, in your reply to our letter of the 22nd January 1875, expressed the hope of Her Majesty's Government, that should the measures then reported by us for improving the condition of our Western Frontier produce their anticipated results, an early opportunity might be taken of again placing the relations between the Government of India and the Khan of Khelat on the friendly footing provided by the Treaty of 1854, and of thus "re-establishing a position of affairs desirable in the interests of the "British Government and essential to the continued existence of Khelat as an inde-"pendent State."

3. This injunction we have kept steadily in view throughout our dealings with the Khan, and we are hopeful that the information we now place before your Lordship may secure for our proceedings the approval of Her Majesty's Government. But as these proceedings may appear to involve a departure from the policy of our previous relations with Khelat, we deem it desirable to recapitulate briefly the history of those relations. This will sufficiently explain the causes and character of the situation we have had to deal with in our endeavours to give effect to the wishes of Her Majesty's Government, as expressed in your Lordship's above-mentioned letter.

4. The political institutions of Khelat are, as your Lordship is aware, in the main of a feudal character; that is to say, the Khan rules, not directly over the people, but over a number of tribal Chiefs, who in turn exercise over their own tribes a power which has never been sharply defined, but which practically resembles that of the great barons during the feudal period of Western society. The Khan's personal possessions are comparatively small; and the people who obey the direct authority of his Highness and his officers are few in number. The bulk of the population of Beloochistan belongs to one or other of the numerous tribes or clans included in the two great groups of the Sarawans and Jalawans. The respective Chiefs of these two tribal sections, in association with an hereditary Prime Minister, have at all times been recognised throughout Beloochistan as the constitutional advisers of its Ruler. The hereditary Prime Minister represents the original inhabitants, and present trading and agricultural population, of the Khanate, and without reference to these three Councillors nothing of importance can be undertaken by the Khan, in accordance with that unbroken national tradition which must be regarded as the constitutional basis of the paramount power in Khelat. These three personages occupy a prominent position throughout the history of the Khanate; the two hereditary Councillors as the champions of the nobles, and the hereditary Minister as the representative of the Khan's personal authority. From their incessant struggles for influence and power, rather than from anything that can properly be called popular discontent, have arisen most of the troubles which have hitherto distracted the Khanate. The history of Khelat is, in short, the customary chronicle of feudal society in an Asiatic State, from whose social ferment no stable political organisation has yet been evolved. Sanguinary revolts rapidly alternate with restorations of a power ruthless in retaliation. The Sirdars are ever ready to fight for their cherished liberty to be lawless, and the Khan is rarely able to enforce his authority, except by adroitly playing off one Chief or tribe against another.

5. Practically, this authority has always been in proportion to the vigour of the Khan's personal character, and dependent on the strength of his will rather than on that of law and tradition. But among all these elements of political disturbance and weakness there exists one source of stability, the importance of which can hardly be overrated. This is the exceedingly strong sentiment of clanship, and loyalty to the hereditary principle, which conspicuously characterizes both the people and its Chiefs. On the one hand, notwithstanding frequent assassination, periodical revolt, and chronic anarchy, this Khanate has decended in almost uninterrupted legitimate succession, through a period of 150 years, and a line of nine hereditary Princes, to the present Ruler. On the other hand, almost every effort on the part of a Khan to dispossess a hostile Chief of his power, uproot an opposing tribe, or suppress a disaffected family, has completely failed. Through good report and evil report the tribes have habitually clung to their hereditary Chiefs; and the Chiefs have habitually resumed allegiance to their hereditary suzerain.

6. From their earliest period our relations with Khelat have been embarrassed by the difficulties inseparable from all dealings with a weak unsettled Government. In the main our policy has been guided by the principles which would regulate our intercourse with the established Government of any neighbouring State. We have generally supported the ruling power; because it represents the only unit of collective authority with which we can conveniently deal, or which it is practically possible to hold responsible for the maintenance of international engagements. But it has not seldom happened that the proved and acknowledged inability of the ruling power to enforce its own authority has obliged us to act independently of it. Thus, both Sir C. Napier and General Jacob undertook, and carried out, the punishment of tribes nominally subject to the Khan of Khelat, but whose conduct the Khan was powerless to control; whilst, on the other hand, Sir Henry Green succeeded in compelling and enabling the Khan to punish very efficiently, on one occasion, the most troublesome and insubordinate of these semi-independent tribes. So also, a treaty extremely valuable so long as the Khanate was governed by a powerful ruler, became valueless when the country had practically fallen into the hands of rebellious and irresponsible Sirdars. If, therefore, the policy pursued towards Khelat during past years by the Government of India exhibits signs of frequent apparent change, such change is not attributable to vacillations of principle or purpose, but to the inevitably varying conditions of the situation with which this Government has had to deal.

7. The one thing which at no time, past or present, the Government of India has ever been able to do, however strongly it might wish to do it, is to remain an unconcerned and inert spectator of what passes immediately beyond our Western border. The connexion existing between the tribes and populations inside and outside this border is so direct, so closely intimate, that any disturbance of the latter vibrates instantaneously across the frontier; and civil war in Beloochistan involves, so long as it lasts, not only the closing of our main trade routes across that country, the maltreatment of our merchants who use them, and the incessant spoliation of their property, but also an unsettled and seriously unsafe condition of British territory extending along the whole length of the important province of Sindh. To this reason must be attributed the fact that the strongest advocates of a policy of non-interference have, as regards our relations with Khelat, invariably ended by becoming the advocates or executors of measures of interference, sudden and violent, in proportion to the length of time during which more moderate and consistent intervention has been postponed.

8. It would be tedious and unnecessary to recapitulate the numerous occasions of such reluctant but unavoidable interference, or to describe the various forms it has assumed. Only two such instances call for special notice in our present letter. Of these, the first is the conclusion of a Treaty signed in 1854 with Nusseer Khan, the then ruler of Khelat. By that Treaty, the provisions of which are familiar to your Lordship, the Khan practically became subordinate to, and dependent on, the British Government. The position thus accepted by the ruler of Khelat has often been disregarded, and has long remained unenforced by the Government of India; but, theoretically at least, it has never ceased to be acknowledged, not only by his Highness, but also by the Sirdars and people of the Khanate. In all their internal dissensions they have constantly, and of late most urgently and unanimously, appealed to the British Government as the only power to whose impartial authority they are all willing to submit, and whose duty they all consider it to be to maintain peace between them.

9. The second instance is of less general importance, but it has a much more direct connexion with recent events; indeed, it may be regarded as the origin and cause of our present position in Khelat. As your Lordship is aware, the reign of Khodadad Khan, the present ruler of that Khanate, has been marked by more than the customary prevalence of anarchy and civil war. This, during the year 1871–72, culminated in a general rebellion, which occasioned such serious disturbance on our frontier as to necessitate the interference of the Government of India. Our Commissioner in Sindh was accordingly authorised to mediate formally between the contending parties; and, together with a representative of the Khan, the principal Sirdars of Khelat assembled to meet the Commissioner at Jacobabad on the 28th of March 1872. Of the details and results of that arbitration your Lordship is already cognisant. It temporarily suspended the civil war then desolating the Khanate and disturbing the British border. But our future relations with Khelat were neither settled nor improved by it. It constituted a marked and very important departure from the policy which till then had governed our relations with that Khanate. For the first time the Sirdars of Khelat appeared as recognised parties to what was virtually an international contract between the British Government and that of the Khanate, whilst at the same time the Khan was still, as heretofore, assumed to be the only responsible power in the country, and held answerable for the due execution of our award, not merely against himself, but also against his recalcitrant Sirdars, whom that very award had deprived his Highness of the power of coercing.

10. Such a position could not possibly be maintained. The temporary adoption of it had been forced upon the Government of India by the fact that the previous position had ceased to be tenable, and it was necessary to terminate as promptly as possible a situation which had become altogether intolerable. But it is only due to the Government of Bombay that record should here be made of the opinion then expressed by that Government, that the unprecedented acknowledgment of the rebellious Sirdars of Khelat as a recognised power in the Khanate must "subvert the Khan's authority and perpetuate troubles." This prediction was promptly verified; nor can there be any doubt that the step taken in 1872 rendered necessary and inevitable further steps in the same direction. By the arbitration of 1872 the British Government assumed and accepted a position in Khelat which could neither be abandoned without the simultaneous annihilation of its salutary influence in the Khanate, nor practically maintained without a greatly increased exercise of authority.

11. Meanwhile, matters in Khelat went on from bad to worse. The counsels of the British Agent, unsupported as they were by any exhibition of power, or any indication of the Government's determination to enforce them, were systematically disregarded by the Khan; until at last Major Harrison, who had lost all influence at the Court of his Highness, was withdrawn from it in 1873. The payment of the annual subsidy to his Highness was simultaneously withheld; and the Government of India ceased from all communication with the Khan in reference to the measures requisite for the security of our Western border.

12. From 1872 till 1875 our relations with Khelat continued to grow rapidly more and more unsatisfactory, and more and more detrimental to those British interests which it is our duty to protect. Outrage followed upon outrage; no redress could be obtained, and the frontier became so disorganised that the chief authority in Sindh recommended armed intervention in Khelat, and the deposition of its ruler. Our reasons for not adopting this recommendation were placed before your Lordship in our letter No. 13, of 22nd

January 1875. We preferred to make another effort in the cause of peace, by sending an officer of great experience in dealing with the hill tribes upon our Western border, under the orders of the Commissioner in Sindh, into the Murree Hills, with a view to effect, if possible, a settlement of the troubles on our immediate frontier, and to provide for the security of the Bolan route. We further instructed him that should these measures prove successful in affording security to trade through the Khelat territory, and should his Highness the Khan show an earnest desire to co-operate for that end, and to return to a proper sense of his duties, "it would afford the Governor-General in Council great "pleasure, on receiving an expression of regret for what occurred, to restore the "former subsidy, and to re-establish the old friendly footing with his Highness' Govern-"ment." We selected Major Sandeman to carry out these views.

13. Major Sandeman started from Dera Ghazi Khan on the 18th of November 1875. He was well received at once by the Murree and Brahooee Chiefs, and later by the Khan himself. Full reports of his first mission and its results are annexed to our Despatch No. 64, of the 17th of March 1876. Although, for reasons on which it is not now necessary to dwell, that mission was not in all respects successful, it was nevertheless productive of some valuable results. Both parties to the civil conflict in Khelat had become weary of it, and more or less exhausted by their protracted and apparently interminable struggle. The advent of a British officer, in the character of mediator between them, was welcomed by the Khan and Sirdars alike. The old instinct of willing subordination to the authority of the British Government was proved to be as strong as, and indeed stronger than, ever. An opportunity, of which his Highness immediately availed himself, was thus offered to the Khan for addressing the Viceroy, in terms tending to facilitate the renewal of friendly communications between the British Government and his Highness.

14. At the termination of this, Major Sandeman's first mission to Khelat, the Government of India determined to permit that officer to revisit speedily the Court of the Khan, with wider powers, a better defined authority, and a military force sufficient to ensure general submission to its verdict.

15. Only three courses were then open to the Government of India. Of these, the first was total abstention from any further interference in the internal affairs of Khelat. That course would, in our opinion at the time, and our unchanged opinion now, have infallibly prolonged an intolerable and aggressive anarchy upon our Western Frontier. . . . . The second course involved immediate intervention to the extent of deposing the Khan, and annexing the Khanate to British territory. This course the Government of India had indeed already rejected; but since the rejection of it the prospects favourable to any other course had not been very greatly improved. The third course was that of continued intervention to the extent only of what might be found sufficient to impose peace between the Khan and Sirdars of Khelat, with adequate guarantees for the protection of British commerce, and the tranquillity of British territory.

16. Taking into due consideration the partial success of Major Sandeman's first mission, the desire unanimously evinced throughout Khelat for further and continued intervention on its part, and the apparent certainty that if such intervention were withheld or suspended, the whole of Beloochistan would immediately relapse into anarchy, the Government decided on adopting the last of these three courses. Accordingly Major Sandeman, invested with fuller powers and a more definitely pronounced authority, was a second time deputed to Khelat, under instructions to use his best endeavours for effecting a complete and permanent settlement of the sanguinary and complicated disputes which were still distracting the Khanate. In order to give further weight to his mediation, and more distinctly mark the importance attached to its success by the Government of India, an escort consisting of 1,056 men of the Sindh and Punjab Frontier forces was detailed to accompany him. On this second mission, he left Jacobabad the 4th April 1876; and eight days subsequent to that event the administration of the Government of India was made over by Lord Northbrook to the present Viceroy.

17. The present Viceroy, having had the advantage before leaving England of personal communication with your Lordship on the general subject of our frontier relations, was strongly impressed by the importance of endeavouring to deal with them simultaneously, as indivisible parts of a single Imperial question mainly dependent for its solution on the foreign policy of Her Majesty's Government, which is the ultimate guardian of the whole British Empire, rather than as isolated local matters. From this point of view, and bearing in mind the ambiguous and unsatisfactory character of our relations with Afghanistan, it had been his Excellency's intention to depute a confidential Envoy to the Court of Cabul viâ Candahar; in and about which locality the Afghan population is most friendly to the British Government. This Envoy, in addition to other amicable communications suggested by a desire for the improvement of our relations with that State, and the better definition of the mutual obligations at present existing between its Government and our own, would have been instructed to explain frankly to the Amir our exact position in regard to Khelat, and the steps which had been or might be rendered necessary for the protection of British interest, on our Western Frontier.

18. The execution of this project was, however, rendered impossible by the instructions which had already been issued to Major Sandeman during his Excellency's journey to India; and the Viceroy, in these circumstances, immediately recognized the expediency of supporting and aiding Major Sandeman in the discharge of his difficult and important task.

19. The history of Major Sandeman's second mission to Khelat is recorded in the annexed reports from that officer to the Government of India in the Foreign Department. At the time when he re-entered Khelat a large number of caravans had assembled in Sindh, and were there awaiting the reopening of the great Western trade route through the Bolan Pass. Advantage was promptly taken of the truce in the civil war, and the friendly disposition of the tribes along the route, as well as of the special means of protection afforded by the strong military force which accompanied Major Sandeman's mission, to pass these caravans safely through the Bolan. A severe attack of cholera which had fallen on the expedition in the plains of Kutchee hastened, rather than delayed, its movements; but by vigorous measures and forced marches into a more healthy climate this epidemic was successfully overcome. The Chiefs generally responded with willingness to the call of Major Sandeman. But so wide and deep had become the alienation between them and the Khan that many of them declared to him that the country could only be pacified, either by the deposition of his Highness and the installation of a new ruler under the direct protection of the British Government, or else by this Government openly assuming to itself the sovereignty of the whole Khanate —an arrangement which they appeared disposed to urge on our adoption. The Khan on his part evinced at first considerable reluctance to meet the British Envoy. This reluctance appeared to be partly attributable to a not unnatural sentiment of personal humiliation at having to meet all his rebellious Sirdars, who had already joined Major Sandeman's camp, and with whom that officer had first placed himself in communication, partly also to a fear of treachery on their part, and partly perhaps by mistrust of the policy of the British Government towards himself. The tact and firmness of Major Sandeman, however, overcame all these obstacles, and on the 30th of May last the Khan arrived at Mustung, where the British Envoy had pitched his camp and assembled the leaders of the Brahooee tribes.

20. Major Sandeman's conduct in the negotiations which followed commands our warmest commendation. Although hitherto regarded throughout Khelat chiefly as the stray advocate of the cause of the disaffected Sirdars, he succeeded in rapidly winning the confidence of the Khan, without losing that of the Chiefs. With great judgment, he threw upon a body of arbitrators, nominated by the two parties, the difficult and invidious task of deciding between their rival claims; skilfully reserving to himself the advantageous position of an impartial adviser to both parties in the dispute, rather than that of a judge. He brought his influence to bear, with excellent effect, on the wild tribesmen, who seem to have followed his advice with unlimited trust; he calmed their apprehensions; he judiciously upheld the position of the Khan; and thus, by dint of impartial honesty of purpose, by well directed sympathy and unfailing patience, he persuaded both his Highness and the Sirdars to meet each other half way, in a rational and amicable spirit. Finally, having by such means reduced their respective claims and grievances into an intelligible shape, and narrowed them to a practical issue, Major Sandeman effected between them a comprehensive settlement of their disputes, on terms which were welcomed by the disputants on each side as mutually satisfactory.

21. The instrument embodying these terms of reconciliation was drawn up at Mustung on the 13th July, and read out formally in Durbar. In it the Sarawan and Jalawan Sirdars declared their submission and allegiance to the Khan according to "ancient "rule and custom;" the Khan, on his part, restored to them their "ancient rights and "privileges," and promised to treat them with every kindness and consideration so long as they continued loyal and faithful to the Khelat Government. Details connected with the nomination of certain Sirdars to be Chiefs of tribes, grievances arising from the confiscation of lands, &c., were also settled in this document; and assent given to measures for the protection of the Bolan Pass which had been previously arranged by a provisional instrument executed on the 30th of June. The Khan and Sirdars, moreover, made a solemn pledge to forget the past, and to avoid all hostilities against one another until after referring any future grounds of dispute to the British Government for its decision. "We do heartily agree," they declare, "to aid to the best of our power in " keeping open the trade routes, to preserve the peace of the country, and we swear we " will do nothing to violate this our written agreement of peace. This our first agree- " ment we make to the British Government, as a record of the terms of peace made " between us, and to which we have affixed our seals."

22. In making his final report to us Major Sandeman reviewed with just satisfaction the results of his mission. But he did not conceal from himself, or from us, the necessarily transitory character of the settlement he had effected, if the maintenance of that settlement were to be left henceforth entirely to the unaided powers and uncontrolled impulses of the two parties to it. British agents had on many previous occasions brought about the amicable settlement of quarrels in Khelat, but experience had proved the futility of arbitration between disputants who have no confidence in the power and determination of the arbitrating Government to cause its awards to be respected. Major Sandeman pointed out very forcibly that the long civil war which had desolated Khelat almost without intermission since the accession to power of the present Khan, had for years been deepening between his Highness and the Sirdars a gulf, which could not practically be bridged over all at once by a mere piece of paper. The continued direct supervision and control of the British Government were, in his opinion, essentially necessary guarantees for the permanence of the results attained by his own arbitration. Speaking, after a careful study of the internal condition of the whole Khanate, and with every disposition to take a sanguine view of the results of his own work, he says:— " The direct interference of the British Government, acting as a paramount power, is " absolutely necessary, and must be maintained." And again: — " To make its " influence really effective for the future, the British Government must state to both " sides that it accepts the responsibilities they desire to enforce on it, and will aid them " materially, as the paramount power, to preserve the peace of the country."

23. Nor was Major Sandeman without good reason for believing that such interference would be cordially welcomed throughout Khelat, as conducive to the interests of the Khanate, no less than to our own. He had found that both the Khan and the Sirdars looked exclusively to the British Government as a paramount power—the only power able to advise and assist them in their difficulties, the only power able to compose their quarrels; a power, in short, on whose intelligent recognition of its opportunities and duties in Khelat the permanent peace of their country was practically dependent. The Khan himself, with all his faults, has always been credited with a sincere desire to maintain friendly relations with the British Government. This opinion of his Highness' disposition is strongly confirmed by Major Sandeman. Writing to us about the character of that Prince, he says—" Mir Khodadad Khan is a weak Prince; but at the same time " he is not without considerable ability. During the recent negotiations I have " watched him carefully and well; and, although convinced of this, I am equally so of " his loyalty and devotion to our Government, whose interest he considers to be his " care, as far as he has the power to watch over them. He is very easily influenced " for good or evil, but has the greatest respect for the British Government, and I feel " certain from what I have seen of him that any advice his Excellency the Viceroy may " consider it expedient to give him when replying to his letter lately forwarded will not " pass unheeded. There is nothing that I have seen about him to make me believe that " he is at heart evil disposed, cruel, or in anyway unworthy of the kindness and considera- " tion of our Government." Moreover, wherever he went Major Sandeman found himself and the troops composing his escort regarded, not as the emissaries of a foreign Power, but as the natural friends and protectors of the people, by whom they were warmly welcomed. During his sojourn in the country, Khelat had enjoyed (and not in vain) a period of repose, or rather of peaceful activity, long unknown to this unhappy State. Villages destroyed by recent war were already being rebuilt; land, left fallow by its fearful owners, was already being brought again under cultivation. Everywhere signs of reviving hope and confidence attested the reliance placed by the whole population of the Khanate on the efficacious continuance of our intervention.

24. Major Sandeman's final report reached us early in the month of September last, and at once received our most careful consideration. We had then to decide whether we should regard our intervention as terminated by the conclusion of peace between the ruler and the Chiefs of Kelat, or whether we should accept, with all its responsibilities, the task of prolonged intervention which had been so eagerly urged upon our acceptance by all the parties concerned. We had to consider, in the first place, all the conditions of the peculiar position we had assumed towards Khelat by the Treaty of 1854. This position, though sometimes ignored by ourselves, had been continually acknowledged and appealed to by the other contracting party. We had, in the next place, to consider all the practical consequences of the mediation of 1872. Our interference on that occasion had prevented what then promised to be a decisive trial of strength between the Khan and his Sirdars. By according to the latter a position in which they had never before been formally recognised by the British Government we had certainly weakened the position of the Khan. Since then his Highness has never ceased to complain that, after having arrested his hand at the critical moment, when he believed himself able, at last, to crush his rebellious vassals, and after giving to those vassals a status prejudicial to his own, we had then heavily increased his obligations, whilst diminishing his power, had continued to hold him responsible for the exercise of an authority of which we ourselves had helped to deprive him, and had finally punished him for acts which we had left him powerless to prevent. We had also before our eyes the history of all previous mediations in Khelat. It showed plainly that each of them had resulted in confusion worse than that which mediation had attempted to remedy. And we had beneath our hand the strongly expressed opinion of an officer exceptionally well qualified to form a sound opinion on this subject, that a similar result would infallibly attend his own successful mediation if we decided on withholding the continued intervention which he deemed necessary to maintain and perpetuate the good effect of it. Finally, our consideration was duly given to the consequences foreseen and fully accepted by the Government of India when framing its Resolution of the 14th March 1876. That Resolution enabled Major Sandeman to carry out his last mission with unusual pomp and publicity, supported by an imposing military force. This circumstance had attracted to it the special attention of neighbouring States, at the same time securing to it the special confidence and respect of all parties and persons in Khelat. To the reliance thus inspired on our power and determination to protect order, maintain peace, and punish unprovoked aggression, must be mainly attributed the almost unprecedented eagerness of all concerned to follow the advice and accept the award of the British mediator. We had, therefore, to consider very seriously what would be the effect on the Khanate itself, more especially upon those of its inhabitants and rulers who had unreservedly placed their rights and interests in our hands, and what the effect upon our influence elsewhere, of immediately terminating an intervention which, on all sides, we were earnestly requested to prolong; or abruptly withdrawing those means of maintaining the settlement effected by our Agent, which the persons who had accepted it, and were directly interested in its maintenance, unanimously regarded as necessary for that purpose. The British mediator, himself, had in very emphatic terms recorded his deliberate opinion that a more direct and active interference than heretofore would long be needed to secure the fruits of his mediation. With this opinion before us we were constrained to acknowledge that we could not decline the position thus bequeathed to us by a long course of antecedent circumstance without thereby incurring the grave responsibility of deliberately plunging into renewed bloodshed, and interminable anarchy, a neighbouring and a friendly State which had urgently appealed to us for timely rescue from those evils.

25. Whilst, therefore, we were fully alive to the difficulties and responsibilities of the permanent intervention advocated by Major Sandeman, we could not disguise from ourselves the greater difficulties and responsibilities of renouncing the position in which the success of his mediation had conspicuously placed us. Moreover, we were also of opinion that the highest and most general interests of this Empire (interests no longer local but imperial) rendered it necessary to place our relations with Khelat on a much firmer, more durable, and more intimate footing than before. Whatever may have been the personal disinclination of this Government in times past to exercise active interference in Khanates beyond our border, it must now be acknowledged that, having regard to possible contingencies in Central Asia, to the profound and increasing interest with which they are already anticipated and discussed by the most warlike populations within as well as without our frontier, and to the evidence that has reached us of foreign intrigue in Khelat itself (intrigue at present innocuous, but sure to become active in proportion to the anarchy or weakness of that State and its alienation from British influence), we can no longer avoid the conclusion that the relations between the British Government and this neighbouring Khanate must henceforth be regulated with a view to more important objects than the temporary prevention of plunder on the British border. But indeed, the experience of late years is no less conclusive that even the permanent protection of British trade and property equally demand a more energetic and consistent exercise of that authority which we are now invited, by its Ruler, its Chiefs, and its people, to exercise in Khelat.

26. But although we have not shrunk from accepting and assuming the responsibilities we inherit from the mediation of 1872 and the armed mission of Major Sandeman, it has not appeared to us necessary or desirable to push intervention to the point recommended by that officer. We learned by one of his latest reports to us that Major Sandeman had already given his sanction to a code of procedure issued by the Khan for the guidance of the Sirdars and Naibs in the civil administration of Khelat; and that this code involved a constant and minute interference on the part of the British Agent in the civil and criminal administration of that State, which seemed to us in the highest degree unadvisable. As therefore we were unable to ratify the sanction given by Major Sandeman to this code, or to concur unreservedly in the whole line of policy advocated by him, we deemed it expedient, before finally determining the permanent character of our future relations with Khelat, to place Major Sandeman fully and confidentially in possession of our views. It appeared to us that this object could be effected better and more promptly by personal communication than by official correspondence. We were also of opinion that as our adoption of the general basis on which Major Sandeman had, with our entire approval, succeeded in placing our relations with the Khanate, would necessitate the retention, for some time at least, of his escort in Khelat, it was desirable that we should have, as soon as possible, the opinion of a more experienced military officer as to the safety and distribution of the troops.

27. Accordingly, whilst withholding our official reply to Major Sandeman's abovementioned report, we deputed Colonel Colley, in accordance with the suggestion of the Viceroy (that officer being his Excellency's Military Secretary, and an officer of political as well as military experience, more especially in regard to the management of frontier tribes and troops), to proceed to Khelat in an unofficial capacity as the bearer of communications from his Excellency to the Khan and Major Sandeman respectively. We anticipated great advantage to the public interests from the opportunity thus afforded to Major Sandeman of learning our views in complete detail from an officer in the Viceroy's personal confidence. Our anticipations have been justified by the result. In personal communication with the Military Secretary Major Sandeman was able to withdraw from the position which he had assumed in issuing his new Code of Civil Procedure for Khelat. He wisely arranged that it should be treated as a temporary document pending the signature of a Treaty which should define the obligations we assumed, and the completion of a new and more complete Code based upon them. Colonel Colley carried out his mission with care and judgment, and in a manner which merits our warm acknowledgments. In concert with him Major Sandeman was enabled to lay before the Khan the draft of a Treaty framed in general accord with our wishes. It laid down the future relations between the two Governments in a sense favourable to Khelat, and calculated to promote the true interests of both. The Khan, with many expressions of gratitude, agreed provisionally to this treaty, after certain additions and alterations were made by himself, and he at once commenced his arrangements for meeting the Viceroy at Jacobabad early in December, with a view to its formal ratification.

28. The text of the treaty thus signed by the Viceroy and his Highness in private Durbar at Jacobadad on the 8th of December last, is annexed to this letter. The first three articles of this treaty renew and reaffirm the Treaty of 1854, whereby the Khan agrees to oppose the enemies of the British Government, to act in subordinate co-operation with it, and to abstain from entering without its permission into any negociation with other States: the British Government on its part agreeing to respect the independence of Khelat, and to aid the Khan, in case of need, by such means as it may deem expedient in the maintenance of his just authority, and the protection of his territory from external attack. By the 4th and 5th Articles of the Treaty of 1876 we re-establish our Agency at the Court of the Khan, and authorise our Agent to use his good offices for the settlement of any serious dispute between his Highness and his Sirdars. Failing the settlement of it by that means, the Khan will with our consent submit any such dispute to the arbitration of the British Agent; accepting, and faithfully executing, the Agent's award.

29. The 6th Article embodies that part of our present arrangements with Khelat which, more than any other, as your Lordship will readily understand, required our careful preliminary consideration. Had the question before us in connexion with this Article been whether we should now, even in compliance with the concurrent desire of the Khan, the Sirdars, and the tribes, introduce British troops into the Khanate, we might have hesitated before assenting to such a measure. But the troops of the British Government were already in Khelat, where their presence was cordially welcomed by the inhabitants of the country. The value of it, in giving weight to the counsels of our Envoy, and security to the peace of the population, had been tested and significantly proved by restored political harmony, revived agriculture, unmolested trade, reconstructed villages. What, therefore, we had now to decide was whether we should withdraw these troops, well knowing that their withdrawal would weaken the position of our Envoy, discourage the hopes, and perhaps irretrievably alienate the confidence, of a population which recognised in their presence the only practical guarantee for its continued peace and future prosperity. Even before the signature of the treaty these troops had ceased to perform the part of a mere military escort to the Envoy. They had, with the cordial concurrence of the Khan, and with the best possible effect, been located in various parts of the country where their presence was deemed most conducive to its permanent pacification, or the protection of the re-opened trade routes. The security of the troops themselves had been carefully considered. After consultation with Colonel Colley, Major Sandeman had recommended that any occupation of the mountains and defiles of the Bolan should be avoided, but had selected two points of military as well as political importance, Quettah and Mittree, where the troops would be amidst a friendly, peaceful, and industrious population in open and well cultivated districts, free from any risk of being compromised, or provoking collisions or complications. Meanwhile there could be no reasonable doubt of the Khan's personal inability, for the present, at any rate, to enforce his newly re-acknowledged authority without at least some show of material support from the British Government.

Under all these circumstances we deemed it wise to give practical effect to an arrangement contemplated by the Treaty of 1854, and completely in accordance with the provisions and intentions of that Treaty, an arrangement obviously required by the present condition of Khelat, and the interests of the Indian Empire so far as they are thereby affected.

30. The subsequent articles of the Treaty of 1876 provide for the construction of lines of railway and telegraph; and in pursuance of this provision we have already, in concert with the Khan, made temporary surveys for a future line of railway from Sukkur to the Bolan Pass, and commenced preliminaries for the construction of a telegraph line from Jacobabad to Dadur, diverging thence to the town of Khelat on the one side, and Quetta on the other. Finally, it will be seen that to aid the Khan in a more efficient fulfilment than heretofore of the obligations contracted by him under the Treaty of 1854 and under the present supplementary engagement, we have agreed to grant him a sum of one lakh of rupees annually instead of the former half lakh, and to contribute a further sum of 20,500 rupees annually towards the establishment of posts and the development of trade routes in his Highness' dominions, so long as the money is expended in a manner approved by us.

31. Such are the provisions of the Treaty into which we have entered, and for which we seek the approval of Her Majesty's Government. This treaty was ratified in presence of the principal Sirdars; and the Viceroy took advantage of the occasion to impress earnestly on the Khan the necessity of scrupulously respecting the rights of his Sirdars and subjects, and of abstaining from oppression. "By this Treaty," his Excellency said, "the British Government has undertaken serious obligations on your behalf. It 'therefore expects that your Highness will listen to its counsels. These counsels will 'always be dictated by a sincere desire for your welfare and for that of your subjects. 'It expects that you will loyally act upon the advice tendered to you by its represen-'tative, and that you will abide by his decision in all cases referred to his arbitration." Turning to the Sirdars, the Viceroy reminded them that they had been specially named in the Treaty, and were equally bound by its terms; that the Treaty imposed obligations upon them as well as upon the Khan, and that any breach of these obligations by further acts of rebellion would bring upon them the displeasure of the British Government. The Khan and the Sirdars both eagerly replied that they clearly understood, and faithfully accepted, the obligations thus laid upon them.

32. While at Jacobabad, the Viceroy took advantage of the presence of the Commissioner of Sindh, together with that of the General Officer Commanding the Sindh District, and of the Officer Commanding the Sindh Frontier Force, to confer on certain questions connected with the disposal of Major Sandeman's escort, and the strength and disposition of the troops to be stationed in Khelat territory. For military as well as political reasons Quetta had been selected in preference to Khelat for the head-quarters of this force. It offers an exceptionally strong military position, a small hill rising in the middle of a wide open plain, well watered, and in the midst of a district abounding in supplies, a position almost unassailable if occupied by troops armed with the improved modern weapons, and which a small force could hold for a long time against vastly superior forces. It is an important strategical position, commanding the richest and most important valleys of upper Beloochistan, as well as the routes both through the Bolan and to Khelat. The surrounding population is peaceful, industrious, retaining the most friendly recollections of our rule, and welcoming the arrival of the troops as the security for peace not considered advisable to locate troops in the Bolan Pass itself, isolated as they would be in a barren and mountainous district, in immediate contact with the wild and turbulent tribes, where their presence could hardly fail to bring about accidental collisions and complications, and their safety might be seriously compromised. But another open and secure position was selected at Mittree at the south end of the pass, covering the rich plains of Kutchee, connects Jacobabad with Quetta, and whence the pass could be patrolled if necessary.

33. One of the principal objects assigned to Major Sandeman in his missions into Beloochistan was the opening of the Bolan Pass. The arrangements made for that purpose are detailed in the accompanying papers. For reasons given above it was not considered advisable to place troops in the pass, but was thought preferable to depend on arrangements made with the tribes along the pass. Under arrangements made by Major Sandeman, and agreed to by the Khan and the Sirdars, the tribes along the road receive, as of old, a share of all duties levied on goods passing through. In the protection of the pass a number of men of each tribe are entertained, and dispersed in posts along the pass, whence they patrol the pass and furnish escorts to caravans. We believed it to be wiser thus to interest the tribes themselves in the protection of the Pass than that the Khan or ourselves should attempt to hold it by force. The general arrangements for the security of the pass were placed in subordination to the Khan under Moolla Mahomed, the most influential of the Brahooee Chiefs, and we have a not unimportant guarantee for his good faith in the fact that Mittree, his principal town and richest district, is occupied by our troops.

34. It was considered advisable that Quetta should be occupied by a detachment consisting of a mountain battery, a regiment of infantry, and a squadron of cavalry, from the Punjab Frontier Force; whilst another detachment of a mountain battery, a regiment of cavalry, and a wing of infantry from the Sind Frontier Force should be temporarily stationed at Mittree, with detachments along the foot of the hills as a check on the raiding propensities of the Murree and Boogtee tribes. There were obvious objections, however, to leaving troops in permanence at the latter place, inasmuch as it is said to be unbearably hot and feverish in the summer months. It was consequently decided that the main portion of the force detailed for duty at Mitri should be withdrawn to Jacobabad during the hot months of the year, leaving a chain of posts only to watch the hills. In connexion with the general arrangements at Quetta and Khelat, we deemed it fitting to sanction the establishment of dispensaries at those places.

35. In laying these arrangements before Her Majesty's Government, we are not unmindful that our relations with the Murree and Boogtee tribes have hitherto formed the groundwork of much of that divergence of policy between the Sindh and Punjab officials which has to some extent crippled our action on the frontier. Your Lordship is already aware that the raids of these troublesome tribes on our own border have given rise to many of our past misunderstandings with the Khan. Nominally they are subjects of Khelat, and they lie within the geographical limits of Beloochistan. Yet no Khan has ever been able to exercise any really effective control over them; and his own provinces have suffered more from their inroads than any portion of British territory. The attempt to compel the Khan to do what was not practicable, and to hold him to the letter of the Treaty of 1854, has, we believe, been a source of weakness in our past policy. We have therefore resolved to adhere, for the present, to the system adopted by us in 1875, and to continue our dealings with these tribes independently of the Khan. We shall continue the allowances to them which we have paid since that year; we shall, as heretofore, encourage them to take service in the ranks of our frontier police, but we shall repress by force any outrage which they may dare to commit on British territory. Their power for evil will have been much lessened by the establishment of a settled Government under British influence in their rear, where formerly, amidst the contending factions, they were [illegible] of sympathy, and refuge.

[illegible] It only remains for us to add that the Khan of Khelat and his Sirdars reached [illegible] the 25th of December. It was the first occasion on which the majority of the [illegible] attendants had left their homes to visit British territory. They expressed [illegible] their surprise and admiration on beholding the railways, telegraphs, and [illegible] peaceful civilisation which they saw on their way to Delhi, and their [illegible] kindly reception given to them. We may say, briefly, that the good [illegible] both the Khan and his Sirdars has exceeded our anticipations. [illegible] witnessed the power of the British Government. For the first [illegible] ength, and the benefits of that salutary order which it imposes [illegible] We cannot doubt that the association of the Khan and his [illegible] Delhi will bear good fruit in our future relations with Khelat.

37. In conclusion, we submit to your Lordship the Resolution we have issued regarding the appointment of Major Sandeman as Agent to the Governor-General in Beloochistan, and the measures we have adopted in connexion therewith. We feel assured that your Lordship will appreciate the services of that officer as fully as we ourselves have done; and no less do we entertain the hope that the settlement which we have endeavoured to effect of an anxious and difficult question will receive the approval of Her Majesty's Government. Of one thing we feel certain. If it be conducive to British interests, as we have no doubt it is, to influence the tribes and peoples who live beyond our border, we must be in contact with them. It is by the everyday acts of earnest, upright English gentlemen that lasting influence must be obtained; not by spasmodic demonstrations, nor any sudden and temporary influence purchased by money and presents. If, at length, we succeed in binding more closely to us the people of Khelat, by making them feel the benefits of peace, and the power for good exercised by the British Government, we shall have added an additional bulwark to our Empire. An important part of our frontier will no longer be harassed by mistrustful, wild, and dangerous neighbours, and our officers will have Chiefs and populations to deal with who welcome their counsels and receive them as their best friends.

RELATING TO

The Re-organization of the Western and North-western Frontier of India.

No. 1.

Political, No. 15.

To his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor General of India in Council.

My Lord, India Office, London, 3rd February 1876.

Paragraph 1. In the final paragraph of my Political Despatch, No. 91, dated the 8th July last, relative to the affairs of Khelat, I intimated my intention of addressing you more generally upon the changes which, under existing circumstances, seem necessary for the purpose of ensuring unity of action in the government of the Western and North-western Frontiers of India, and I now proceed to make such observations as occur to me on the subject.

2. The arrangement by which, shortly after its conquest in 1843, Sindh was constituted an integral part of the Government of Bombay, was perhaps, under the circumstances of that time, the best that could have been adopted. The province was, in effect, accessible chiefly from Bombay, and its subordination to that Presidency became almost therefore a political necessity. The management of relations with the tribes on the western frontier of the newly acquired territory thus fell into the hands of the Government of Bombay, and so continued until the year 1872, when that Government voluntarily proposed that, in view to facilitate the conduct of business, the Commissioner of Sindh should communicate direct with the Government of India in the Foreign Department on all questions of purely foreign policy in connexion with Beloochistan and the Trans-Indus tribes along the frontier, and those cases in which the interests of our own subjects might be directly and specially involved. This proposal was in accordance with previously expressed views of your Government, and was agreed to by you with a proviso that, for the present, at any rate, certain appointments subordinate to the Commissioner of Sindh should continue to be made by the Government of Bombay.

3. Although the arrangement thus effected had, no doubt, advantages over that which had previously been in force, it was by no means sufficient to secure unity of action on the Khelat frontier. The relations with the tribes on that frontier continued to be conducted, as they had heretofore been, partly by officers under the Commissioner of Sindh, partly by officers under the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The only modification of previous practice was, that instead of the supervising authorities reporting one to the Government of India, the other to that of Bombay, both henceforwards communicated direct with the former. The evil remained that questions requiring consideration as a whole by a single mind were dealt with by officers brought up in widely different schools and with divergent interests. The unsatisfactory result of this dual system of management was recognised by your Excellency's Government, and in your letter of the 22nd January 1875, No. 13, you reported your determination that communications with the Murree and Boogtee tribes should be conducted through the medium of the Deputy Commissioner of Dehra Ghazee Khan, a Punjab officer, who would be placed under the orders of the Commissioner in Sindh, to whom also would be referred any action proposed to be taken as regards the tribes whose proceedings mainly affect the Scinde frontier.

4. Your Excellency in Council is sanguine that the new arrangement will produce satisfactory results. I am, however, disposed to doubt whether it can be regarded as more than a partial remedy for the evils which unquestionably existed, or whether it will thoroughly obviate that clashing of authority which, though in the ordinary civil administration of the country an evil of perhaps moderate dimensions and easily controlled, becomes serious when it touches our foreign relations. At present, the intrigues upon the Khelat frontier are of an ordinary kind, and no great practical mischief results from the disjointed and anomalous government in that quarter. But in contingencies which may at any time arise, such, for instance, as war or disturbance in Affghanistan or its neighbourhood, the condition of the Khelat frontier would be a subject of great solicitude. It would then be vitally necessary that all the officers, civil and military, in the valley of the Indus should obey a single will, and should look for their advancement to the same authority.

5. Under these circumstances, I desire to suggest, for your Excellency's consideration, the advisability of making new arrangements with respect to the administration of the province of Sindh, for the purpose of bringing the whole frontier under the direct control of the Government of India. This suggestion is no new one. At the time when the formation of the Punjab into a Lieutenant-Governorship was under discussion in 1856, it was the unanimous opinion of Lord Dalhousie's Government that the new province should include Sindh. When, however, the arrangements were finally carried out in 1858, the Home Government and the Government of India of that day, for reasons partly personal, partly connected with the then backward state of communications along the Indus, agreed in thinking that Sindh should remain attached to the Presidency of Bombay. Important changes in the facility of communication as well as in other conditions of the frontier have taken place since that time, and will in a short time receive a very material extension, and the reasons which decided the action of the Government in 1858 have lost their cogency. The exact mode in which the province in question and the frontier districts would be administered under the authority of your Excellency's Government is a matter on which I shall abstain from expressing any opinion until I have learnt your views. The whole territory may be annexed to the Punjab; or the lower portion of the valley of the Indus may be placed under a distinct Government; or the districts requiring special military supervision may be separately administered; or some other division of these provinces, involving larger readjustments, may be made. Local circumstances, facilities of communication, the character of the population under British rule, and of the tribes beyond the frontier, must be taken into careful consideration before any decision can be taken on this important point. If it shall be settled to sever Sindh from the Presidency of Bombay, this question will require your Excellency's earliest consideration.

6. Apart from the grave political reasons, already cited, in favour of the suggested change, there are some considerations of a different kind which may also be urged in support of it. The improvement of communication along the valley of the Indus, which is now being effected, promises not only to remove one of the main arguments for the dependence, but, taken in connexion with the works which have for many years been in progress at the port of Kurrachee, may be expected to create interests to a certain extent antagonistic to those of Bombay. The importance of Kurrachee is steadily growing, and if, as may be hoped, the material condition of its harbour continues to improve, or is even maintained as at present, the port will probably hereafter, on the completion of the Indus Valley Railway, become the emporium for all the trade from western Europe to Afghanistan, Sindh, the Punjab, and a portion of the North-west Provinces. This result must, however, entirely depend on the care with which the harbour is maintained, and for this purpose the Government of India will have powers and facilities which are not at the command of the Government of Bombay.

7. Should it be decided to transfer Sindh from the jurisdiction of the Government of Bombay, it would be proper to relieve the Government of India of a corresponding burden in some other quarter. In the Central Provinces would probably be found the territory fittest to employ the official strength which the changes I have indicated would leave at the disposal of the Government of Bombay. A portion of those provinces is not only geographically and ethnologically connected with the minor Presidency, but possesses in the port of Bombay the nearest, indeed, the sole outlet for the rich productions of its soil. The development of the cotton and coal-bearing districts chiefly interests Bombay, and it would seem that their charge might advantageously be entrusted to the Government of that Presidency.

In commending this subject to your Excellency's consideration, I need scarcely observe that any change that may be made should be taken with as little delay as is consistent with the mature consideration of so serious a step. It is obvious that much inconvenience and embarrassment would result if officers should be distracted with the petty difficulties of passing from one routine to another at a moment when their time and thoughts were engrossed by agitation and disturbance on the frontier. I hope, therefore, to be placed in possession of your views on this subject at an early date.

I have, &c.

Service Telegram.

From Calcutta, 14th March 1876. From Viceroy, to Secretary of State, London.

Your Lordship's despatch, dated 3rd February 1876, on subject of securing unity of policy on Khelat border, under consideration. Expediency of effecting union of administration, more or less complete, of Sind and Punjab, generally admitted, but time must elapse before details can be worked out. Meanwhile, experience has shown that transfer to Punjab of portion of Upper Sind, known as Sind Frontier District, is matter of immediate necessity. Such transfer can be effected with sanction of Her Majesty by proclamation under 28 Victoria, chapter 17.

Telegraphic sanction to transfer is accordingly solicited.

From Secretary of State to Viceroy, dated 16th March 1876.

We think it might be questioned whether we were substantially complying with the Statute, if we sanctioned proposed proclamation without seeing it. On the whole it would be safer for you to make such provisional arrangements as you think best for administration of frontier, sending home the proclamation you propose by mail.

Government of India. Foreign Department. Political.

To the Most Honourable the Marquis of Salisbury, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

My Lord Marquis, Fort William, the 17th March 1876.

With reference to your Lordship's telegram of this day's date, in reply to his Excellency's telegram of the 14th instant, on the subject of a proclamation we proposed to issue under 28 Victoria, chapter 17, section 4, transferring the portion of Upper Sind, known as the Frontier District, to the jurisdiction of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, we have the honour to transmit herewith, as required, copy of the proposed proclamation.

2. We have been advised that the proclamation should issue under the powers conferred by the Indian Council's Act, 1861, section 47, as well as under the provisions of 28 Victoria, chapter 17, section 4; it has accordingly been drawn up in these terms.

3. Experience has shown that control over the internal administration of the Sind Frontier District, comprising the talooks of Jacobabad, Thoole, and Kusmore, specified in the proclamation, is essential for the proper conduct of our political relations with Khelat, and as the charge of those relations has, under circumstances already explained to your Lordship, been transferred from the Commissioner of Sind to the Commissioner of the Derajat Division of the Punjab, the transfer of the internal administration of the Frontier District to the Punjab Government, to whom that officer is subordinate, is necessary.

4. On the subject of the measures necessary for securing unity of political administration on this important portion of the border, we shall address your Lordship hereafter in reply to your Lordship's despatch No. 15, dated 3rd February 1876, but meanwhile we were led to solicit telegraphic sanction to the issue of the proclamation in consequence of representations by Colonel Munro, the Commissioner of the Derajat, and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, that the transfer was a matter of immediate necessity.

5. In the event of sanction being accorded to the issue of the proclamation, intimation by telegraph is solicited.

Memorandum by C. U. Aitchison, Esquire, Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

Recent events have brought out more clearly than ever the absolute necessity for unity of control in the political affairs of the Punjab and Sind. As this can probably be best secured by the union of the two provinces under one administrative head, I will note what our records contain on the subject of the annexation of Sind to the Punjab.

A few weeks before laying down charge of the Government of India, Lord Dalhousie recorded a Minute (20th February 1856) in which he made proposals for the relief of the Governor General in Council from the overwhelming pressure of work. The principal change which Lord Dalhousie wished to make was to constitute the Punjab, which was then a Chief Commissioner's charge, into a Lieutenant-Governorship, with or without Sind as might eventually be thought best for the public interests. In that Minute Lord Dalhousie wrote:—

"If it should be thought that the Punjab by itself would constitute too small a jurisdiction for a Lieutenant-Governorship, I would then propose that the Lieutenant-Governorship should also include the province of Sind.

* * * * * *

"The Punjab and Sind appear from their relative geographical position to constitute naturally the frontier province of the empire on its western side. Their common share in the great river which traverses the whole length of each seems to make them largely dependent on each other, and to point out their union under one authority as the natural administrative disposition of our Western Provinces.

"The difference between the systems which prevail at present in the two provinces need form no obstacle to their union.. Various systems of local government fall under the jurisdiction of each of the Lieutenant-Governors already appointed."

These views met with the concurrence of all the Members of Council, and Sir John Peter Grant wrote:

"I think that all will agree that Sind and the Punjab should be under one government. In respect to wealth and population, the Punjab will be a small charge as compared with the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal and Agra. It would be expedient, therefore, if it could be done without inconvenience, to add to the Punjab any districts that could be readily detached from other governments for that purpose, even though they might not be indicated by nature as fit to constitute, with the Punjab, one integral government. But here all physical and political considerations combine to indicate that such is the case with Sind and the Punjab.

"There are, on the Indian continent, but three natural boundaries; lofty ridges of mountains, extensive jungles, and great deserts or thinly peopled and unwatered plains. By the last of these boundaries Sind is cut off from the Bombay Provinces more decidedly than the Punjab is cut off from the Agra Provinces. At the same time it is tied to the Punjab by the strongest of all natural links, a single system of great navigable rivers, common to both. Sind is in fact the door of the Punjab. These two provinces united form the whole North-west Frontier of India. The whole of the political relations of that frontier ought to be immediately in one man's hand; and this cannot be, so long as the Punjab and Sind are disconnected as at present.

"These considerations are of such great and permanent importance that I hope no personal or other temporary reasons will be allowed to interfere with the immediate union of the two provinces."

The reply of the Court of Directors to the proposal was as follows *:—

"We are not prepared upon financial as well as other grounds to entertain at present the plan you have suggested for affording relief by the formation of the Punjab and Sind into a separate government under a Lieutenant-Governor.

"At a future period it will no doubt be desirable when the administration of the Punjab and Sind has been developed by a further exercise of the present political, judicial, and revenue powers united in the persons of the Commissioner and his deputies to introduce a system of administration through an officer with more control over details than at present the Commissioner possesses, and at that period we may be prepared to consider the vesting the Commissioner of the Punjab with the powers of a Lieutenant-Governor over the Punjab and Sind conjointly, or the Punjab separately from Sind as the public interests may then seem to require. * * * * *
As at present informed, we consider the single province of the Punjab to be too limited in extent to require the appointment of a Lieutenant-Governor."

With reference however to the position of Government after the mutiny and the great work of re-organization which lay before the Governor General in Council, the Secretary of State of his own motion revived the question, and in his despatch No. 7, of 11th November 1858, directed that the Punjab should be made a Lieutenant-Governorship. "The limits of the new Lieutenant-Governorship," the Secretary of State observed, "are "left to your Government to define. It does not, however, seem expedient to incor- "porate therewith the province of Sind. There are many reasons why that territory, "the affairs of which are so admirably administered by Mr. Bartle Frere under the "Government of Bombay, should remain attached to that Presidency. But there are "portions of the North-western Provinces recently brought under the superintendence "of the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab which you will probably consider it desirable "to bring permanently within the circle of the new Lieutenant-Governorship, regard "being had to the necessity of adopting an uniform system of administration in accordance "with that which has been so successfully introduced into the Punjab."

With respect to this decision, Lord Canning wrote as follows in his Minute of 1st January 1859:—

"When four years ago the question of establishing a Lieutenant-Governor at Lahore was first raised, it was suggested to the Court of Directors that Sind should be included in the government.

"The despatch now received does not sanction this arrangement.

"I may be permitted to say that this decision appears to me to be a right one.

* No. 39, dated 8th October 1856.

" Whatever apportionment of territory may hereafter be made on our Western Frontier, I am satisfied that at present, and for some time to come, the task of closely watching the Punjab, and of administering its government in all details, will be enough to occupy the time of the ablest administrator. That task has been increased by the addition of the Delhi Division. But this tract of country, though it brings upon the Government of the Punjab the administration of 12,000 square miles yielding nearly 36 lakhs of revenue, is very homogeneous in all respects with the eastern districts of the territory already under that Government, and joins them conveniently.

" To have added to the duties of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab the charge of 400 miles of our Western Frontier, far removed from the seat of his government, would have been too burdensome an increase. Nor do I think that in the present backward state of our communications along the Indus the inclusion of the lower part of that river and of its seaport within the jurisdiction of the Lieutenant-Governorship would have been beneficial."

The districts* transferred from the North-western Provinces to the Punjab were what used to be called the " Delhi territory." They had practically come under the Punjab when the mutiny broke out and communication between Delhi and Calcutta was cut off, while communication between Delhi and Lahore remained open.

In paragraph 10 of his Public Despatch No. 10, of 16th January 1868, on the subject of the re-organization of the machinery of the administration in the Presidency of Bengal, and with reference particularly to arrangements for legislation, the Secretary of State observed :—

" The Punjab, Oudh, and the Central Provinces might be treated as non-regulation districts under the general government; with respect to others (Assam, Burmah, Sind, and possibly Orissa, if it should be thought to require separation from Bengal proper), it may be a question whether they should be placed directly under the general government, or under the subordinate governments."

The precise meaning of this was not fully understood by the Government of India, but with reference to it Lord Lawrence remarked :—

" I would say that in my opinion Sind should remain under Bombay; British Burmah is under the Government of India, and should continue so," &c., &c.

Sir William Mansfield, with reference to the same paragraph, remarked :—" I think it would be a mistake to alienate Sind from Bombay."

Sir Henry Durand, however, was of a contrary opinion. " I have before said," he wrote, " that Sind should be under the Punjab, and I remain strongly of that opinion." The opinion referred to is probably the one which Sir Henry Durand gave in his Minute of 5th October 1867 on Central Asian policy :—

" Without disturbing the details of administration, Sind should be subject to the Punjab Government, and thus come under the more direct control of the Government of India. I have elsewhere stated that it is anomalous that on so important a frontier we should be liable to have a different policy advocated in Sind from that pursued at Peshawur; still more anomalous that the military force on the Lower Indus should be under the Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, whilst the troops on the Upper Indus and its affluents are under the Commander-in-Chief in Bengal. One government, one policy, and one command should watch over the frontier from the sea-board to Peshawur. There should, in these respects, be no more disconnexion or isolation than in its railways."

This view was not shared by Sir William Mansfield, who wrote :—

" As I have said elsewhere, I can see no advantage, but on the contrary, great harm, in making a disposition of Sind different from that which has been attended by marked success. This province has, under the Bombay Government, been administered separately, as it were, by a succession of able men from the time of Sir Charles Napier to the present day.

" The border of Sind is fairly peaceful and gives no trouble whatever. The progress of the province is, I believe, in all respects satisfactory.

" The Political Agents, as Superintendents of the Sind Frontier, have, in truth, nothing to do with Afghan politics; our relation with regard to which can alone be directed by the Viceroy himself. If there should be any improper interference or initiative on their part for the purpose of forwarding individual views, the remedy is of course a simple one, and in our own hands. But I cannot believe in the probability of such an occurrence on the part of experienced British officers."

I cannot find on our records any further reference to the question of the union of the Punjab and Sind. But there is a note in the Home Department by Mr. Howell dated August 1869, in which the question is thus reviewed:—

"The main feature in the proposed redistribution of the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab is the addition to it of Sind. This transfer has been often advocated, but hitherto the want of direct communication between Lahore and Sind has been the main obstacle to the measure. Recent events, however, have called imperatively for a more uniform policy on our North-west Frontier, and the recognition of the necessity of the Indus Valley line has quite changed the state of the question. At present Kusmore is the boundary between Sind and the Punjab, and there is a wide difference between the systems of frontier policy pursued north and south of Kusmore. The Sind population has been conquered and disarmed, and the defence of the frontier entrusted to the strong and costly Sind Frontier Force, established for that purpose to give security to the unarmed population. From Kusmore to Peshawur, there is a long frontier occupied under totally different circumstances. The people there are not disarmed, and could not be disarmed, unless we add very largely to our military forces, so as effectually to cover our territories. Indeed not only are the people not disarmed, but much of the security of our districts depends upon the efficiency of the local militia or armed border police acting under chiefs of influence selected from among their compatriots. Our military posts are few and far between, and the military are prohibited, except under special orders, from acting on the offensive within or above the Passes. The police of the frontier depends on the militia, and on the understanding, good, bad, or indifferent, maintained with the chiefs and leaders of border hill tribes. The military posts are supports seldom called into action, but giving solidity to frontier arrangements.

"In fact, no two systems can be more utterly different than those of the Punjab and Sind.

"These remarks are taken from a recent Minute by Sir H. M. Durand, who concludes thus: 'But throughout in this as in several other frontier matters, I am more and more impressed with the conviction that the whole Indus frontier, from Kurrachee to Peshawur, should be under the Punjab Government, not with the view of altering the system of the Sind administration, nor with the view of any alteration of treaty engagements, but with the purpose of securing, in all main features, one consistent policy along that important frontier, emanating from the Government of India alone, and directly under its control, in the hands of a Lieutenant-Governor acting in subordination to the instructions of the Governor General in Council.'

"Sir H. M. Durand's view is strengthened as above stated by the recent decision of the Government of India, that the Indus Valley line of railway should be undertaken. The grounds of this decision need not be here recapitulated, but this line will solve the main objection that has hitherto existed to the proposed redistribution. Kurrachee will then be a port of embarkation and debarkation under the Government of India, a point of considerable importance in a military point of view.

"It will be remembered that the transfer of Sind to the Punjab will be made (as stated by Sir H. Durand), not with the view of altering the Sind administration. Sind will remain in all points as before, but its local Government will be that of the Punjab in substitution for that of Bombay.

"The Punjab Government has recently applied for an additional Under-Secretary. If this appointment be sanctioned by the Secretary of State, the post should be filled by a young officer who has had experience in the administration of the territory now to be transferred from Bombay. As regards public works in Sind, it is certain that they can be better managed than at present from the head-quarters of the Punjab Government.

"The Sind Railway has already the same management as the Delhi Railway with headquarters at Lahore."

The fact of the matter is that Sind owes its connexion with Bombay to a purely accidental circumstance, viz., that it was conquered by us before the Punjab was. Sind became a British province in the spring of 1843. The Punjab became ours in March 1849. Had the order of events been reversed there can be no doubt that Sind would have been brought under the Punjab to which it belongs geographically, ethnographically, and politically. But during the six years that intervened between the conquest of Sind and the conquest of the Punjab it would have been impossible to have controlled Sind from the Bengal Presidency. The nearest point in Sind was separated from Upper India by more than 300 miles of Native territory. Under such circumstances Bombay was the only Government that could immediately exercise control over the new province. This circumstance of itself explains the connexion of Sind with the Bombay Presidency.

The subsequent annexation of the Punjab, the development of communications, the establishment of the telegraph, and the construction of the Indus Valley Railway have completely altered, indeed it may be said have reversed, the position of affairs. The Sind frontier is now conterminous with our own possessions in Upper India, while it is separated from Bombay at the nearest point (Ahmedabad) by 150 miles of Native territory. A railway runs from end to end of the Bengal Presidency and will soon be continued to Kurrachee. The gap between Mooltan and Kotree is being filled up at the rate of from 100 to 150 miles a year, and the entire line will probably be open in all 1878–79, except the bridge at Sukkur, which will be opened in 1880. Jacobabad, from which place Khelat relations are controlled, is as near to Mooltan as it is to Kurrachee. The communication between Kurrachee and Bombay is by steamer every third or fourth day, the voyage taking about three days, and also by a long circuitous and dangerous overland route through the Runn of Kutch. If Hyderabad be taken as the central point in Sind, the distance to Mooltan is only some 350 miles as the crow flies, and on this there will soon be through railway communication; the distance to Ahmedabad is only some 50 miles shorter, but through a wild desert and jungle country with scarcely even a road. It is probably this isolation of Sind, even from Bombay, which has made it necessary all along to invest the Commissioner with very high powers, and to place him virtually in the position of a Chief Commissioner.

The circumstances which originally necessitated the temporary connexion of Sind with Bombay are rapidly disappearing and will entirely cease to exist within the next two years when the railway line is completed. Meanwhile the permanent reasons which demand the union of the Punjab and Sind are every day acquiring greater force. It will be observed from the précis of correspondence given in this note that whenever the question of the annexation of Sind to the Punjab has been discussed the reasons adduced against it (with the exception of those given by Sir William Mansfield, and which have scarcely been justified by recent events) have been chiefly of a personal and ephemeral kind. The Court of Directors were quite prepared to discuss it after further experience. Although the Secretary of State said the objections were many; the only one he specifically mentioned was that Sind had been ably governed by Sir Bartle Frere. Lord Canning's objection was also a temporary one, that the hands of the Punjab Government were full at the time, and that communications between Lahore and Kurrachee were in a backward state. Lord Lawrence assigned no reasons for the opinion he gave; but they can easily be supplied by those conversant with the relations between the Punjab and Sind when he was at Lahore, and Sir Bartle Frere at Kurrachee.

The objections of a permanent nature appear to arise chiefly from the difference of administrative system in the two provinces. These objections have rather been obscurely hinted at than definitely expressed. They were anticipated by Lord Dalhousie in his minute of 1856. But inasmuch as no one proposes to disturb the details of administrative arrangement in Sind, the objections are more theoretical than practical.

On the other hand, the permanent reasons for the union of the two provinces under one administration have been ably stated by Lord Dalhousie, Sir John Peter Grant, and Sir Henry Durand. How far they have been borne out by late events, his Excellency in Council already knows. The recent painful correspondence with Sir William Merewether need not be further referred to in this note than to say that after years of patient correspondence, clear and explicit declarations of policy, and personal interviews with the Commissioner in Sind, the Government of India has been unable, under existing arrangements, to secure unity of political action in its Western Frontier, and has felt itself reluctantly compelled to take the control of political affairs altogether out of the hands of the Commissioner in Sind. Considering, indeed, that the tribes on the frontier of Upper Sind and in the Dera Ghazee Khan district in the Punjab belong to the same great classes, the wonder is that the double policy pursued towards them has not ended long ere this in very serious complications. The Upper Frontier district in Sind is inhabited chiefly by Beloochees and Jats; so is Dera Ghazee Khan. With exception of the mixed tribe of Khetrans there are none but Beloochees on the Dera Ghazee Khan Frontier; on the Upper Sind Frontier there are Beloochees and Brahooees, but the two intermarry and have similar customs. There is not the same difference between Brahooee and Belooch that there is between Belooch and Pathan.

But matters cannot safely be left on the present footing for any length of time. We have had evidence in the recent cases of Shahbaz Khan and Rogah Khan how intimately the affairs of the tribes beyond the border are bound up with the internal administration of Sind, more especially of the Upper Frontier District. The tribes who inhabit the hills have in many cases lands and jaghires on the canals within the British boundary, so that to leave the control of political affairs under one administration, while the control of the internal Government is under another, is to perpetuate the system of double government in its worst form and to invite disaster. The step just taken of sending Colonel Munro to Jacobabad to take charge of frontier affairs is preparatory, it is to be hoped, to the adoption without avoidable delay of the further measure of the union of the administration of Sind and the Punjab, which, as shown in the foregoing précis, has been more than once advocated on other and more general grounds. The present division of authority cannot be long continued without risk of complete breakdown.

I annex in the margin * statistics of the area, population, and revenue of the Lieutenant-Governorships of Bengal, the North-western Provinces, and the Punjab, and of Sind. His Excellency in Council will observe that although the area of the Punjab is large, the population and the revenue are small. There is no reason to anticipate that the addition of Sind would give the Lieutenant-Governor a greater area than he could manage. The population would still be only one-third that of Bengal and two-thirds of the population of the North-western Provinces, while the revenue would be much under that of the North-western Provinces. As regards area, the completion of the railway system will make it quite manageable. From the centre at Lahore, the railway will radiate in three directions, throwing out its feelers to the furthest extremities of the province. But, if the area be considered too large, it can be reduced by giving back to the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-western Provinces the districts he lost in 1858—a measure which I believe the Government of the North-western Provinces would advocate.

What would be the financial effect of the change I have not had time (owing to the pressure of work in winding up matters preparatory to going on furlough) to work out. It is probable, however, that there would be a considerable saving. The pay of the Commissioner in Sind at any rate could be reduced, and probably some of the military force kept up on the Sind Frontier could be in time dispensed with.

Little if any legislation would be needed. On this, however, the Legislative Department may be asked to advise.

A memorandum † by the Assistant Secretary showing the number of Covenanted Civil Officers in Sind who would have to be provided for is appended. They are very few, and several them would probably be glad to try their fortune under the Punjab Government.

No. 6.

MEMORANDUM by Sir Bartle Frere.

Sind and Punjab Frontier Systems.

IN the following remarks I may often describe things as they were 15 years ago rather than as they are now. Many alterations have been since made in the Sind frontier system, not often, I think, for the better, and there may have been some useful assimilations in both systems. I have, however, described things as they were in my day.

The only really useful object of such descriptions is to discover what is the best system for the present and future.

The annexed map shows in a very general way the Western Frontier of India and the portions under Sind and the Punjab respectively. But, for a careful study of the question, the military maps, showing the force at each post on the frontier and the supporting garrisons, should be referred to.

Thoroughly to understand the difference between the Punjab and Sind frontier systems, and to judge how far any such difference is needful or inevitable, requires some general idea of the physical features, inhabitants, commercial passes, government, and history of the frontier line from Cashmere to the Sea.

Starting from a barrier of snowy peaks, from 15,000 to 20,000 feet high, in Cashmere, our frontier line runs south-west to the Indus, follows the river round the Bonair Hills, bends westward to circuit the Peshawur plain, makes a loop to avoid the Kohat Pass, and then runs in a generally southern direction at the foot of the higher ranges to near Mittunkote, where the frontier of the Punjab ends. Frontier lines.

The frontier line then leaves the immediate neighbourhood of the Suleiman range, crosses the plains of Kutchee in a westerly and south-westerly direction till it nears the Gundava Hills west of Shikarpoor; follows thence the range till near Sehwan, whence it runs south through the hills till it meets the Hubb river, which it follows to the sea. This part of the frontier is under Sind.

As a general rule, the whole frontier from Cashmere to the Hubb river avoids the highest and most inaccessible hill ranges. There is but little plain country between the frontier and the hills, except in Kutchee.

The commercial passes are few and far between. The best known are the Kyber and the Bolan, which have been the usual routes for armies invading India or leaving India. It is a noteworthy fact that neither has ever been successfully defended by the hill tribes against an army seriously attacking it. Both have been forced, in our own time, by British columns not exceeding 12,000 fighting men, of whom more than half were Native troops. It is also noteworthy that the real Kyber pass has never been open for trade for more than a few weeks at a time since we have had the Punjab. The Amir cannot keep it open, and, it is supposed, would not like us to take the task of opening it into our own hands, which, apparently, would not be at all difficult. Meantime trade goes by less easy routes to the north of the real Kyber, between the Kyber and the Cabul river. Passes.

Between the Kyber and the Bolan are several other good passes little known to Europeans, but used by the trading caravans, who are able, if necessary, to fight their way through from Guzni, Khelat-i-Gilji, and Quetta, to the Derajat.

South of the Bolan are several passes, such as the Moola and Gundava passes, occasionally used by traders. But those who do not use the Bolan usually take the route south from Khelat without entering Sind, till they cross the Hubb, 20 miles from Kurrachee.

Away from the passes there is not so much difference as is generally supposed in the obstacles which the hills present to invasion or military occupation. From Dhera Ghazee Khan southward the hills are generally inferior in height to the Great Suleiman and Sub-Himalayan ranges. But what they want in elevation is made up for by the precipitous character of the valleys, which, in the Belooch Hills, are often rifts in the rock, with perpendicular sides many hundred feet in sheer descent. These and the frequent almost total absence of water and firewood render military operations in the ranges south of the Derajat quite as difficult as to the northward.

The tribes inhabiting the frontier fall under two great divisions. Northward of Dhera Ghazee Khan they are generally of Pathan or Afghan origin, speaking Pustoo or some cognate dialect. South of Dhera Ghazee Khan they are almost exclusively of Belooch or Brahooee origin and speech. There is considerable difference in appearance and character, the northern, or Afghan and Pathan, tribes being the handsomer and more intelligent race. But, as fighting men, the Beloochees have never shown any inferiority to their neighbours. Tribes.

As regards their government the Punjab tribes are in a very anomalous position. Most of them are practically independent, but many, probably the greater number, acknowledge some sort of nominal subordination to the Ruler of Cabul. This subordination we have generally been shy either to recognise or deny, and have never made much use of it in keeping the border peace. We have generally treated the tribes as useful buffers between us and the Amir, and the tribes themselves have been too glad to play off the one power against the other.

The result is that they are in a position quite unlike anything known either to European or Indian diplomacy. We are neither at peace or war with them—an armed truce would perhaps be the nearest description of any similar state elsewhere. No one can tell who is their master or sovereign. We abjure, in terms, all responsibility beyond our own border line, but we cannot get quit of it in fact. We decline to recognise effectively, whilst we cannot but feel, the Amir's influence over the tribes. If they offend us we retaliate. Then there is blockade or more active war. In the latter case, the war is generally as sudden and as much by surprise as we can make it, rarely with any civilized forms of declaration of hostilities. When we have secured our point, or had enough of fighting, there is cessation of hostilities, and the enemy are allowed to act as if there were peace.

Till lately the position of the tribes on the Sind border was, in a diplomatic sense, better defined. They were treated as the subjects of the Khan of Khelat. Over some of the more powerful his authority had long been little better than nominal, but it was never denied by the tribes in terms, was always distinctly recognised by us, and was in every way a very useful lever for acting on them. In 1870, after a conference at Mittunkote between the Sind and Punjab frontier officials, it was decided to adopt in part the Punjab system in dealing with two powerful tribes (Murrees and Boogtees), whose country lay partly on the Sind and partly on the Punjab frontier. This seems to me to have been a grave mistake, and to account for much of the subsequent disorder.

Neither class of frontier officials seem to have altered their own principles of dealing with these tribes. The Sind officials still regarded them as subjects of the Khan, and to be dealt with through him; the Punjabee officials looked on them as practically independent, and to be dealt with accordingly as separate powers. The Sindees would have coerced them; the Punjabees wished to persuade them by motives of self-interest, and to take them into British service.

But the division of authority on our side the border remained, and the tribes were still able to play off one set of British officers against the other. Nor were either Sindee or Punjabee officials allowed by the Government of India to follow out their several principles to their legitimate consequences.

The object was to put a stop to the plundering and disorder. This could have been effected by the Khan, had we supported him as we did in 1859, or it could have been done by our Punjab officers, had they been allowed to use an adequate force of our own troops, but neither course was effectively carried out, and the old see-saw went on.

A little further authority to interfere was given to the Punjab officers after Sir William Merewether's visit to Calcutta in March 1875, but no power to enforce obedience or good conduct was given to any one.

Is it a subject of surprise that the only result has been to embroil our officials, and to make the confusion where there was conflict of authority worse than before?

It must be remembered that Sind was annexed to British India in 1843, and for some years after the frontier was much disturbed by incursions of the Belooch tribes. Life and property were insecure for a considerable distance within British territory, and as late as 1847 many thousand head of cattle were swept off by a raid of Beloochees, who plundered up to the immediate neighbourhood of Shikarpoor. Up to this time there had been much division of authority on the frontier. In 1847, General John Jacob was placed in command, and gradually introduced a system which was acted on, with little variation, up to about six years ago, when some changes were made after the Mittunkote conference between the Punjab and Sind Frontier officers above referred to. These have since led to the Punjab system being this year extended to Sind.

The relations between the Khan of Khelat and the British officers in Sind had till lately been generally friendly, though the Beloochees had no great reason to love us. In 1839, Sir J. Wiltshire, returning from Cabul, stormed Khelat, killed the ruler, Mehrab Khan, in his citadel, and plundered his capital. A rival was set up by us as Khan, in place of his son, a child, Nusseer Khan, who fled westwards, but, having been brought back by Mehrab Khan's widow, the interloper was deposed, Nusseer Khan was elected ruler, and we found it convenient to acquiesce in the succession. He behaved well after the British conquest of Sind from the Belooch Amirs, and in 1855 a treaty was concluded with him, by which he became a subordinate ally of the British Government, and a small subsidy was allowed him, to aid him in restoring order to his distracted country.

For some years past his successor, Khodadad Khan, has evinced a spirit the reverse of friendly. This is possibly in part owing to foreign intrigues, as the first manifestation by him of an indisposition to be guided by the Commissioner in Sind coincides very closely with a visit of a Russian officer to Khelat, where he resided for some time; but whatever may have been the cause, it is certain that for some years past the Khan has been quite "out of hand," oppressing his chiefs, and setting at nought the counsel of the Commissioner in Sind to such an extent that payment of his subsidy was suspended, and the Commissioner proposed to send a force to bring him to order, but this was not allowed by the Government of India. The Government of India were persuaded that the personal influence of Captain Sandeman, a Punjab Deputy Commissioner, would be sufficient to adjust all differences between the Khan and his disaffected subjects. This interference naturally led to a misunderstanding between the Commissioner, Sir William Merewether, and Captain Sandeman. The Government of India have supported the latter, and instructed him to relieve Sir William Merewether of all political duties connected with the frontier. Major Monro has since been sent down to look after Captain Sandeman, and the result appears to be a complete deadlock.

The Punjab was not finally annexed till 1849. The arrangements then made for the management of frontier affairs have continued with little variation up to the present time.

We began by being on terms of semi-hostile intercourse with the ruler of Cabul; a better understanding with him, and finally a treaty, was brought about by the late Sir Herbert Edwardes, in 1855, but we have avoided recognising the Amir as sovereign of the tribes in contact with our frontier; our relations with them are, as above described, so anomalous that they are hardly capable of definition according to any recognised diplomatic formula.

The main differences between the Sind and Punjab system of dealing with frontier tribes may now be briefly stated as follows:—

1. In Sind it was a cardinal rule to attempt no disintegration of the Khan of Khelat"s sovereignty, whether nominal or real, over the Belooch tribes, but rather by every means in our power to uphold his authority. Complainants below the rank of Chiefs, small or great, were told to apply to their Chiefs. Chiefs, or complainants against Chiefs, were referred to the Khan. Every effort was made to enable or induce the Khan to give redress when needed, and to keep his people in order. The Khan was regarded as our independent ally, free to act as he pleased in internal affairs, but under military subordination to the English Government in all that could affect anything beyond his own border.	1. The Punjab policy was "divide et impera." Deal separately with each tribe and each section of a tribe,—avoid, as far as possible, recognising any authority over the frontier tribes,—keep them as buffers.
2. In Sind it was our main object to concentrate all power and responsibility, civil as well as military, in the hands of the frontier Commandant and Political Superintendent. He commanded all troops on the frontier, whether local or belonging to the regular army. In his military capacity he was responsible to no one but the Commander-in-Chief and Government. He was also sole Political Agent and Superintendent of Police, Chief Magistrate, judge, and engineer, fiscal officer, and canal officer of a strip of territory of various width from 10 to 50 miles on the frontier of Kutchee. He had assistants to aid him in the several departments, but he had no superior except the Commissioner, who ruled the whole province, through whom he corresponded with Government.	2. In the Punjab there has always been much greater division of power and responsibility. The civil and military officials are kept separate and independent, the nearest authority common to both being in some cases the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, but more often the Viceroy. The military authority is again divided. The troops of the regular army are under one brigadier, responsible to the Commander-in-Chief. The Punjab troops holding all outposts are under a separate brigadier, only partially responsible to the Commander-in-Chief. The engineers for public works are in four divisions, the police in two, all independent of each other, and of the Commissioners.
3. In Sind the force employed on the frontier was special in discipline and equipment, local as regarded the scene of its ordinary service, but its discipline was under the general control of the Commander-in-Chief, and the force formed an	3. In the Punjab the frontier force was partly from the regular army under the Commander-in-Chief, partly from the frontier force under local Governments, and partly from the police, both the latter independent of the Commander-in-Chief.

From the excellence of the original constitution of the troops, from their officers being well selected, and from constant practice, they were among the best in the army.

4. The principle laid down for our dealings with the frontier tribes in Sind was to be actively good neighbours to them, "to do as we would be done by," not to meddle or interfere across the border with what did not concern us, but to regard the good or bad fortune or conduct of our neighbours as matters of intimate concern to us; "not to let his house burn lest ours should burn also;" to help the Khan's authority, not to supersede it, but to allow nothing to go unnoticed within reach of our outposts if the evil threatened to involve our people. Active interference by using our troops was only permitted in case of overt acts of outrage by armed men, such as no local police could cope with, cattle lifting by armed bands and the like. In all such cases our troops acted at once as against a civilised enemy in the field, pursued and attacked, without reference to border; because if on our side, they were armed enemies of the British Government; if on the other side, they were armed enemies of our ally the Khan.

Prisoners made in the latter case were handed over to the Khan for disposal.

5. In Sind the limit of our active interference across the border was a purely military limit. The Commandant was charged to use his troops, for the protection of life and property of all peaceable people against all armed evil-doers, not only in our own territory but in that of our ally, "within our reach." This was defined in a military sense. Our troops were never to move without proper supports and reserves, never to enter on ground where they could not act with efficiency, thus excluding the cavalry from attempts to enter the hills without supports of infantry or guns.

But of all this, the Frontier Commandant was the sole judge, in the first instance, responsible through the Commissioner in Sind to Government and to the Commander-in-Chief direct.

6. When following up an enemy across the Sind border, beyond British territory,

But, as in Sind, all the troops on the frontier of every arm were the best of their kind, and in a military sense, patterns to the rest of the army.

4. The principles laid down for the dealings of our frontier officers in the Punjab with the tribes over the border were, as I have been variously told by such officers, "absolute non-interference," and "masterly inactivity," "budi for budi" (i.e., evil for evil), if our neighbours injured us, but, otherwise, abstention from all interference. On no account were our troops to cross the border without express instructions from Government. We were to hold ourselves absolutely irresponsible for the good or bad conduct of our neighbours over the border as long as they let us alone.

It is noteworthy that I never yet met a good Punjab frontier officer who seemed to me quite satisfied with the principles on which he had been acting, or the mode in which he was allowed to carry them out. The dissatisfaction often was shown by an exaggeration of desire for greater severity. I have frequently heard the remark that "the way General Avitabile treated them "was the only way to keep these people "in order." Avitabile's plan being to hang every malefactor, and, in bad cases of murder or plunder, if the malefactor could not be caught, to imprison his family or fellow tribesmen, with threats of putting them to death, if the real malefactor were not seized or slain. Tradition went that the threat was not always mere menace. It was said to have been sometimes executed, and this was looked on as strong government.

5. On the Punjab no troops were allowed to cross the border except under distinct orders for a regular expedition, previously sanctioned by Government. Such expeditions were extremely frequent, and often planned and executed with consummate courage and military ability. But the ultimate result was often small in proportion, owing apparently to division of authority intervening, just at the critical moment, to mar the complete success of the military operations, or to prevent its permanence being secured.

6. When an expedition by our troops across the Punjab border was sanctioned, the ordinary rules of war in civilized countries were ordered to be strictly observed: armed men resisting were to be attacked and defeated, made prisoners, or slain; unresisting or unarmed men were to be everywhere spared and protected; no plunder was permitted; no wanton destruction of houses, trees, crops, or other property was allowed; provisions taken from unarmed country people were to be duly paid for.

The object aimed at was the individual punishment of the evil-doer, not the punishment of his tribe or family. Punishment of the culprit's clansmen, with a view, by coercing the innocent, to reach the guilty, was not allowed.

7. In Sind, no notice was taken of tribal ties or local custom as excuses for offences against British law. Private warfare and private reprisals by cattle lifting, &c. were forbidden. The excuse of "custom" in such case was ignored or treated as an aggravation of the offence, inasmuch as it was a proof of premeditation. In the strongest case of all, i.e., blood-feuds, &c., the tribes were made to understand that the prosecution of a feud was not permitted by our Government, no allowance was made for the excuse that the murder or robbery would have been venial or permissible under the Native Government. No favour was shown to men who, according to our ideas, were malefactors.

8. Crime being treated not as a private wrong, but as a public offence, and the protection of persons and property from open armed violence being undertaken by the State, it was not necessary in Sind for every one to carry arms. None but soldiers and servants of Government were allowed to go armed, all others were required to leave their arms at home, or to give them up at the first police post in British territory.

9. Every aid in Sind was given to the Khan's officers and subjects to obtain redress for injuries inflicted in Khelat territory or on Khelat subjects by our people. It was a point of honour to mete out to the Khan and his people the same measure that we exacted from them.

We dealt with Khelat as far as possible as we would with Belgium or Switzerland.

10. The result in Sind was, after a very few years, entire freedom of the frontier districts from raids, and perfect security of the great object seemed to be to strike terror into the enemy. For some years, prisoners were rarely made and quarter rarely given to armed men. Houses, trees, crops, &c., were destroyed. Tribal punishment was the object, and whatever inflicted loss or suffering on the tribe was permissible without reference to the chance of the punishment reaching the individual evil-doer. With a view to bring tribal pressure on the culprit, his whole tribe might be blockaded, or the culprit's tribesmen who could not possibly have shared his guilt might be imprisoned till he made restitution.

I am assured that the severity of this system has of late years been much mitigated by the humanity of the officers employed. But it is still rare for experienced Punjab officials to admit that it is both possible and desirable to carry on war againt such barbarous frontier tribes on the same principles as against civilized mountaineers in Europe.

7. On the Punjab frontier, much use was made of tribal bonds in managing the tribes, and much allowance was made for local custom as an excuse for what in our territory was regarded as crime. Private warfare and private reprisals were winked at, if not encouraged, and men would ask for and obtain leave to cross the border, and commit crimes, such as murder to avenge a blood-feud, which would have been punishable in our own territory.

8. The carrying of arms was generally permitted on the Punjab frontier, and all men were rather encouraged to undertake their own defence. Much use was made of volunteer fighting men prosecuting old tribal feuds to keep their neighbours in order.

9. In the Punjab it was never expected that the authorities beyond the border should surrender malefactors, and no surrender of malefactors who were British subjects for offences done in Afghan territory was ever thought of.

We dealt with the tribes beyond our frontier as the French would with tribes beyond their border in Algeria, as powers outside the pale of civilized diplomacy.

10. I am hardly in a position to describe fully the effect of our twenty-five years' life and property within our border. During the nine years I knew the frontier, up to 1859–60, the Bolan Pass and other trade routes were open and secure for travellers; there was greater general security within the Khan's territory than had been known for ages. The Khan and all his people were obedient to every demand of the British Government. British officers used to go habitually to the Khan's upper districts, Quetta, &c., and stay there for weeks together during the hot weather, hunting or shooting in the hills, and everywhere received as welcome guests, and they traversed all parts of the Khelat territory up to the Persian frontier with merely honorary escorts of British sowars. The Murrees were the only exception to this description. They were partially supported in an independent position by being partly within the Punjab frontier jurisdiction and by the refusal of the Government of India to allow them to be brought to order by an expedition to put down their marauding.

Even this, however, had been effected by the Khan, acting under the advice of Colonels Merewether and Henry and Malcolm Green, and shortly before I left Sind in 1859, he had occupied the Murree capital and there received the submission of the Murree chiefs. I append a copy of their report, as it throws very important light on the general question of frontier defence and management.

trial of the Punjab system. The border is at this moment probably as quiet as it ever was before, but it is still in the state described by Sir Hugh Rose when Commander-in-Chief in India as "neither peace nor war," and no English traveller has for 25 years been allowed to pass the border unless protected by an armed force.

The two principal passes (Kohat and Kyber) leading to Peshawur are at this moment, I believe, closed, against our will and contrary to our interests, and I do not know that on any part of our frontier our position can be described as better than during an armed truce.

General remarks.—I have heard it objected to the Sind system, that the union of so many duties—military and civil, political, revenue, judicial, &c.—in the hands of one military commandant, requires a combination of talent not often found in any single officer.

There is, of course, some truth in this. It is contrary to our policy in old settled provinces in the interior. The several duties would, separately considered, be each better performed by separate officials; but the combination of authority in one military officer's hands has advantages which seem to me to outweigh all objections. The Frontier Commandant had expert assistants under him, who devoted special attention to their special branches, and however imperfectly any separate department might be conducted, there could be no doubt it was always better administered than under any Native Government, sometimes better than in our oldest provinces. In general efficiency, simplicity, and economy, there can be do doubt of the excellence of the old Sind system.

"Why then," it may be asked, "has the Sind border latterly returned to a state of "disorder little better than it was in before 1847, when General Jacob took it in "hand?" Simply, it seems to me, because we have forsaken the old system.

Colonel Phayre began by quarrelling with the Khan and supporting his chiefs against him. This was a departure from a cardinal principle of the Sind system, and was the primary element of confusion.

Since the Mittunkote conference, between the Punjab and Sind officials, in March 1870, there has been a more or less divided system of management in all that effects the Murrees and Boogtees, two important frontier tribes.

Since 1875 this dual system of management has been extended to Khelat itself and to all the border tribes. This seems to me quite sufficient to account for the present confusion and dead lock.

As I read the correspondence, I cannot imagine how any Belooch Chief can make out who he is to obey,—the Khan, Sir Wm. Merewether, Captain Sandeman, or Major Monro. He will probably avoid, if he can, obeying any one, and will naturally go back to his old habits of plundering on his own account. I cannot imagine how anything but confusion and disorder can result from such a state of things.

At the best the result could only be to extend to the sea the Punjab frontier system This, perhaps, may be regarded as a good result. I may be excused if I cannot view it in any such light. To my judgment it is deliberately to give up a system which, whilst it was in force, gave us peace and good order on both sides the frontier, and the fullest military command of all Beloochistan, and to accept in exchange a system which confines us strictly to our own frontier line, and forbids any British Officer to move beyond it.

I have always been in favour of uniting Sind to the Punjab, so as to have one government from Cashmere to the sea, but I should regard any abandonment of the distinctive features of the Sind frontier system as too high a price to pay for any such advantage of unity of administration along the whole line of the Indus.

Nor does it seem to me to be the least necessary. The distinctive features in the Sind system to which I attach most importance are,—

1. It was a military system. Military defence and security were the first objects.
2. It was a neighbourly system, and made the Khan and his tribes not only glad to have us as neighbours, but anxious to be submissive and obedient neighbours to us.
3. Authority was undivided on both sides the border.
4. It was in accordance with civilized usages in war as well as in peace.

That it was also simpler, and perfectly intelligible and defensible according to European ideas, that it was economical as well as efficacious were additional advantages.

But there is nothing whatever to prevent its being worked as well from Lahore as it ever was from Bombay; and if the Punjab frontier officers would candidly examine it, I am not without hope that they would find much to improve, and something, perhaps, to adopt.

For instance, would our position at Peshawur, or anywhere else on the Punjab frontier, be less strong, if, instead of the present multitude of independent departments and commands, there were only one chief, as military commandant and Viceroy's Agent?

Or if he had authority to deal with the Amir and the frontier tribes, so as to establish the best possible neighbourly relations with them, helping them if they wanted help, punishing them severely if they insulted, annoyed, or thwarted us, and using, for the purpose of such punishment, whatever force might be necessary to convince rude and arrogant men that we were far stronger than they were, and were not to be insulted, annoyed, or thwarted with impunity, but that, if our neighbours behaved well to us, we behaved well to our neighbours.

I cannot but think that any of our great frontier commanders would feel his hands much strengthened if he were told that he had the confidence of Government, and that his instructions were to act on the above principles; that between the Indus and the mountains he was supreme, and that he was to deal with his neighbours over the border as England deals with Greece, not as France deals with Algerian Arabs.

No. 7.

Minute by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab on—I. Frontier Relations on Sind Border. II. Subordination of the Adminstration of Sind to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

Under the orders of the Government of India, the political functions of the Commissioner in Sind have already been transferred from that officer to the Commissioner of the Derajat.

2. Colonel Munro from the beginning recommended that the Political Superintendent should control the border relations from Vihowa to the sea, so as to secure the direction of our dealings with the Belooch tribes by a single officer. In his letter No. 60, dated 3rd instant (herewith annexed), he expresses his conviction that it is essential to the successful management of those relations that the district of the Upper Sind Frontier should be under the jurisdiction of the Political Superintendent.

3. This district is small in area and revenue, and has hitherto been managed by the officer commanding the Jacobabad Brigade, aided by an assistant and a deputy collector.

Relieved of military duties and of civil details, the extension of the frontier charge to Vihowa, or, as now proposed by Colonel Munro, to Harand, would not render it too onerous.

4. The Superintendent, it is understood, would, as heretofore, be the direct medium of communication with the Khelat Government. In my opinion this arrangment is preferable to placing a resident at Khelat, as it will, in all probability, restrict the necessity for interference and the chances of friction.

5. The Political Superintendent would be bound, like the Commissioner of Peshawur, to keep the Government of India fully and promptly informed, but would be subject to the control of the Commissoner of the Derajat and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The whole North-western Frontier would then be under one authority, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, with whom would rest the responsibility of seeing that the policy of the Government of India is fully carried out by all subordinate agents.

6. Although the initiation and direction of that policy must remain with the Governor General in Council, who must therefore be directly furnished with minute information, I think it would be a mistake to do away with the intervention either of the Commissioner or the Lieutenant-Governor; for although this might be done, perhaps not disadvantageously, if the States of Afghanistan and Khelat were made up of compact and isolated nationalities, still, seeing that the contrary is the case, that cognate tribes sometimes independent, sometimes our own subjects, dwell on the boundaries, that our relations with these are too petty and multifarious to be managed otherwise than on the spot, and that if not well managed, they may seriously complicate our understanding with the larger States, I cannot think that it would be expedient to dispense with the local knowledge inherent in the position of those experienced officers.

7. I consider that the devolution on a single officer of the management of our relations with the Khelat Government, and the Belooch tribes generally, and of the civil administration of the Upper Frontier District—that officer being placed in subordination to the Commissioner of the Derajat and of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab—would meet the pressing and essential issue at stake. The Government of India might then renew negotiations with the Khan without risk of their being traversed by the cross purposes of a divided executive.

8. Colonel Munro has, however, at my request, also examined the existing system of frontier defence. His conclusion is that the military force is amply sufficient, and might possibly be reduced. He also strongly recommends that the numerous Belooch levies (400) he separated from the force, and subordinated to the Political Superintendent (as newly constituted). I am of opinion that this recommendation should be sanctioned at once. The question of the strength of the military force to be maintained at Jacobabad has many ramifications; all that I would propose now is that it be carefully investigated. If the circumstances admit of the arrangement, unity of military command along the frontier is in itself to be desired.

9. The special frontier police would, as a matter of course, be under the Political Superintendent, and, as our relations with Khelat are improved, might be reduced.

10. There remains the question of subordinating the Commissioner in Sind to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, instead of to the Bombay Government. There would, in my opinion, be no difficulty about this if the Punjab Secretariat were strengthened as proposed by Mr. Thornton. At the same time I cannot say that I think it essential to the main object that I understand the Government of India to have in view, the concentration of political affairs on the frontier: that would be accomplished by the annexation of the Upper Frontier District to the Punjab. There would then be no pressing necessity to change the position of the Commissioner in Sind until the railway is completed. Still, if deemed advisable, it could be done. During Sir William Merewether's incumbency, it would not, I presume, be desired to introduce much alteration in the administrative machinery, and time would thus be gained for the decision of the question whether the territory should be formed into one or two Punjab Divisions.

11. In the present circumstances, the smallness of the Upper Frontier District is no disadvantage. The real matter in hand is to renew the attempt, free of former hindrances, to give peace to Khelat, and safe passage to the Candahar trade. The attempt may yet fail, but delay is in no case advisable. The first duty of the Political Superintendent is, in my opinion, to press upon the Khan, under the guidance of the Government of India, the imperial necessity that exists for the composition of the local feuds of Khelat; and as he professes himself willing and anxious to act in accordance with the wishes of the Government of India, I cannot, making allowances for the tergiversation of his character, perceive any good reason for withholding energetic support to the exertions of Captain Sandeman: that officer believes the Khan to be under the fixed impression that his coercion of his Sirdars was in accordance with the policy of the British Government. The Khan declares that his main aim is to shape his course in accordance with that policy. His Highness is no doubt of unstable temper, and swayed to and fro by fitful passions, but it still remains to be seen if he cannot be made amenable to counsels of the paramount power, which he can no longer pretend to misunderstand. But time presses and action is demanded.

12. Until the Khan is brought to his bearings, I would spare the Political Superintendent as far possible from civil details. Afterwards it might be a good arrangement to add the Rajanpoor Subdivision to the Upper Frontier District. And considering the additional work thrown on the Commissioner of the Derajat, it is, I think, advisable as sugggested in Mr. Griffin's note,* to transfer at once from that to the Peshawur Division, the district of Bunnu, in the population of which the Pathans largely predominate.

* See note on para. 19 of Colonel Munro's letter, p. 21.

13. The question of giving up districts to the south of the Sutlej in exchange for the districts annexed from Sind has been discussed in Mr. Aitchison's note, but I do not think any decision now necessary or desirable. The question, which is purely one of administrative covenience, is quite distinct from the question of a uniform frontier policy. The Delhi districts give no trouble whatever, and I have no reason to believe that their remaining in the Punjab, with which they have been long and in various ways connected, will occasion any inconvenient increase of administrative work.

Camp Sirhind, the 11th March 1876. (Signed.) R. H. Davies.

Enclosure in No. 7.

No. 60, dated Jacobabad, 3rd March 1876.

From Lieut.-Col. A. A. Munro, Offg. Commr. and Supdt., Derajat (on special duty). To Lepel H. Griffin, Esq., Offg. Secretary to the Government of the Punjab.

Replies to telegraphic messages.

In telegraphic messages of the 25th ultimo and 2nd instant, respectively from his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, my opinion has been asked on the following points :—

1st. How Sind may be placed under the Punjab Government effectually without disturbance of existing administrative arrangements ; and 2ndly.—Whether any, and what changes appear to be called for in the system of frontier defence, with the financial result, either way.

2. I shall now endeavour, as briefly as possible, to comply with the above instructions in so far as a short acquaintance and study of the subject enable me to do so, craving indulgence for any deficiencies under present circumstances, and giving a preliminary sketch of the existing state of things.

Area of Sind.

3. The total area of Sind—Cis and Trans-Indus—may be estimated at not more than 60,000 square miles. Of that area large portions in the Cis-Indus tracts of Thur and Parkur, Hydrabad, Khyrpoor, and Rohri, and also on the Upper Sind Frontier, Trans-Indus, consists of Thul, or desert, very sparsely populated, much of it being unculturable. The population of the whole province is believed not to exceed two millions, or to be about one-tenth that of the Punjab and its dependencies.

Extensive wastes.

Population.

Present civil administration of Sind vested in Commissioner under Bombay Government.

4. The control of the Sind administration, as at present constituted, rests with the Commissioner in Sind, who, except in so far as he may, from time to time, be specially invested with the powers of a local Government by legislative enactments, is subordinate to the Government of Bombay. The Commissioner in Sind immediately controls all departments of Government in the province. Until recently he was Governor General's Agent for the Beloochistan Frontier, retaining the direction, and supervising the conduct, of British relations with his Highness the Khan of Khelat. The Commissioner in Sind discharges no judicial functions, but he is asisted by two Assistant Commissioners on his personal staff.

His personal staff.

Division of Sind into three Collecterates.

Collector and Magistrate, his powers and duties.

5. For purposes of revenue administration Sind is divided into three extensive Collectorates viz., of Kurrachee, Hydrabad, and Shikarpoor ; each presided over by a Collector and Magistrate, who exercises extensive powers of revenue and magisterial executive superintendence, and who, in his varied sphere of duty, may not inaptly be compared to a 1st Class Deputy Commissioner in the Punjab. He is charged with the chief executive administration of his Collectorate (or Zillah, as it might be called in Bombay), in the Revenue and Judicial Departments—in the latter hearing, I believe, all appeals from the orders of subordinate magistrates, as he does in the revenue department from the orders of his deputy collectors, as they do from those of Mukhtiarkars (or Tehsildars).

6. Each Collectorate is divided into several districts, presided over by Deputy Collectors, having also magisterial powers, with Assistants (European and Native) subordinate to them. Under these come the native Mukhtiarkars, whose office corresponds with that of Tehsildar in the Punjab, The Tuppahdar is an exclusively revenue official, whose position more resembles that of Canoongo than Naib Tehsildar with us, and whose duties are confined to revenue collection within tuppah circles under control of the Mukhtiarkar.

Deputy Collectorates.

Subordinate officials.

7. It will be observed that the Collectorates proper, of which the areas may thus be approximately given,—

Approximate areas of Collectorates.

Kurrachee	16,600	square miles,
Hydrabad	9,200	„
Shikarpoor	10,200	„

are much more extensive than an ordinary sized Punjab District. The sub-division of each into deputy collectorates, or districts, will, on the other hand, be generally found to be much smaller than a Punjab district. Of these, there are five in Kurrachee, five in Hydrabad, and six in Shikarpoor, each under charge of its Deputy Collector, Assistant Collectors, and Mukhtiarkars, whose circles of supervision are termed "Talookas" instead of Pergunnahs as with us.

Larger than ordinary district of Punjab.

Deputy Collectorships smaller than Punjab Deputy Commissionerships.

Talookas.

8. Distinguished from other districts, though included like them, I believe, as regards revenue matters only, in the Collectorates of Shikarpoor and Hydrabad, respectively, are the districts of the Upper Sind Frontier, Trans-Indus, and Thur and Parkur, Cis-Indus.

Districts under Political Superintendents.

9. These districts are immediately controlled by a Political Superintendent. The area of the Frontier District of Upper Sind Frontier is little more than 2,000 square miles, and the head-quarters are at Jacobabad, where the Political Superintendent has hitherto necessarily resided; his civil and political charges being combined, with or added to, the command of the Sind Frontier Brigade. Under him are an Assistant Political Superintendent and Deputy Collector, who are also invested with magisterial powers.

District of Upper Sind Frontier.

Civil, Political, Revenue, and Military control all combined.

10. The Thur and Parkur District, Cis-Indus, is a tract of extensive area said to exceed 12,000 square miles, with a population of only 18 to the square mile, and this charge is also held by a Political Superintendent, who has under him a European Deputy Collector and several Mukhtiarkars. This district did not originally form part of Sind; but it was taken from the Political Agency of Kutch, about 20 years ago, and incorporated. The territory of Khyrpoor, between the last-named district and that of Rohri, Cis-Indus, is held in jaghire by Mir Ali Murad of the Talpur family.

Thur and Parkur District. Political Superintendent. Subordinates.

11. The entire revenues of Sind, of which two-thirds may be estimated roughly as land revenue, are stated to aggregate from 60 to 65 lakhs of rupees. Extensive systems of canal irrigation exist throughout the province, supervised and conducted by a special department.

12. The judicial administration of Sind is controlled and supervised by a Sudder Court at Kurrachee, presided over by a Judicial Commissioner. The Criminal and Civil Procedure Codes are in force. In each Collectorate (or Zillah) there is a District Civil and Sessions Judge (with Subordinate Civil Judges, formerly styled Munsiffs), who conducts the judicial work, and exercises appellate jurisdiction over Magistrates and Civil Judges generally.

Judicial administration of Sind.

13. The police force numbers nearly 4,000 men, including a small body of frontier police, specially entertained on the lower, or Kurrachee frontier, last year, in connexion with Khelat border disturbances. The Commissioner in Sind is ex-officio Inspector-General of Police, and the force is more immediately controlled by three District European Superintendents (with one European Assistant Superintendent for Kurrachee) and 14 Inspectors, chiefly, if not wholly, natives, with the usual proportion of subordinate officers spread over the province. In the Upper Sind frontier district the police are controlled by the Political Superintendent. Sir Bartle Frere, who held the Commissionership in Sind for several years, has left his opinion on record that the Sind police are excellent.

Sir B. Frere's opinion of Police.

14. Kurrachee and Hydrabad are held by a regiment of European infantry, some artillery, and two regiments of Belooch infantry. The Upper Sind Frontier station of Jacobabad is the permanent cantonment of three regiments of Sind Horse (numbering about 1,500 cavalry), of a regiment of Native Infantry (Jacob's Rifles), and a light field battery of artillery. Besides these, a body of irregular cavalry, designated "Belooch Guides," and numbering from 300 to 400, is maintained exclusively in the military department, though under orders of the Political Superintendent.

Military force.

15. I consider that much difficulty would not be experienced in placing Sind effectually under the Government of the Punjab, without any material disturbance of the existing administrative system.

Commissioner's opinion on annexing Sind to Punjab.

16. Were the present quasi Chief Commissionership to be replaced by an assimilation to the apportionment into divisions and districts of the Punjab province, Sind might not inappropriately be formed into two divisions, each under a Commissioner, as in the Punjab.

Might form two divisions.

17. Bearing in mind what has been already advanced in my letter No. 20, of the 12th ultimo, to your address, and not having as yet so intimate a knowledge of Sind in all its requirements as would justify the expression of a too confident opinion, I shall merely note what appears to me, on a general survey, and a necessarily superficial view, to be both feasible and practicable.

General suggestions.

18. Instead of one Chief Commissionership and three Collectorates as now, we might have two Commissionerships in Sind; a territorial redistribution of the present revenue circles and subordinate Deputy Collectorship being so made as to cause the least possible change of existing administrative arrangements.

As to territorial re-distribution.

19. Of two proposals which suggest themselves, the first is that which commends itself most to my mind, and it is this: to make the divisional boundary throughout Sind, as it now is, between Rawul Pindi and two districts of the Peshawur division, and to some extent between the Mooltan and Derajat divisions. Sind might very advantageously be thus divided into "Eastern" and "Western" divisions; or they might be designated the "Hydrabad" or Cis-Indus" and the "Frontier" or "Trans-Indus" divisions; the head-quarters of the former to be Hydrabad, and of the latter Shikarpoor in the winter, and Kurrachee in the summer months.

Indus an appropriate dividing line.

Note.—I do not think this a good division, as the Frontier Commissioner would have an onerous charge, including Kurrachee, that would have no connexion with his special work. The frontier must be treated as a whole, and if the road through the Kohat Pass be made and held, the Commissioner of Peshawur could take Bannu, and the Southern Frontier Commissioner from the Peyzu Pass to Larkhana or Shikarpoor, and leave all the country below to the Commissioner of Kurrachee.—(Sd.) L. H. G.

Designation of divisions.

20. Presupposing such an arrangement to be approved, there is nothing peculiarly noticeable regarding the Cis-Indus or Hydrabad division, which would very much resemble some of our divisions in the Punjab.

Cis-Indus division.

21. The frontier division would necessarily present some unusual features; but I am convinced that if a Trans-Indus Sind Frontier division were properly administered from the vantage points of Shikarpoor and Kurrachee alternately, our border arrangements, our relations with the Khelat, our influence in maintaining the traffic routes to and from Khorassan and Central Asia, whether through the Bolan and Mulla Passes, or those from Kurrachee through Lus Beyla and Khelat, and our power of controlling the Murree and Boogtee tribes, might be established on a far firmer footing than they have ever been.

Trans-Indus or Frontier division.

22. The alternative proposal is that of attaching such parts of the present Kurrachee Collectorate as do not trench upon the frontier to the Hydrabad Commissionership, from considerations rather of the large amount of internal administrative work to be expected in and near Kurrachee (a rising seaport, the importance of which must steadily increase) than any other. A closer scrutiny or a more intimate knowledge of the actual state of affairs might demonstrate the non-existence of this supposed difficulty.

Alternative proposal.

Reasons.

23. I apprehend that the Commissioner of Hydrabad would exercise the powers of a Civil and Sessions Judge throughout his division as is done in the Punjab; the necessity for an additional Commissioner or for Sessions Judges to be determined by the amount of work to be done.

Commissioner to discharge judicial functions.

24. The Frontier Commissioner, too, might fairly be expected to discharge judicial functions to a more limited extent, although much of his time would necessarily be devoted to controlling border arrangements and conducting our political relations with the Khelat State through the Political Superintendent in Upper Sind, who would be stationed at Jacobabad. In the event of the annexation of Sind to the Punjab, some modification of the proposals made in my report of the 12th ultimo might be desirable. The limit of direct interference by the Commissioner of the Sind Frontier division with the Derajat border might be fixed at Harrand, or the Sakhi Sarwar Pass, instead of Vehoa. The authority of the Commissioner in Sind qua the Murree and Boogtee tribes has extended to the former place for several years, ever since the Mittunkote Conference of 1871, and it would be disadvantageous in the highest degree to relax the hold which the Political Superintendent of the Upper Sind Frontier has obtained upon the Murrees and Boogtees, through their intermarriages with the Mazaris, Drishaks, and Shagharis of the Derajat border, and otherwise, or to risk failure of our proposed measures by resigning the exercise of that great moral force into the hands of any less experienced officers, until our influence over the Murrees especially becomes more firmly established. The Assistant Commissioner in charge of the Rajanpoor sub-division should remain, as before, subordinate to the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, and to the Frontier Sind Commissioner, in regard to all his dealings with the border tribes of that sub-division.

Slight modification of former proposals.

Reasons.

Part subordination of Assistant Commissioner, Rajanpoor.

25. Each Commissioner would exercise the powers of an Inspector-General of Police over the police force of his division as is now done by the Commissioners of the Peshawur and Derajat divisions.

Each Commissioner to exercise the powers of an Inspector-General of Police.

26. The division of Sind into two Commissionerships, as above, would add nothing, in so far as I can judge, to the cost of administration; a redistribution of the allowances now granted to the highest officials in Sind, with special reference to the arrangements here proposed, would probably meet all our requirements. I state this broadly, however, having no reliable data before me on which to found a more exact opinion.

No increased cost contemplated.

27. Although it would doubtless be practicable to reduce the number of Civil and Sessions Judges now employed in Sind (the Kurrachee Judgeship excepted), if two Commissioners with judicial powers were appointed, I presume that the present arrangements in regard to the highest judicial court in the province, viz., the Sudder Court of the Judicial Commissioner in Sind, must stand. Until the completion of the Indus Valley Railway, Lahore would be too distant a point of resort to parties from Sind having occasion to refer to the highest Appellate Court in matters of law and justice.

Retention of Sudder Court.

28. On the second point referred to at the commencement of this letter, I would now offer a few remarks in conclusion, annexing also copy of a letter on the subject written at my request by Major Sandeman.

Point of frontier miltiary defence.

29. From the sea near Kurrachee, upwards to Khyra Gurhi, the most south-westerly point of the frontier district of Upper Sind, the boundary line between Sind and Khelat is well defined by the Hubb river and the hill ranges of Pabb and Kirthar, the last rising in some places to heights of 6,000 to 7,000 feet. In the Kurrachee and Sehwan districts of the Kurrachee Collectorate several low spurs of hills abut upon the plain of Sind from the Pabb ranges, but higher up the Kirthar continuation retires, forming an admirable western boundary to the districts of Mehar, Larkana and Shikarpoor, which districts all lie between the Kirthar range and the Indus.

Character of people unwarlike.

30. Along the whole extent of this line the tribes, whether of the hills or plains to the westward, have never proved formidable in any sense, nor was it until the disorganised state of affairs in Khelat generally, and the banishment to and imprisonment of the Jam or Chief of Lus Beyla in British territory led to some disturbances on the lower Kurrachee border, that the precaution of establishing a special frontier police even was found necessary to keep those tribes of Chôotas, Jamotes, and others, chiefly Jats, in check.

31. With an improvement in our relations with the Khelat State, and a restoration of settled rule in his Highness the Khan's outlying dependency of Lus Beyla, it will probably be found possible to withdraw the special police. The general character of that part of the border may be judged from the fact that for many years past it has not been found necessary, I believe, to station any troops along it for protection.

Northern Sind Frontier.

32. From the northern part of the Larkhana district the boundary line leaves the mountain ranges and takes a curve by Khyra Gurhi, Jacobabad, and the desert towards Kusmore, where it touches the Indus.

Kutchi.

33. Westward of this line lies Kutchi Gundava (commonly known as Kutchi), a level and fertile tract, stretching 100 miles backwards to the towns of Bagh and Dadar on the one hand, and up to the foot of the Murree and Bagh hill ranges on the other. This plain originally formed part of Sind, of which it is simply a continuation.

Formerly part of Sind.

It is said to have been wrested from the Kulharas of Sind, and annexed to Khelat by Nadir Shah, in compensation for the death of a former Khan of Khelat who was killed fighting with the Kulharas.

34. This boundary line so entirely different from any other on the north-western frontier of India, is that of which we have heard so much in the Punjab from the side of Sind since annexation, and I may confidently say that it appears to me to be the least formidable in my experience of all parts of the frontier. Had the Khans of Khelat been able properly to administer their territories, or even to maintain any respectable authority in this tract of Kutchi since the British annexation of Sind, we might have been saved from much trouble and administrative anxiety. Unfortunately the case was otherwise. The Jakranis, Dhoombkees, Kahiris, and other tribes of Kutchi itself, were our first concern, and, after them, the Murrees and Boogtees, occupying the hill ranges behind them. The former were trained and brought under British subjection by translation to British territory, where hundreds of their horsemen are now in British pay, possessing also extensive grants of land along the Shahiwah, or desert canal. Their withdrawal from their hereditary haunts tended to expose the plains of Kutchi to depredations by Murrees and Boogtees alike, and it is unnecessary here to chronicle the various raids and contests of which those plains have from time to time been the scene.

Results as regards Kutchi.

Defence of this frontier.

35. From Khyra Gurhi to Kusmore the frontier line has been defended by detachments from the large force stationed at Jacobabad, consisting still of three regiments of Native Cavalry (the Sind Horse), one regiment of infantry (Jacob's Rifles), and a light field battery of artillery besides an irregular force of tribal levies, numbering from 300 to 400 horsemen. The Sind Frontier Force originally consisted, I believe, of four cavalry regiments and two of infantry; but it was found practicable some years ago to reduce it by one regiment of each arm.

Force at Jacobabad.

Outpost stations.

36. At present detachments of the Sind Horse are stationed at the outposts, of which the two first-named in the neighbourhood of Jacobabad are not considered permanent, having been established last year in consequence of the conflicts in Kutchi between the Khan's troops and his rebellious Brahooee Sirdars. The present outposts are Khyra Gurhi, Rojan (near Jacobabad), Guranari, Sunri, Toj, and Sooi. All these, with the sole exception of Toj, are beyond the boundary line, and that of Sooi is well within the Boogtee hills, the original occupants of Kusmore outpost having been advanced to this post. There is another outpost at Gundoi, also in the Boogtee hills, held, however, by an irregular body of Boogtee guides or militia under military orders.

Names of outposts.

Outposts within Boogtee hills.

37. The peculiarity of the defence, as compared with that on the Punjab Frontier, is that the outposts on the Sind border have been advanced to particular points in independent territory, whereas those in the Punjab are all without exception in British territory. Of late years it has been found practicable considerably to reduce the strength of men at the outposts, as the Boogtees and Murrees, especially the former, became more and more tractable. The only danger from without, to which any importance seems now to be attached, is that from the Murrees, and their depredations on this side have of late years been almost entirely confined to the Khelat territory of Kutchi.

Great comparative strength of Jacobabad garrison.

38. The existing system of frontier military defence appears to me, comparing it with that of the Punjab, and also with reference to calibre of the tribes beyond the border, in both provinces to be more than ample for every requirement, and it might prove a question for serious consideration whether, with every allowance made for Murrees, Boogtees, Bolan, and Khelat tribes, and the maintenance of a strong outpost commanding one of the principal highways to Afghanistan, the strength of the cavalry force now occupying Jacobabad might not be considerably reduced without detriment to imperial interests. Moreover, it is probable that the continued location in one place, so exposed to inundations of such a large body of troops, acts prejudicially upon the health of the force, in addition to the drain which it causes upon the financial resources of Sind.

Possible reasons for a moderate reduction.

39. Referring to paragraph 52 of my No. 20, of 12th ultimo, to your address, I may remark that increasing local experience and inquiry only tend to confirm me in the belief that, with the exception of a few, say five guides to each outpost, the whole of the irregular body of "Belooch Guides" maintained here, at such cost to the State, as also the Boogtee detachment at Gundoi, should be placed unreservedly at the disposal and under the orders of the Political Superintendent, Upper Sind Frontier, if the new proposals are sanctioned; their services in warding off Murree inroads into Kutchi, and in carrring out arrangements to keep open the passes for traffic, in communication with the Khan of Khelat, would be invaluable.

Further reference to irregular Belooch levies.

Why they should be under Political Superintendent.

40. Continued observation and a growing conviction that the views antagonistic to our policy, hitherto entertained and even cherished in Sind, especially in this Upper Frontier District, if not firmly counteracted, may continue less or more to impede the action of the officers appointed by Government to deal with this frontier and Khelat henceforward, induce me here to record an opinion that, whether the larger projects herein discussed be carried out or not, the retention of the Upper Sind Frontier District (which is after all but half the size of an ordinary Punjab district) in all matters of administration, political and civil, under the Political Superintendent, who will henceforth perform no military duty, is imperative.

Reasons why the Upper Sind Frontier District should also be placed under Political Department in all departments of administration.

No. 8.

Minute by his Excellency the Viceroy (Lord Northbrook).

I AGREE with the opinion, which I gather from the despatch of the 3rd February last, is entertained by the Secretary of State, that the province of Scinde should be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Government of Bombay and attached to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab.

2. This proposal was brought to my notice shortly after my arrival in India, and when I visited the Punjab and Scinde in the autumn of 1872 I had the advantage of discussing it with Sir Henry Davies and Sir William Merewether. Their opinion then was that the measure was premature; I found that no practical inconvenience existed at the time, and I thought that it was desirable to postpone further consideration of the change until the Indus Valley Railway was completed, which would connect Lahore with Kurrachee.

3. Recent events in Khelat, however, have shown that some change is required at once. We had hoped that the transfer of the political business in Scinde from the Government of Bombay to the Government of India, which was arranged at the suggestion of Sir Philip Wodehouse in 1872, would have enabled the Government of India to rely on the cordial co-operation of the Scinde and Punjab officers upon any question that might arise with regard to Khelat or Beloochistan. Our expectations have been disappointed. Although every endeavour has been made to bring the Scinde authorities to act cordially with the Punjab officers, they have not done so The removal of the Scinde officers from any concern with our political relations with Khelat was consequently forced upon the Government of India. When we expressed an opinion that this arrangement would produce "satisfactory results," an opinion which has been quoted in the fourth paragraph of the despatch under reply—I by no means looked upon it to be "satisfactory" as a final settlement, but only as the best means within the powers of the Government of India of dealing with the immediate difficulty.

4. We have since recommended the Secretary of State to place the Upper Scinde Frontier District under the direct administration of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. If, as I hope, authority is given to us to issue the necessary proclamation, a further advance will be made towards unity of administration; but I believe that nothing less than the entire transfer of Scinde to the Punjab will secure that complete identity of action regarding frontier affairs which is necessary, and which is rightly insisted upon in the Secretary of State's despatch of the 3rd of February.

5. Frontier affairs over the long line from the Persian Gulf to the northern boundary of Scinde must be intimately connected with the internal administration of the province, and it would be hopeless to expect that officers serving different Governments—the one entrusted with the political relations, and the other charged with the internal administration—would act intelligently or cordially together. This is still more impossible in consequence of the strong differences of opinion which have existed, and which still exist, between the Punjab and the Scinde officers with regard to the manner in which the frontier tribes are to be dealt with.

6. I therefore recommend that measures be taken to transfer the province of Scinde to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab. There is no reason that I know of against this change to counterbalance the obvious advantage of securing unity of policy in frontier affairs; on the contrary, Kurrachee will probably become the principal port for the export of the produce of the Punjab, and the land revenue system of Scinde has much more similarity to the Punjab than to Bombay. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is prepared to take charge of Scinde with a slight increase to his Secretariat, and the transfer will probably in the end prove to be economical. There do not appear to me to be any serious difficulties in carrying out the change, and the details might, I should say, be safely left to be arranged by the Government of India in communication with the Government of Bombay and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The troops at Kurrachee and Hyderabad would remain part of the Bombay army. The Scinde Frontier force would probably require to be reorganized and joined to the Punjab Frontier force.

7. In the seventh paragraph of his despatch the Secretary of State suggests that it might be desirable to transfer a portion of the Central Provinces to the Government of Bombay. A proposal to break up the Central Provinces, allotting a part to Bombay and dividing the remainder between Madras and the North-western Provinces, was also brought under my notice in the year 1872, and I consulted Mr. Morris, the Chief Commissioner, and several other officers of the Central Provinces upon it in the winter of 1872–73. I annex extracts from their opinions, which were adverse to the change.

8. Mr. Morris thought that the dismemberment would be followed by a greatly decreased rate of progression, that it would be unpopular, that it would revive old disputes and questions that had been settled, and that it would disturb the popular mind. He represented that the Central Provinces comprise a compact area, almost entirely surrounded by independent Native and feudatory States. Out of a total boundary of some 2,700 miles, only about 160 miles march with British territory. Of the five territories which form the Central Provinces, the Nagpore province and the Nerbudda territories were fused, because it was found they could not be separately administered efficiently from any other British province; Sambalpore was transferred because the Bengal Government could not exercise supervision over it; the Upper Godaveri district is the most distant part in the Central Provinces, but it would be equally distant from Madras, and Mr. Morris thought the non-regulation system more fitted to it than the regulation system of Madras would be; Nimar was added later to the Central Provinces; the people are Hindoo, and have no affinity to the people of the districts of Bombay.

9. Mr. Morris gave his opinion that the immediate consequence of the proposed change would be an increase of expenditure. The Public Works and Financial Departments would have to be kept up on the same footing. Instead of the Judicial Commissioner there would be another judge of the High Court, if not two; the Chief Commissioner and his secretaries would revive in the shape of a member of the Board of Revenue, a revenue commissioner, and under-secretary. From an economical point of view, Mr. Morris was convinced the dissolution of the Central Provinces would be a mistake.

10. Mr. Morris sent me papers written by Mr. Charles Grant, the Commissioner of the Jubbulpore division, by Mr. W. B. Jones, the Officiating Commissioner of the Nerbudda division, and by Mr. W. G. Pedder, Bombay Civil Service, who had been in charge of the Nagpore division. These gentlemen concurred in the opinions expressed in the Chief Commissioner's note.

11. Mr. E. C. Bayley informed me that he thought that the arguments of Mr. Morris and his officers were sufficient to show that it was not desirable to break up the Central Provinces for the present. Lord Mayo, Mr. Bayley said, who had once favoured the proposal for dismemberment, came to the conclusion that it was wholly premature. Sir William Muir, then Lieutenant-Governor of the North-western Provinces, was decidedly against the proposal.

12. I should much regret that an alteration should be made at present in the constitution of the Central Provinces. In my opinion changes in the distribution of territory in India, unless absolutely required for public reasons of importance, are objectionable. They disturb the minds of the people and give rise to considerable administrative difficulties. The government of the Central Provinces has been carefully conducted, and the provinces are prosperous and contented. I see no advantage from an alteration in their present government.

13. Even if some administrative advantages might be obtained from a change, I should not be disposed to increase the size of the Presidency of Bombay. I am sorry to say that there is more discontent expressed in the native press of Bombay than in any other part of India, and the language of some of the native newspapers has been disloyal to the British Government. How far these feelings may extend it is not very easy to say. I believe, for my own part, that they are principally confined to the young and imperfectly educated Mahratta Brahmins. But in India feelings of this kind have a tendency to pervade the particular area of administration in which they arise, and I consider that it would be a political disadvantage, and that it might become a political danger, to increase the area of the Presidency of Bombay.

14. As this will be the last occasion on which I shall be called upon to give my opinion upon the territorial arrangements of this part of India, I wish to express my decided conviction that it will not be desirable to replace the superintendence of the Baroda state in the hands of the Bombay Government. I shall not be personally concerned in the matter, and therefore I may, without any hesitation, say that I believe it would be for the great advantage of the public service that the political relations of all the principal Native States should be under the direct management of the Government of India. I have seen in the last four years the disadvantage which has followed from placing such matters in the hands of a local government. The troubles that took place at Baroda afford a striking instance. They were very much aggravated from the fact that the Government of Bombay had not that choice of officers which would have enabled them to place men of sufficient experience to be Residents at Baroda. The officers appointed doubtless did their best, but they had a limited acquaintance with political affairs, they were put in very difficult circumstances, and they failed; while the Bombay secretariat could not support them by that varied experience which is possessed in the Foreign Department of the Government of India. Moreover, the advice which the Viceroy can command from the Members of his Council must always be of greater weight than can be at the disposal of a local governor.

15. I believe it would be an advantageous change to extend the functions of the agent to the Governor General at Baroda so as to embrace the political relations of some of the neighbouring States. I know that this is the opinion of Sir Richard Meade and of Sir Lewis Pelly, and I will request them to place their views in writing, so that they may be forwarded to Her Majesty's Government.

16. After these alterations have been made, the Presidency of Bombay will still be as extensive as it was before the conquest of Scinde. The lapse of time has greatly increased its commercial importance. There are many social and financial questions of great consequence under consideration, which together with the ordinary work of administration will, in my opinion, afford ample occupation for the Government of Bombay.

NORTHBROOK.

Enclosure 1 in No. 8.

OPINIONS of MR. J. H. MORRIS, Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, upon the Proposed Abolition of the Chief Commissionership of the Central Provinces.

It is only 11 years since the Central Provinces were formed and placed under the administration of a chief commissioner, and yet it is already proposed to parcel them out afresh, and throw, of the disjecta membra, some to Bombay, some to the North-western Provinces, some apparently to Bengal, and some to Madras. It is not that the administration of the Central Provinces has not been successful. Testimony to the good that has been effected by the administration from Nagpur as a centre, is borne by the strongest advocates of the disruption of the provinces. Why then is it desirable to undo what was done only a few years ago? As I am firmly convinced that dismemberment would be immediately followed by, if not absolute retrogression, still a greatly decreased rate of progress; that the measure would be eminently unpopular, not because it would wound a fanciful feeling, but because it deprives the people of advantages and privileges they have now for some years enjoyed; and that it would tend to revive disputes and questions that have been settled, and would thereby disturb the popular mind and induce a belief in the instability of all things Governmental,—I consider it a duty to place on record my own opinions. I have also thought it well to ascertain the way in which some of the best officers serving in the Central Provinces would view their dismemberment, and the appended papers from Mr. Charles Grant, Mr. W. B. Jones, and Mr. W. G. Pedder of the Bombay Civil Service give forth no uncertain sound. A very remarkable concurrence of opinion will be found in them, though one dwells more particularly on one point, and another on a different one.

I will now show how the matter strikes me. The Central Provinces as they are now constituted embrace 112,600 square miles of territory. Their extreme length from north to south is 500 miles, their extreme breadth from east to west 600 miles. They were accurately described by Sir Richard Temple in his first administration report as "dissociated geographically and politically from other British Provinces, and though occasionally touching upon neighbouring British districts, yet for the most part surrounded on all sides by foreign territory. The Sagar district on the north touches the British district of Lullutpore under the Government of the North-western Provinces, but otherwise the whole Northern Frontier marches with Native States. The extremity of the Nimar district reaches to Khandesh in the Bombay Presidency, but the line of contact is not a long one, and with this trifling exception, foreign States, counting the Hyderabad Assigned Districts as such, hem in the Central Provinces on the north-west, and west, and south. At a point in the south-east the Upper Godavari district manages to touch the district of Rajamandri in the Madras Presidency, and on the east the Jeypore State under Madras jurisdiction, the Cuttack Tributary Mehals and Chota Nagpur form the boundary. From this it will be seen that extensive as the provinces are, and different as may be the component parts in physical features and in ethnical character, they comprise a compact area that is almost completely surrounded by Independent Native or Feudatory States, the contact with Native States being absolutely complete in the north, north-west, and west, except at two points, one in the Sagar district in the north, the other in the Nimar district in the west. Altogether, of a total boundary of some 2,700 miles, only about 160 march with British territory.

The position, then, of the Central Provinces would seem to mark them out for a government or administration apart, seeing that they are isolated from all other British provinces. The territories that went to form the province were—1st, the Nagpur province, which, besides the Nagpur province proper, included Chhattisgarh. The Nagpur country proper, comprising the districts of Nagpur, Wardha, Bhandara, and Chanda, extends over 19,735 square miles, and has a population, according to the census of 1872, of 2,075,874 souls. Chhattisgarh, which consists of the districts of Raipur and Bilaspur, lying to the east of Nagpur proper, has an area of 23,338 square miles, and a population of 2,224,869. Chhattisgarh thus exceeds the Nagpur province in area and population.

2ndly. The Sagar and Narbada territories, with an area of 35,764 square miles and a population of 3,540,572.

3rdly. The Sambalpur district, which, with the Feudatory States attached to it, extends over 15,000 square miles, and has a population of 1,052,534 souls.

4thly. The Upper Godavari district, which has an area of only 1,926 square miles, but has attached to it the Feudatory State of Bastar, extending over 13,000 square miles of the wildest jungle. Together they have a population of about 200,000.

5thly. The district of Nimar, 3,340 square miles, with 211,264 inhabitants.

First of all, the Nagpur province and the Sagar and Nerbada territories only were fused into one administration, because it had been found that separately they could not be efficiently administered from any other British province. The Sagar and Narbada territories had been for some years under the Government of the North-western Provinces, but the attention which that Government was able to bestow on so distant a frontier district was insufficient to develop its resources, to improve the machinery of administration, and to infuse into it that spirit of life and progress that had roused the districts more favoured by their position.

Sambalpur was transferred because the Bengal Government could not even exercise as much supervision over it as the North-western Provinces' Government had exercised over the Sagar and Narbada territories.

The Upper Godavari district was formed out of certain taluks on the banks of the Godavari ceded by his Highness the Nizam. It is the most distant part of the Central Provinces, and is difficult of access, but it would be equally distant from Madras, and its administration from Madras would be not less difficult than it is now, while the system of administration of a non-regulation province is more suited to a backward district that the regulation system of Madras would be.

Nimar was added after the Central Provinces had been in existence for some years, and Nimar is a border land that might have been added to any British province it might adjoin. The choice lay between the Central Provinces and Bombay, and many reasons preponderated why it should rather go to the Central Provinces. It had been formerly under the Government of the North-western Provinces, and instructions had been issued from there for its settlement. The population, too, is thoroughly Hindi, and such ancient customs as it has have descended from the time of the great Mohammadan Emperors. It had no particular affinity to the districts of Bombay.

If it be admitted that the formation of the Central Provinces in 1861 was an excellent and indeed an absolutely necessary measure, circumstances must have very greatly changed, if what was not only expedient but necessary then is now no longer even expedient. The heterogeneous parts of the present Central Provinces were moulded into one whole because it was much easier to administer the whole from Nagpur than to administer them in any other manner. Is it now easier to administer them in any other manner? It can, I think, scarcely be said that it will be easier to do so. It is true that Bombay is now in railway communication with Nagpur, and that Allahabad is similarly connected with Jabalpur, but the railway journey from Bombay to Nagpur takes 26 hours, and I have only recently learnt that so little traffic exists between Nagpur and Bhosawal that the railway company are actually thinking of running only a single train between the two places to carry the mails, passengers, and goods. If this were done, at least four more hours would be occupied by the journey, and Bombay would be 30 hours distant from Nagpur. Could the old Nagpur province be efficiently administered from Bombay? It is proposed that the greater part of the Nagpur and Chhattisgarh Division should be ceded to Bombay. It would scarcely do to split up Chhattisgarh proper (the Raipur and Bilaspur districts), which forms one homogeneous whole, so what would go to Bombay would be the districts of the Nagpur Division and Raipur and Bilaspur. Nagpur is, to take the present minimum, distant from Bombay 26 hours (520 miles), but Raipur is 180 miles distant from Nagpur, and Bilaspur is 250 miles off. Here there is no railway as yet, and even if a railway were constructed to Dongargarh, and as yet we have not got beyond the surveys, the Raipur and Bilaspur districts would still lie at a long distance from the terminus, unconnected even by any line of road. Chhattisgarh could be less efficiently administered from Bombay now (looking only to position and distance) than the Sagar and Narbada territories could have been from the North-western Provinces in 1861. I am unable to see any difference in the circumstances that would invalidate this conclusion. As regards the Nagpur Division, the difficulty is perhaps not so great, and, as an outlying dependency, the Nagpur Division might be administered from Bombay, as Ajmere was for many years from the North-western Provinces; but I do not think it can be pretended that the administration from Bombay could be so vigorous as if the districts were administered from Nagpur; and if Chhattisgarh cannot be managed by Bombay, I think it would be most unwise to take the Nagpur Division only, and thereby sever a connexion which has existed since the last century, a connexion which, first political only, has now become commercial, and is becoming closer and closer every year. Of course I do not mean to say that if the Nagpur Division were administered from Bombay, and Chhattisgarh from some other point, that the commercial connexion between the two would be broken off, but I feel sure that if Chhattisgarh and the Nagpur Division ceased to be under the same administration, less would be done to open up the important districts of Chhattisgarh and bind them to the west. Of the Nagpur Division itself there are parts which are even now difficult of access from Nagpur, and from their remoteness remain undeveloped and almost unknown. Such is the enormous district of Chanda, which lies in the south of the Nagpur Division. Chanda is distant from Nagpur and from the railway nearly 100 miles, and it has hitherto been difficult to open up communication with it. This will now be more possible, since the coal railway to Warora is about to be constructed, but even then there will lie an enormous tract to the east in which everything as yet remains to be done.

Take next the upper portion of the Central Provinces, comprised in the Narbada and Jabalpur Division. Are these to go entirely to the North-western Provinces? On the supposition that they are, let us see what the facilities are for their administration from the North-western Provinces. The railway joins Allahabad and Jabalpur, and from Jabalpur a line of railway runs down the Narbada valley. These railway districts are in as easy communication with Allahabad as the Nagpur districts are with Bombay; but Sagar, Mandla, Chhindwara, Betul, and Seoni would be the Chhattisgarh of those parts. They are not on the rail; they lie at a great distance from it. Sagar is about 100 miles off, the Mandla district stretches 120 miles beyond Jabalpur, the Satpura districts of Seoni, Chhindwara and Betul are 80 miles south of the line. Would they be as efficiently administered from the North-western Provinces, of which they would form the extreme southern fringe? Would they, an unimportant poor territory tacked on to the most thriving part of India, receive the attention and be subject to the supervision they receive now, when they lie in the very heart of the Central Provinces? If, on the other hand, it were intended to transfer part of the Narbada and Jabalpur Division to Bombay, there would exist objections of another kind which I will refer to in another place. I cannot, then, think that the mere fact of the railway communication having been completed between Allahabad and Jabalpur, Bombay and Nagpur, and Bombay and Jabalpur, renders it perfectly easy to administer one part of the Central Provinces from Allahabad and the other from Bombay.

It must be remembered that the Central Provinces do not consist merely of the Nagpur Division with a Maratha population, and the Jabalpur Division with a Hindustani population. There are the districts along the Narbada with a Hindustani population, the Satpura districts with a mixed population of Hindustanis and aborigines of various kinds, and there is the enormous Chhattisgarh Division with a population in Chattisgarh proper of Hindi speakers, and in Sambalpur of Uriyas. The interests of those districts and of their inhabitants must not be overlooked when the question arises of parcelling out the provinces. It seems to have been thought that because the easiest way to go from Nagpur to Jabalpur is now by railway round by Bhosawul, a journey of about 26 hours, and a distance of 585 miles, that therefore the two principal sections of the provinces, that above and that below the Satpuras, are now more completely separated than they were before, but I cannot see the force of the argument. Formerly one went by mail cart or dak gari from Nagpur to Jabalpur along the northern road, taking from 22 to 25 hours, and although one goes now by a different route, the time taken is very nearly the same. But altogether this test of time and distance is so extremely fallacious that it is scarcely worth while saying more on the subject. I may, however, be permitted to ask why, if it is thought that Nagpur, at a distance of 26 hours from Bombay, can be efficiently administered from there, then Jabalpur, 26 hours from Nagpur, cannot be equally well administered from that place? If it were certain that the Jabalpur Division transferred to the North-western Provinces, and the Nagpur Division transferred to Bombay, would be better or more economically administered than they are at present,—then their severance from the Central Provinces might be desirable, but that is a question on which grave doubt may be entertained. On this point it is urged that the two main divisions of the country, the districts above the Satpura Range and those below it, are quite distinct in language, customs, and landed tenures; that the northern districts resemble the districts of the North-western Provinces, while the southern districts are peopled by a Maratha race having language, manners, and customs, and landed tenures, the same as the people of the Bombay Presidency. The conclusion drawn is that it would be better to join the former people to their congeners of the North-western Provinces, the latter to their congeners of Bombay, instead of placing under one administration two different nationalities. This is quite a distinct argument from that of position or geographical connexion. I do not think I need try to show that it would be quite impossible in India, and in no place more impossible than in Central India, to separate the people over whom we rule according to a philological or ethnological system, and give to each separate nation—if one is pleased to term it so—a separate government. We know that difference of language does not invariably indicate difference of origin; or identity of language imply identity of sentiment or customs. In the Central Provinces we have a substratum of an aboriginal population, which has been overlaid by strata of immigrants from the west, the north-west, and the north-east, and the south. The last conquerors of the country were the Marathas, and they held at one time the whole of the country at present included in the Central Provinces, but it is only between the Wainganga and Wardha rivers that they have imposed their manners and customs and language on the people. Within this area the Maratha element distinctly predominates; elsewhere the Marathas have left their mark but did not settle in sufficient numbers to impress their natural idiosyncrasies on the conquered. If the Nagpur Maratha districts adjoined Khandesh there would be good reason for forming them into a Collectorate of the Bombay Presidency. Separated from Khandesh by the entire breadth of Berar there seems no good reason to do so. The mere fact that the Nagpur Maratha districts have a different language and different customs from the districts north of the Satpuras does not constitute sufficient ground for declaring that they cannot be placed properly or conveniently under the same Government. There is scarcely a province in India which does not contain within it several nationalities speaking different languages and having different customs. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal rules over Behar, Bengal Proper, Assam, and Orissa; in the Punjab there are Pushto and Hindustani districts; in the Madras Presidency the Tamil speakers and Telingas are under the same Government; and in Bombay the different languages of Canarese, Maratha, and Gujrathi, signifying differences as great as exist between the Maratha speakers of the Nagpur districts, and the Hindi speakers beyond the Satpura range. The exigencies of British Government of India do not permit of a division of territories strictly according to nationalities. But though in itself the fact that the Nagpur Division has a Maratha population, to speak loosely, is not a sufficient ground for severing it from the other divisions of the Central Provinces, there might be a difficulty in administering it properly and a difficulty of this kind is asserted to exist. It is said that an officer who has been serving in a Hindustani district would on being sent to a Maratha district be ignorant of much he should know; his local experience gained in the one district would be of no service in the other, and that he would moreover understand little of the language of the people. These inconveniences are, it is added, aggravated in the Central Provinces by the fact that the number of officers at the Chief Commissioner's disposal is small. I think the difficulty is exaggerated; certainly the language difficulty is. Everywhere throughout the Nagpur Division the Hindustani language is understood by the people, who do not speak a pure Marathi by any means, but a local patois of their own. All officers serving in the Marathi districts are now also required to pass an examination in the Marathi language, and I do not think that any fear need be entertained of the district officers and the people not being able to communicate directly with each other.

The transfer of the Nagpur Division to the Bombay Presidency has been advocated in order that experienced officers of the Bombay school who understand the feelings and old customs and tenures of the people may in a wise, quiet, and gradual way correct the errors that have taken place; in other words, that they may break down the settlement. Much as I should desire to see some things changed, not only in the settlements of the Maratha but of the Hindustani districts, I think it more important that we should remain guiltless of a breach of faith; and I hold that if many strong reasons should exist for transferring the Nagpur Division to Bombay, the mere fact that the Bombay Government and Bombay officers would not be able to withstand the temptation to tamper with the settlement ought to prevent our entertaining the idea of the transfer. I do not think Bombay officers could withstand this temptation, and Mr. Pedder, a Bombay officer, may be trusted for a reliable opinion. He says "all "the Bombay officers who might have anything to do with it (the settlement) would be constantly "calling for fundamental modifications in it." If the chief reason for wishing to transfer the Nagpur Division to Bombay is that the settlements may be fundamentally altered, I think it would be a more dignified course to annul the settlements, boldly and openly, setting forth the reasons which compel Government to take back what it gave. But if this is not done, and in my opinion it cannot be done without a breach of faith, the settlements should be worked loyally, and in the interests of the mass of the agriculturists; and the officers of the commission may be trusted to do this. They are not men brought up in any particular school, the majority have passed the greater part of their service in the Central Provinces, and they may be credited with at least as much knowledge of the people of their districts as imported Bombay officers could possess. Primâ facie one would imagine that their "local experience and knowledge" would be superior to that of officers fresh from the Bombay Presidency. And here let me remark that the Maratha character of the Nagpur districts is very much overrated. The people of pure Maratha origin do not reach a million in number, though the Maratha language is generally spoken. Neither are the land tenures absolutely identical with those of the pure Marathas. On their first arrival as immigrants into the country of Gondwana,—the kingdom of Deogarh, the Maratha immigrants had to suit themselves to the people of the country, and the land tenure that prevails is not purely characteristic of the Marathas. Besides, be it remembered, that when subsequently Maratha chiefs brought in their followers, and settled them on the land, it is not likely that the leader of a band of fighting men would introduce the perfect home system. If inquiry be carried sufficiently far, I think that, if the characteristic of Maratha land tenure be considered to be that each ryot was liable to pay his share only of the Government assessment proportioned to the amount of land held by him, this will be found to be no characteristic of Maratha land tenures exclusively.

It would be an error too to imagine that the Marathas of the Nagpur Division acknowledge or feel any race sympathy for the Marathas of the Bombay Presidency. They now certainly look upon themselves as quite a separate people, and a very remarkable instance of this feeling occurred only within the last few months, when a petition was presented to me from the Nagpur Division, complaining of the extent to which foreigners were employed in public offices and places of trust to the exclusion and detriment of the people of the country. The complaint was directed against the Bombay and Poona Marathas, who have of late years obtained employment in the Central Provinces in great numbers, and who are accused of introducing into all offices in which they themselves are employed their own relations or countrymen. There was a very strong feeling in the matter, and I felt obliged to issue instructions to the effect that natives of the Central Provinces, if equally well qualified for any post, should have a preference over all strangers.

But to return: I may say that I look upon the difference of land revenue system as quite the most important argument against the transfer of any part of the Central Provinces to Bombay. There are, however, others; and as I do not know of any other argument for the transfer, except that the dignity and magnitude of the Government of Bombay require that its territory should be larger, I will now more generally note why I think it inexpedient to break up the Chief Commissionership. It may be considered an all-sufficient answer if I say that I do not see any single advantage to be gained thereby. It is true that the old Sagar and Narbada territories, now the Jabalpur and Narbada Divisions, could be more easily administered from the North-western Provinces than formerly when they were under that Government, but they would be an outlying part of the North-western Provinces, altogether cut off from them, forming no integral part of them. Being remote, they would be least cared for, whereas now they are the most valued and favoured part of the Central Provinces. The administration could scarcely fail to be less vigorous from Allahabad than it is now from Nagpur, and to the districts there would be loss, not gain.

The Nagpur Division stands to Bombay now exactly in the same position as the Sagar and Narbada territories did to the North-western Provinces in 1861. Jabalpur could then be reached from Allahabad in as short a time as Nagpur can be reached now from Bombay, and if it was considered impossible to administer the Sagar and Narbada territories from Allahabad or Agra in 1861, it would follow that it is impossible (or to put it in a milder form, it would be very inconvenient) to administer the Nagpur Division from Bombay now. There is this also to be said, that the laws and regulations in force in the Nagpur Division have all been derived from Bengal, they are the same or nearly the same as those of the North-western Provinces, they are different from those of Bombay. The whole judicial and administrative system is also different. It would be necessary, then, for Bombay either to regulationise the Nagpur Division, that is, to put the administration on the same footing as the regular Bombay collectorates, or else to maintain the existing system and have a small non-regulation province at a considerable distance from the presidency, with a very small staff of officers, which would give little room for the selection of officers, and a small field for a regular service. The regular civilians would scarcely like to take service in an outlying district, of which the climate is dreaded, and the attractions very few, where communications are defective and society reduced to a very small circle, and where the appointments are not so well paid as in the regular districts. Regular civilians would then have to be more highly paid, in which case a constant selection of efficient officers might be secured; or if things remain as they are, the service in the commission will be a very small one, and it will be difficult to keep up the staff of selected officers with great local knowledge. The distant division is almost certain to be neglected, and there will be few at the presidency acquainted with its circumstances and its wants. Supposing, however, the Narbada and Jabalpur Divisions to be transferred to the North-western Provinces, and the Nagpur Division to Bombay, the question is, what is to become of the enormous Chhattisgarh Division? Sambalpur might be restored to Bengal, which has already too much territory, and in 1862 was glad to be relieved of the district; but there remains a vast amount of territory and a large population in Raipur and Bilaspur. I look upon the transfer of Chhattisgarh to Bombay as quite out of the question. I have in an early part of this note referred to its distance from Nagpur and the want of communications; to this should be added the nature of its inhabitants. They have ethnologically no connexion with the Marathas, they speak a different language, a form of Hindi; in manner and customs they are distinct, their land tenures are different. The inhabitants of the Khalauti are a mixture of all sorts from the north and north-west. Among them the custom of periodically distributing the village lands still holds good, their Gaonthiyas or village headmen are not mere patels or mall guzars. They are very superior to the ryot class. The latter are more poor and ignorant than in any other part; they are in every way behind the rest of the province. Their cultivation is inferior, their attachment to the soil is not strong. Though politically joined to the Nagpur province by conquest, Chhattisgarh was always a country apart. I think if it were only on account of the difficulty of administering Chhattisgarh, the Chief Commisionership of the Central Provinces should not be broken up. I cannot see how, in the event of that, the interests of that large tract of country are to be provided for. I consider that the proposal for breaking up the Central Provinces makes no provision for Chhattisgarh, and without such provision being made I do not see how the proposal could be accepted.

The wild tribes and semi-independent chiefs whose territories are to the extreme east and south-east of Chhattisgarh require even more supervision than it is possible now to give them. The outbreak of the Khond population of Patna is of recent date, and though it was fortunately suppressed without difficulty by the action of the Deputy Commissioner of Sambalpur, it would take but little to rouse these rude people, and once thoroughly roused they might give no little trouble. Experience should have taught us this. Far from removing the centre of administration still further from these rude States, anything that would bring it nearer to them would be distinctly advantageous and eminently desirable. What I have endeavoured to show is, that such parts of the present Central Provinces as could possibly be administered from the North-western Provinces and Bombay would be less efficiently administered than now, while a third of the province could not be administered by either of the above Governments. The Government of the country would be less strong. I would add further, that the change would be disliked greatly by the people, and would cause them much serious inconvenience. Nagpur is not so distant from the extremity of Chhattisgarh but that petitioners can reach the head-quarters and prefer their complaints to the Chief Executive or Judicial authorities. Could they proceed as far as Bombay, and is a Governor as easy of access as a Chief Commissioner, and will a rustic not be quite lost in a large Europeanised city like Bombay? Would it be right or expedient, now that we have for so long kept the centre of administration within easy reach, to remove it to to Bombay, and could that be done without causing dissatisfaction? Now the Chief Commissioner visits every district of the Central Provinces within three years at the outside. Would it be possible for the Governor of Bombay or the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-western Provinces to do as much if to their own territories so much were superadded, and can it be doubted that much political advantage and much good to the administration accrues from tours of the Chief Executive authority? Personal acquaintance with all the officers of the administration, the more important landholders, the native gentlemen holding the position of honorary magistrates, the influential zamindars (talukdars they might be called elsewhere), and the feudatory chiefs, and a knowledge of the different parts of the country derived from personal visits are of the greatest possible advantage to an administrator, and I think it will be readily conceded that without the knowledge gained by Sir R. Temple by extensive tours over the whole province it would have been impossible for him to have effected so much during the few years of his administration.

Would there, however, be any compensating advantage for the weaker and less popular administration that would follow on the breaking-up of the Chief Commissionership? Would any economy attend the measure? On the contrary, I believe the immediate consequence would be an increase of expenditure. It is true that to the Central Provinces there is attached a staff of officers similar to what is attached to great local Governments, but be it added the officers of the staff draw proportionately less pay in accordance with the lesser dignity of the administration. The Public Works and Financial departments would be exactly on the same footing whether the Central Provinces remained a separate administration or not; the staff would be divided with the territory. The Judicial Commissioner would certainly become a Judge of the High Court if he did not become two, one at Allahabad, another at Bombay; and the establishment attached to his office would be proportionately magnified. The Inspector-General of Prisons is an officer who has to visit every year every district of the Central Provinces. His salary is Rs. 1,000, and he has a very small office. Is it likely that the Inspector-Generals of Prisons of the North-western Provinces or Bombay, or whatever officials may correspond to them, would be able to do his work in addition to their own? Similarly, could the Inspector-General of Police and the Directors of Public Instruction in Bombay and the North-western Provinces divide the inspection work of the Central Provinces between them? In these cases, be it remembered, it is distance and area that have to be considered, not the number of police or the number of educational institutions. An indication that the Bombay Educational Department has already as much as it can do may be found in the fact that within the last year the Bombay Government, at the instance of their Director of Public Instruction, asked the Chief Commissioner if the Central Provinces Educational Department could undertake an annual inspection of schools at Mhow and Sehore, as it would be impossible for Bombay officers to do so; and yet for the immense area of the Central Provinces there are only three Educational Inspectors and an Inspector-General. This is of course merely an instance. There is no separate Inspector-General of Vaccination in these provinces, the work is gratuitously performed by the Sanitary Commissioner in addition to his own duties; and if sanitary commissioners are to remain an institution, one for the Central Provinces does not seem excessive. I doubt if one of the supervising officers could be dispensed with if the Central Provinces were divided between the North-western Provinces and Bombay. Each Government might appoint a deputy this or that for the part of the province assigned to it, but the united cost of the two deputies would be certain to exceed that of the single chief. There remains the Chief Commissioner and his secretaries. Their occupation would doubtless be gone, but they would revive in the shape of a member of the Revenue Board and a Revenue Commissioner, and an Under-Secretary to Government, or several such Under-Secretaries, for it is very evident that increase of territory brings increase of work to the Government and to its secretariat, and unless the Bombay and North-western Provinces secretariats are too strong already they would require assistance.

But further, I do not believe that one of the great Governments would carry on the administration of the Central Provinces in the rough way it is at present carried on. There would be at once a cry for increase of establishments, for it is certain that almost all departments are under-officered. If Nagpur become a part of the Bombay Presidency there would almost certainly be an attempt made to change the system of administration. The Judicial and Executive would be separated, and they could not be separated except at great expense. If they were not separated, the Nagpur districts might grumble at not being thought worthy of so good and scientific an administration as Khandesh. I have already referred to the result that would follow on the introduction of regular civilians, and the alternative disadvantage of a small separate body of officers, among whom promotion would stagnate, who would afford a confined field for selection, and would always be grumbling and dissatisfied if outsiders were brought in amongst them.

From the economical, as well as the administrative point of view, I am convinced that the dissolution of the Central Provinces would be a blunder. At a time, too, when we are beginning to ask whether the machinery of Government is not being driven at too fast a pace, whether we have not been too capricious in changing our modes of taxation and the forms of our laws, and whether a period of comparative rest should not be allowed to succeed a period of change, I think it would be impolitic to unsettle the minds of the people of any province by severing ancient connexions, and telling them that they must look for government to a distant quarter, and there seek for what they formerly found near at hand. The administration of the Central Provinces has done good service, and change is not urgently called for, and unless the promise of better administration is very sure, or some political necessity therefor exists, it would be more prudent to be content with the good we have, than to strive for a better that is so far from certain.

J. H. Morris,
Chief Commissioner, Central Provinces.

Camp Jondwani, Balaghat District, 18th January 1873.

Inclosure 2 in No. 8.

Note by Mr. Charles Grant, Commissioner of the Jabalpur Division, on the proposal to break up the Central Provinces, and to transfer Nagpur to Bombay.

The abolition of the separate Central Provinces administration, and the transfer of fragments to other provinces, were much discussed two or three years ago; but the idea was abandoned by the late Viceroy, Lord Mayo, after his visit to the Central Provinces in 1870. It has now been revived, mainly, I understand, in connexion with a general scheme of re-distribution, originating in the proposed transfer of Sindh to the Punjab. It is believed that the loss of so much territory without compensation would reduce the jurisdiction of the Bombay Government in a degree incommensurate with its capacities and importance, and the partition of the Central Provinces is therefore suggested as a means of restoring equilibrium by the transfer of the Maratha districts of Nagpur to Bombay. I may probably take it for granted that little weight will be given to this argument taken per se, and independently of other considerations, for it would be a reversal of the natural order of things to adapt the jurisdiction to the Government instead of the Government to the jurisdiction. If the governing body of Bombay should ever become too numerous for its diminished functions, the inference would be that it should be reduced; not that it should absorb new territory simply to give occupation to its staff, or, indeed, on any ground other than the paramount plea of the interests of the governed. Taking this point of view, however, probably no one would seriously plead for administering the country in the interests of its servants, instead of adapting the Government machinery to the work which it has to do. The plea for compensation is in fact supported by the far more important subsidiary arguments that parts at any rate of the Central Provinces are not at present administered on the system best suited to their welfare. It is urged that the province consists of two distinct portions, with separate interests and characteristics, and that while the Hindi-speaking country has a natural affinity for the North-western Provinces, to which it might be annexed without injury, the Maratha districts would absolutely benefit by being transferred from the guardianship of administrators trained in the Northern Provinces of India to the more congenial Government of Bombay.

Although thus unreservedly stated, the argument will not bear the test of examination under the light of intimate local knowledge; it does really include the essence of by far the most plausible objection to the present constitution of the Central Provinces. I think it would, therefore, be out of place to meet it by what is nevertheless a very natural remark, viz., that many, if not most, of the provinces of India are also dually constituted, including the very presidency to which it is proposed to transfer the Nagpur districts to ensure their more harmonious administration. To unaccustomed eyes, the differences between the Guzerathi and Marathi races might be dwarfed by distance and ignorance; but it is certainly open to question whether the bastard Marathas of the Nagpur country are not more akin to the Central Indian Hindu races, to whom they have been bound for centuries by the relations arising out of a common administration, than to the Guzerathis, who would be their fellow-subjects under the Bombay administration, or indeed, than the Marathas of Bombay are even now to the northern section of the Bombay population. I do not, however, wish to lay any stress on this consideration. There can be no question that want of homogeneousness is a defect, and the existence of a possible source of weakness in other provinces is no plea for its retention, if it can be avoided, in the Central Provinces. The real point at issue is not whether anomalies elsewhere justify their preservation here, but what system of administration, broadly speaking, promises best for the prosperity and well-being of the populations now ruled by the Government of the Central Provinces?

The first point to ascertain in discussing this question is what the Central Provinces really consist of. The popular idea is that they are made up of a Northern Hindi province and a southern Maratha province with some less important outliers. The fact is that the Maratha element is very small, while the Hindi element is very large, the substratum of the population being homogeneous, and formed almost entirely of the non-Aryan races. This fact would probably not have dropped out of sight had the Central Division of India retained its old and true name of Gondwana—the country of the Gonds. The Hindu population, which overlies this subordinate element, in parts crushing it, elsewhere amalgamating with it, but everywhere more or less affected in its beliefs and habits by it, is recruited from the four quarters of the compass; but the stronger northern races have so hemmed back and outnumbered the immigrants from the south and west, that out of a population of some nine* millions, rather more than half a million only, or less than six per cent., are Marathas. In addition to this, about one million of the helot and menial races of the Nagpur country have assimilated themselves to their Maratha conquerors, and may be, roughly speaking, included among the Maratha-speaking population, though they are too low in the scale to aspire to the name of Maratha, or to be affected by any change of administration short of a social revolution. To them one civilized Government must be the same as another; they have neither traditions nor tenures to be brought into harmony with any particular form of administration. Taking, then, what may be called the Bombay point of view (and, so far as I understand, this is the most important aspect of the question, because the weakness of the dual constitution is supposed to have shown itself most in the incongeniality to a Maratha population of an administration conducted on North-western principles), the question resolves itself into this:—Would the benefit of incorporation into the Bombay province, to a population of half a million scattered over four districts†, be sufficient to outweigh the disadvantages of breaking up the connexion between nine millions of population and nineteen districts which have admittedly never been really prosperous or well governed until they obtained a separate government of their own? It is not, I think, contended that the Hindi-speaking population of the Central Provinces would be better off under any government than their own; and, indeed, it almost stands to reason that, if a strong central check is of any use at all, the Sagar and Narbada territories must suffer by changing their present position, as the land of Goshen of a small province, for that of the outlying fragments of a large and distant government, already embarrassed with the weight of a vast territory, and whose natural and immediate interests would always lie in the rich districts and populous cities which have been so long identified with its administration. The only advantage claimed, I believe, for the administration of the old Sagar and Narbada territories from Allahabad, instead of from Nagpur, is that of economy. It is quite possible that some saving might be effected by reduction of supervising officers, if the Central Provinces administration were swept away; but I doubt whether it would be at all considerable without a far more than counterbalancing sacrifice of efficiency. The area of the Central Provinces is so vast that the various heads of departments rarely complete their circuit of the province within a single year. It is to be presumed that the corresponding officials in the North-western Provinces have their hands sufficiently full as it is, or their offices should not have survived the economical crisis of the last few years, so that the addition of some twelve or fifteen districts mostly difficult of access to their charge would simply result in this,—that the districts on the line of the railway, now kept under constant inspection, might hope for a hurried annual visit, while those on and beyond the hill plateaus, which are now visited almost annually, would scarcely ever be inspected at all. In short, the area of the Central Provinces being so large as to be barely manageable by a separate inspecting staff, would be simply unmanageable if thrown in as a makeweight to charges which already absorb almost all the time of the official body set aside for them. Education, sanitation, vaccination, excise, registration, and all the numerous off-shoots of European government which have been introduced and fostered with so much difficulty during the last few years in these backward and remote regions, would languish and fall back without the constant and minute watchfulness which now keep them in life and vigour; and the day-to-day administration of the country would drop more and more into separate local ruts and mazes under an administrative body too small to ensure a healthy circulation among its members, and too little brought into contact with its chiefs to draw a uniform and stimulating inspiration from their counsels. The Chief Commissioner now visits many parts of his charge two or three times in the year, and all once, at least, in two or three years; he can hardly fail to be personally acquainted with every native of position and note in the province; while the concentration of his energies on the guardianship of a young and rising province must give him a knowledge of its condition and a pride in its progress, as compared with old jurisdictions, which could scarcely be felt by a distant Governor engrossed in other and often weightier cares. A North-western Lieutenant-Governor might make a favoured province of the Sagar and Narbada territories, in which case they would for a time be worked with spasmodic energy under a changed and semi-alien system, only to drop into oblivion when their novelty wore off, and more immediate and pressing interests re-asserted themselves; or he might content himself with at once assigning to them the comparatively low position in his provincial economy, to which they seemed entitled by considerations of wealth and population. If so, they would enter upon a second chapter of the quiet old history which is now becoming more and more a thing of the past in all parts of India. It is true that a railway now connects Allahabad with the stations of Jabalpur, Narsinghpur, and Hoshangabad; but how would an occasional and rare visit from a Lieutenant-Governor, whose six months' residence in the plains is now barely sufficient for the claims of his great province, compensate even those towns for losing the constant supervision and intimate local knowledge of a Chief Commissioner who spends his whole year in or near them, whilst the remaining seven (or including Chhattisgarh, ten) Hindi-speaking districts would be so difficult of access from Allahabad that their people must give up all hope of retaining their present facilities of access to the real representative of the government by which they are taxed and ruled. All native observers tell us, even if our observation could fail to assure us, that personal government is the first essential of successful administration in India, and, if so, any measure which tends to make the ruling power an abstraction to a large and exceptionally simple population must be politically injurious. It might, indeed, be argued that the economical gain would outweigh the political loss, and that a poor country like the Sagar and Narbada territories has no right, in the present financial condition of India, to so expensive a government as it now possesses. This would be a perfectly logical and consistent argument; and if the question of adding the Sagar and Narbada territories to the Allahabad Government were made to turn upon the issue raised by it, a fair field for discussion would no doubt be opened up. The case, too, would then be placed in its true light, and there would be no concealment of the fact that the administration of the transferred districts must, in the nature of things, suffer from the transfer.

This branch of the question need not, however, be pursued further here, because I do not think any statesman in power, or likely to be in power, in India, would justify an admittedly retrograde step in the administration of a whole section of the country simply on the plea of economy. So far, then, it may safely be assumed that the re-transfer of the Sagar and Narbada territories, and perhaps the addition of Chhattisgarh to the North-western Provinces, are advocated mainly, if not entirely, in the interests of the Maratha districts of Nagpur: and this brings back the inquiry to a survey of their real condition and constitution.

It has been seen that the Maratha population, so far from forming an important element in the population of the Central Provinces, as is popularly supposed, is numerically insignificant, and has no claim whatever to the factitious prominence which it has gained from the historical eminence of its founders. The few leading families in whose veins the old turbulent Maratha blood might perhaps have lingered are fast dying out; and the agricultural population, as is known to all who have dealt with questions of administration in these provinces, is eminently pliable, and even submissive, in its character and habits. All administrative measures, whether purely authoritative, such as the levy of taxes, or semi-persuasive, such as the promotion of education, make their way far more readily and completely in the Nagpur districts than among the more stubborn and independent northern races; and it can scarcely be believed that a small outlying body, thus easily influenced, and exposed for at least a century to alien influences, can have preserved their original speech and customs in such integrity as to make life irksome to them except under an administration conducted in accordance with pure Maratha tradition. As a fact, I believe that both the habits and beliefs of the Nagpur Marathas show marked traces of inter-communication as well with the aboriginal as with the Hindi-speaking races, and that the so-called Maratha speech of Nagpur is a mere semi-Hindi patois. Indeed, the case could scarcely be otherwise, for when the Hindi-speaking population of the Sagar and Narbada territories has so separated itself from its parent stock as to form almost a distinct nationality, disowned by its so-called caste fellows in the north as worshippers of strange gods and the offspring of unhallowed unions with the daughters of the country, the Marathas—a far smaller and less independent body of men—could hardly have escaped a similar contagion. It must be remembered that the Maratha settlers of Nagpur were not introduced by the Maratha conquests, but date back to the days of the Bakht Buland, the greatest of the Gond rulers. The proximity of the Berars and the subsequent accessions to their body under the Bhonslas led to their out-numbering (in the Nagpur plains) the northern settlers who were drawn down by the Gond kings' connexion with Delhi; but still the fact remains that the first Maratha immigrants had to adapt themselves both to their Gond rulers and to their Hindustani co-settlers, and that in the process they lost much of their individuality. Whether, then, the earlier policy of the administration of the Central Provinces in dealing with the Nagpur land tenures was right or wrong—a question which I have not the special knowledge to discuss satisfactorily—it is clearly a mistake to condemn it on the ground that it does not harmonise with pure Maratha tradition. The aboriginal rulers of the country, too facile to be grasping and too conscious of the superior race organisation of their Aryan subjects to attempt a dead level, or purely monarchical administration, dealt with these settlers, not directly by the agency of patels or paid headmen, selected from the rank and file, but by means of the influence of their natural chiefs, who were encouraged to take farms of large tracts of territory, and to make their own arrangements for cultivating them. Hence arose in Nagpur the malguzari form of tenure, which, though probably afterwards obscured, and sometimes even superseded, by the stronger and more profitable Maratha plan of dealing direct with the tillers of the soil, retained sufficient vitality to recommend itself to Sir Richard Temple as the natural system of the country. It is not my business to discuss the justice of this conclusion; but even on the supposition that it was affected more or less by the previous official schooling of an administrative body largely recruited from Northern India, and that an unprejudiced study of local circumstances might have led to a different result—a view which, to say the least of it, has not yet been proved,—it can scarcely be imagined that the evil would be remedied by rushing into the opposite extreme, and attempting to subject to a purely Maratha system of administration a people who were very half-and-half Marathas to begin with, and who have now, whatever may have been their original tendencies, learned by a long and gradual experience to suit themselves to the organisation under which they live. It may be (though this is not my own opinion) that the system of land tenure now prevailing in the Nagpur provinces springs from an extreme theory, based on a foreign experience; but if so, the ryotwari system of Bombay no less represents the opposite extreme; and even admitting that the latter is at present the more in favour of the two, it would be very questionable policy, even if it were legally possible, to attempt the extirpation of a well-established and thoroughly familiarised organisation in favour of a new system, scarcely less alien in its origin, on the ground that the latter was most in accordance with the latest theories of land tenure. The malguzari settlement of the four Nagpur districts, be it bad or good in principle, is an accomplished fact and cannot be honourably undone. The people have habituated themselves to it, and any attempt to force it into a different mould would simply create disorder and disturbance without leading to any useful result. Even if it could be made to give way to the ryotwari system as easily and thoroughly as a dissolving view, it would still remain doubtful whether the latter would be suited to the traditions and habits of the people; while under any ordinary circumstances the attempted change must be attended by a convulsion, which it would be rash to risk for the uncertain advantages of a mere leap in the dark. If, then, a full inquiry should really bring out the fact that Nagpur province has suffered from its subjection to an alien administrative system, the proper remedy, to my mind, would not be to call in from a distance an opposite and no less alien school of administrators, but to let the province educate a service of its own, who would come to their work without preconceived opinions of any kind whatever either to forget or to support; and this is actually the course which has been followed during the last few years. Whatever may have been the ingredient elements of the original commission, the administrative body, as now constituted, consists almost exclusively of men who have either been entirely trained or who have passed the greater part of their service in the Central Provinces. The few among the senior officers who commenced their career in northern India have now had a local apprenticeship of eight or nine years (except in the case of a recent appointment), while the great majority of the Commission have gained their whole civil training in the Central Provinces. The mistakes, if mistakes they were, of the earlier revenue administrations, were made by officials who had only foreign experience to guide them in organising what was then probably the least known and most chaotically-managed province of India. After ten years of change and experiment the Central Provinces have now begun to settle down into an independent career of their own, with distinct traditions and separate local interests. The administration is conducted by a body of officials whose experience in the past and prospects for the future belong almost exclusively to the province with which they have cast in their lot; and who, whatever may be thought of their success, may fairly claim to be animated by the strongest feeling of esprit de corps and pride in their special charge. However the interest of the provinces might be affected in other respects by disintegration, it can scarcely be doubted that they would suffer by the disorganisation of this official body. They would no longer be managed by a united and disciplined service, recruited on uniform principles and on a scale sufficiently large to allow of a healthy circulation and a fair field for advancement, but by two or more small irregular contingents, hanging on to the outskirts of large regulation provinces, and only connected with them to an extent sufficient to injure the prospects of all their members except covenanted civilians. For, as a rule, the same or similar services command a higher rate of remuneration in regulation than in non-regulation provinces; so that a small province of the latter class, attached to a large one of the former, might serve as an outlet for favoured young civilians seeking early advancement, but would not be sufficiently attractive to retain them throughout their service. A similar difficulty was actually experienced in the Punjab before the promulgation of the new furlough rules practically cut off its connexion with the North-western Provinces. The size and prestige of the former province mitigated in its case the evils of this tendency to a constant influx of young officers and efflux of experienced ones; but what compensating force is there which could be expected to work like results if (say) the four Nagpur districts were attached to Bombay. The lower scale of pay obtaining in the former would still necessitate the employment of a large proportion of military and covenanted officers in their administration; and these would remain tied to the soil, far from head-quarters and the fountains of favour, while such civilians as elected at all for service in districts so remote, and (considering their climate) probably so unpopular, would be mere birds of passage, tempted perhaps for a time by exceptional terms. No less healthy state of things can be conceived for the welfare of a province than to be worked by a small stagnating local service, officered by chiefs looking to a distant capital alike for principles and prospects. Thus, simply considering the interests of the four Nagpur districts, the gain to them from the dismemberment of the Central Provinces would be the certainty that their administrators knew the Maratha language,—an advantage which, though real, is not so important as it seems, because (1) the speech of the country is not pure Marathi, and the people understand and talk Hindi; (2), because under existing rules, officers serving in Maratha districts are bound in pass in Marathi under severe pecuniary penalties. Still it would no doubt be better that the administrators of the Maratha districts should come to their work already skilled in Marathi, than that they should acquire their knowledge of it whilst called upon for active service; and so far the argument of language may fairly be used, provided that undue stress be not laid on it in favour of transfer to Bombay. On the other hand must be taken into account three very serious disadvantages:—

(1.) The substitution of a distant and, from its traditions and interests, a comparatively apathetic Government for an admittedly strong and successful home administration.

(2.) The breaking up of a compact, well-disciplined, and zealous service into two or more fragments too small and disconnected to be really efficient.

(3.) The complete change of policy which would necessarily follow any radical change of the quarter of administration; and which, in the present case, would be intensified by the popular idea that a province naturally forming part of Bombay has been mal-administered on so-called "Bengal" principles. This seems to me by far the most serious danger to be guarded against. There can be no doubt that, partly from the unavoidable necessity of somewhat forcing forward progress in so backward a country, and partly from the want of full information regarding its circumstances, the first few years of the new administration in Nagpur were characterised by constant experiment and almost restless movement. Like other Eastern races, the people have a high appreciation of rest, and rest they are only just beginning to attain, as the administration uses the knowledge painfully gained by its first period of activity to settle down into harmony with local wants and traditions. This prospect would be made more distant than ever by the proposed transfer ; and a change of administration, more especially one avowedly made to redress the errors of a false system, would re-open all the controversies, and renew all the hopes and apprehensions, which are only now beginning to subside after keeping the province in agitation for the better part of 10 years. If wrong has been done by the settlement, worse harm would be done by uprooting it, and the only possible remedy lies in the gradual process of adaptation, which is now being attempted. Probably this might be furthered by enlarging the field from which the Commission is now recruited, and infusing a larger Bombay and Madras element into its composition. This would be a measure of reform perfectly consistent with the cardinal maxim that administration should be conducted not in accordance with the theories of any particular school, but on a careful observance of local circumstances, while the reversal of policy which would follow the transfer of Nagpur to Bombay might be more fully described as akin to revolution.

The balance, then, of advantage seems to me to be against dismemberment, even in the case of the Nagpur province, in whose interests the change is mainly advocated ; while all that is claimed for the scheme as affecting the Sagar and Narbada territories is that they would not absolutely suffer by it. I have given my reasons for thinking otherwise, and it seems to me that the gain to the four Maratha districts and the half million of Marathas should be placed beyond all manner of doubt, before a territory three times as great, and a population outnumbering the Marathas in even a larger proportion, are deprived of all the advantages of a resident Government in their behalf. But, on the view taken above, the position is not only that the gain to Nagpur will not outweigh the loss to the northern and eastern districts, but that Nagpur will suffer by the transfer scarcely less than the rest of the province.

Commissioner, Jabalpur Division.

Enclosure 3 in No. 8.

Note by MR. W. B. JONES, Officiating Commissioner, Narbada Division, on the proposal to dismember the Central Provinces.

THE first thing that strikes me is, that one would like to know what the effective reason for the proposed change is. Two utterly distinct reasons are assigned,—first, that on wide administrative and financial grounds it would be convenient to break up the Central Provinces; second, that the interests of the people of the south-west portion of the province demand that they should be united to Bombay.

Now, it is important to know which of the two reasons has most weight with the advocates of change. My impression is that the first is the substantial reason, and that the second is somewhat of an afterthought. But be this as it may, I would recommend that in any reply which may be prepared by the Administration, the two things should be kept very distinct. The Government of India may decide to dismember the province either for general administrative and financial reasons, or for the good of its inhabitants, or for both ; but unless we know how much weight each reason has in the ultimate determination of the question, it may easily happen that a change detrimental to the interests of the people of these provinces is carried out ostensibly for their benefit.

In reply to the argument, that the dismemberment of the province would be an administrative convenience, it is difficult to say much. The question is one of which the Government of India is the only judge. At the same time we of this province may perhaps offer an opinion on those points in the scheme which fall within our field of view.

If effect be given to the proposals, the most backward portion of the province—that tract for which most may be hoped if the Central Provinces are maintained—will be cut off from its best prospect of satisfactory administration. It is impossible that Chhattisgarh should go with the Sagar and Narbada territories, and be ruled from Allahabad; it seems to me almost equally impossible that it should be added to Nagpur, and be governed from Bombay. If the western tendencies of the Nagpur province render it undesirable that it should be ruled from Calcutta, it can scarcely be right that Raipur and Bilaspur, with their peculiar institutions, numerous feudatories, and liability to famine, should be governed from Bombay. Let but one season fail, and Chhattisgarh in the hands of a distant Government might too probably become another Orissa.

The difficulty about Chhattisgarh I regard as a positive bar to the dismembering scheme. To show that it would be otherwise a measure of questionable expediency many reasons might be advanced. I will mention two which strike me as particularly worthy of attention. The first is the vastness of the areas which it proposed to transfer. It looks a small matter to transfer two-and-threequarter millions of people to the North-western Provinces, the proposal looks much more formidable when attention is turned to the area which will be added to that Government. The case of the Nagpur province is even stronger. I can imagine the Nagpur district being governed from Bombay, but it is difficult to suppose that the south of Chanda could receive much attention from a Government on the Western Coast, or that effective control or supervision could be exercised over Bastar from Bombay. Secondly, I would submit that the homogeneousness of the populations of the North-western Provinces and Sagar and Narbada territories is too unreservedly assumed. To a considerable extent the people of the plains in these parts undoubtedly resemble the inhabitants of the north-east of India, but of the two-and-three-quarter millions whom it is proposed to transfer, a large proportion belong to Gonds and other so-called aboriginal tribes ; and the single fact that we have only 79, while the North-western Provinces have 420 inhabitants per square mile, implies a world of difference in the wants and circumstances of the two populations.

The arguments advanced in the preceding paragraphs have been directed to the question of the expediency of dismemberment as a general administrative measure. I will now express my opinion very briefly on the proposal as it affects the well-being of the people of the Nagpur province and of the Sagar and Narbada territories. I omit Nimar for reasons which will appear further on; and of Chhatisgarh I shall say nothing: being convinced that it is not practicable to add this tract to Bombay, I need not attempt to show that the transfer would be detrimental to the interests of its inhabitants.

Stress is laid on the importance of attaching the Nagpur province to a presidency where a congenial revenue system obtains. This argument for dismembering the Central Provinces would have deserved much more weight 20 years ago than it does now. For good or for evil the Bengal revenue system has been introduced into the Nagpur province, and all rights connected with the land are now based upon it. The question is not what kind of settlement to make, but how to work a settlement already made. In the stage in which the settlement question now is, it seems to me to matter very little to which presidency Nagpur is attached. Bengal officers have introduced and are now working the Bombay system in Berar with marked success. A Bombay officer settled two districts of the western side of the Central Povinces—Chhindwara and Betul—on principles differing in nothing from those of settlement made by Bengal officers in adjoining districts. If Nagpur goes to Bombay there may be some risk of a too violent subversion of existing rights; if it stays in the Central Provinces there may be some timidity in making changes which are desirable, but the end will be much the same. What is needful will be done, and in any case the Government of India may feel confident of this, that error* having been ascertained to exist, no prepossession (should such exist) in favour of the North-western Provinces revenue system will impede the application of the remedy.

But supposing for argument's sake that there would be some advantage from a revenue point of view in attaching Nagpur to Bombay, it has still to be shown that the advantage would be so great as to outweigh the certain disadvantages which would accrue in all other departments, both to the Nagpur province and to the Sagar and Narbada districts, if their centre of government were removed to Bombay and Mahbleshwar on the one hand, and to Allahabad and Nynee Tal on the other. If this change is made, both tracts, the Sagar and Narbada territories especially, will become outlying and comparatively unimportant sub-divisions of great governments; the stream of administrative life will circulate in them more feebly than at present, and for the watchful care of an ever-present local government, they will have nothing but flying visits from members of revenue boards, and on rare occasions from a governor or lieutenant-governor.

The argument that the Nagpur province and the Sagar and Narbada territories are accessible from Bombay and Allahabad has to me very little weight. If there is one thing certain in Indian administration it is this, that good government cannot be secured by flying visits from inspecting officers however highly qualified, and I would remark further that accessibility ought not to be judged of from the point of view of the governors, but from that of the governed; and that to the people of these provinces, Governments at Bombay and Allahabad will appear distant and unapproachable. If we could have a plebiscitum, the stability of the Central Provinces would not be doubtful.

I will conclude this short note by endeavouring to meet the argument that the raison d'être of the Central Provinces' administration in great measure disappeared with the completion of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. Admitting, what it is at first sight somewhat difficult to believe, that our isolation (it must have been quite evident even in 1861 that it would only be temporary) was the cause of our existence as a separate administration, I would submit that since the formation of the province another and better raison d'être has been discovered. In the continuance of the Central Provinces' administration lies, as I believe, our best hope of being able to carry the benefits of good government to some of the wildest tracts and least civilized races in India. The future of the 1 millions of aborigines, and of as many more persons belonging to the recognised Hindu castes, but resident in the wilder parts of the province, seems to me to be bound up in the maintenance of a watchful and sympathetic local administration. There are many districts in the Central Provinces which are so advanced that it matters comparatively little what government they are under, but one half of the province is as it were emerging out of darkness, and I hold that the true raison d'être of the Central Provinces' Government is this, that it has done much, and promises to do much more to develope the material resources of its least advanced tracts and to spread the benefits of civilized government among backward and helpless populations. If I thought that these ends could be as well secured when the various parts of the province become the distant satellites of great Governments, I would not oppose dismemberment; but believing that they cannot, I would earnestly deprecate it. The Central Province tree was planted only 12 years ago, and so far has borne good fruit. Let us not precipitately root it up. Let us at least wait until the railway to Chhattisgarh is completed, or as I would rather say, until the limits of the various governments and administrations in India can be finally mapped out. Some years hence, when the backward portions of the province have advanced, it may be possible to dismember it without injury to the interests of the people. While deprecating present dismemberment, I would not refuse to recognise the fact that the proposals will year by year become more feasible and will at some future time be carried into effect.

In what has preceded I have avoided all reference to Nimar, and have confined myself to the question of dismembering the Central Provinces as first constituted. With regard to Nimar I am of opinion that it ought not to have been added to these provinces, and that it might even now be desirable to transfer it to Bombay. Apart from the fact that in its revenue and population Nimar resembles Khandesh much more than it does the adjoining districts of the Central Provinces, it seems to me matter for regret, that by adding this geographical excrescence to the ring fence of the province, we interposed a third jurisdiction on the rail and high road between Bombay and Central India. Should the transfer of Nimar recommend itself to the Chief Commissioner, it would go far to satisfy those who desire the dismemberment of the province.

W. B. JONES,
Offg. Commissioner, Narbada Division.

*I assume this for argument's sake: I have not studied the settlement question at Chanda sufficiently to enable me to offer any opinion as to the fact of the existence of error.

Enclosure 4 in No. 8.

NOTE by MR. W. G. PEDDER, Bombay Civil Service.

Bombay, 3rd January 1873.

MR. MORRIS has asked me to give him my opinion on the suggestion to break up the Central Provinces. I have no hesitation in saying that I think such a measure would be a retrograde one, and would certainly keep back the progress of the provinces.

My reasons are briefly as follows :—

1st. If the provinces are broken up, I presume that the greater part of the Nagpur division with Nimar would be transferred to Bombay ; the Jabalpur and the greater part of the Narbada division to the North-west Provinces ; the Chhattisgarh Division to Bengal, and the Upper Godavari district to Madras. Each of the transferred portions would then be the most remote part of the presidency to which it was transferred, and would be in consequence the territory most neglected ; while the whole of the provinces, as at present constituted, would lose the great advantage of the direct rule of a chief Commissioner intimately acquainted with every part of them.

2ndly. The whole system of administration of the Central Provinces, and especially of the revenue and judicial administration, differs materially from the various systems in force in the North-western Provinces, Bombay and Bengal, and consequently if the present system were maintained, it would be worked by governments and supervising officials who would not thoroughly understand it, and probably not have time to learn it. And to attempt to assimilate the present system to that of the territories with which each fragment of the Central Provinces would be incorporated, would, I think, be on the whole undesirable, as unsettling the people, and perhaps shaking confidence in Government. This is especially the case with the settlements and revenue system. Of the principle of the settlements I myself have never professed to approve. But they are in force, and though certain carefully considered modifications in them are I think both practicable and expedient, yet I should strongly deprecate any attempt to over-ride or alter them fundamentally. But I do not think that the present revenue system of the Nagpur Division could be administered from Bombay. All the Bombay revenue officers who might have anything to do with it would be constantly calling for fundamental modifications in it. And the same, though not perhaps to so great a degree, would, I imagine, be the case with North-west Province officers.

3rdly. I am inclined to think that the ultimate cost of the change would soon overtake or exceed any immediate saving which it might effect. In particular executive and judicial functions are now united in the same officers. This system, for reasons stated in a letter which, as Commissioner of the Nagpur Division, I had the honour to address to the Chief Commissioner, I think suited to the present state of that division. But it certainly would not last long after Nagpur were transferred to Bombay, and the change would cause a large increase of expenditure.

I should, however, advocate the transfer of the Upper Godavari district to Madras. It could be supervised from Madras and Coconada, as far as distance alone is concerned, much more easily than from Nagpur,* while the difficulty of language, which hardly any officers or amlah in the Central Provinces understand, is very considerable.

* The Deputy Commissioner was called on duty at Nagpur in the rains of 1871, and was forced to return via Poona, Madras, and Coconada.

MINUTE by Sir W. MUIR on the proposed transfer of Sind to the Punjab.

CONCURRING entirely in the Viceroy's proposal for the transfer of Sind to the Punjab, and in the political and administrative reasons advanced to justify the transfer, I should simply have concurred in his Excellency's Minute, but for one or two points incidentally connected with the subject.

The first regards the political control of Baroda. This was assumed by the Government of India at the end of 1874 ; and then I doubted the policy of detaching so entirely the political control even temporarily from Bombay. Baroda is so close to Bombay, its territorry is so mixed up with our own, and the interests of its subjects must be connected at so many points with those of the inhabitants of the interlaced and adjoining districts, that I question the wisdom of not leaving the immediate political control under the Government of Bombay. And I should have expected that this course would have been resumed, so soon as the immediate troubles which affected the State had been composed.

(2.) To counterbalance the additional weight thrown upon the Punjab by the addition of Sind, I think that it might be lightened by the transfer of Delhi and some adjoining territory to the North-western Provinces. When Lieutenant-Governor of the latter provinces, I repeatedly advocated this measure. The city of Delhi is virtually in the North-western Provinces, and could be more conveniently, and I believe more effectively and popularly, administered therefrom ; and moreover the Agra canal which traverses part of the tract should be throughout its whole length under one administration.

I continue of the opinion referred to by his Excellency, that the Central Provinces ought not to be dismembered. They form a compact whole, the administration of which should rest in one hand. And in their present backward condition, these districts seem to be specially of the description which requires the local attention and fostering care of a Chief Commissioner. For the present, therefore, at least, I would not disturb the existing mode of administration or its direct dependence on the Government of India.

Political Department.

To Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for India in Council, London.

My Lord Marquis, Bombay Castle, 3rd April 1876.

We beg to request your Lordship's early attention to the following observations on the present state of affairs in Sind :—

2. Since the close of the year 1872, the local management of the relations between the British Government and his Highness the Khan of Khelat, and certain tribes on the West and Northern borders of Sind, has been entrusted to Sir W. Merewether, Commissioner in Sind, an officer of this Government, but who received his instructions on these matters directly from the Government of India without any intervention on our part; while to the northward of Sind and along the border of the Punjab similar duties have been performed by Major Sandeman, an officer of the Punjab Government, who was to a certain extent made subordinate to Sir W. Merewether. Such being the position of these officers, Sir W. Merewether, on the 13th December last, telegraphed to the Government of India that a revolution in Khelat was clearly imminent, that he was himself proceeding to the frontier to watch events, avoiding all interference, and that he had made Major Sandeman aware of the state of things, and ordered him to avoid any communication with the Brahooe Sirdars, and on no account to go beyond the Murree Hills, towards Bolan, Seebee, or Kutchee. On the 16th December the Government of India simply replied "Policy of non-interference approved." Not a word was said in disapproval of the orders sent to Major Sandeman. On the 17th December Sir W. Merewether telegraphed that he had heard that Major Sandeman had acted in direct opposition to his orders. The Government of India on the 20th December replied, "While directing Sandeman not to interfere in the troubles apparently impending "between the Khan and his subjects, you should take care not to interfere with "Sandeman's execution of orders he has received from Government of India, and "particularly not to be hasty in condemning his conduct before he has explained it. "Sandeman's movements among Murrees should not be interfered with."

3. It was thus rendered clear that Major Sandeman had received instructions which were not known to Sir W. Merewether, whose orders, as the former telegraphed to the Government of India on the 23rd December, clashed with those he had received from the Punjab Government. On the 7th January 1876, the Government of India informed Sir W. Merewether that Major Sandeman would be no longer subject to his authority. On the 9th the Commissioner in Sind remonstrated, and on the 10th he was relieved of all responsibility for Khelat affairs, which were entirely transferred to Colonel Munro, an officer serving on the border of the Punjab under that Government. It was ordered that all requisitions for military and police he might make on Sind should be promptly complied with.

4. If the directions of the Government of India had stopped here, it would have been our duty only to point out to your Lordship how improbable, or almost impossible it was that such an arrangement could work satisfactorily. All the means in the shape of military police, etcetera, were left in the hands of the officers of Sind, whose services had been summarily dispensed with from want of confidence in them. All the authority was transferred to an officer belonging to another government, who had no means at his own disposal.

5. This objection, however, appears to have soon presented itself to the Government of India; for, in a letter dated the 20th March, they observe that "experience has " shown that the officers conducting our political relations with Khelat and the Frontier " Tribes should have full administrative control over the tract in question (the Frontier " District), and if the officer discharging these double functions, that is, of political " officer and administrator, is an officer of the Punjab administration, it is desirable that " he should be subordinate to his own government, and not to that of Sind."

6. The Government of India have therefore applied for your Lordship's sanction to the transfer of the Frontier District to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab. Even so, the objection will remain in full force. They have declared the authority of the Punjab officer to extend along the whole western border of Sind down to the sea; and thus the conflict of authority and division of means will in the lower districts be fully preserved. Colonel Munro has already demanded of Sir W. Merewether the delivery of his records respecting those districts, in terms of which the Government of India has been obliged, at our suggestion, to point out the impropriety.

7. It appears therefore to be the duty of this Government to submit to your Lordship, that these changes have been ordered hastily and without due regard to considerations extending beyond the disputes of the Border tribes. The scheme has been devised, it would appear, to meet what the Government of India regard as an emergency; and it is necessary to examine what is the apparent character of the emergency. During the last few years every effort has been made by persuasion, threats, and gifts, to induce the Khan of Khelat to govern properly and maintain peace between the tribes. All the attempts have totally failed. The last, with a view to mediation, was that made by Major Sandeman in opposition to the orders of Sir W. Merewether. And, to quote the words of the Government of India, "unfortunately during the stay of the mission two " events occurred which seemed likely to place difficulty in the way of effective media- " tion," and " made it necessary for the Government of India to pause for a time and watch the progress of events." But it is the opinion of the Government of India that "it is clear that he (Major Sandeman) has not as yet had a fair chance of achieving success; present circumstances are not such as to render success hopeless." He is to make another attempt. And because after three or four years of abortive efforts, this is not to be considered " hopeless," the whole administration of Sind is to be thrown into confusion, a very important district is to be severed from it, and divided and conflicting authority is to be established from end to end of its border. We have already received orders by telegraph to suspend immediately from the exercise of his functions, Colonel Loch, an officer of high rank in the Bombay army, commanding in Upper Sind and in civil charge of the Frontier District, and to replace him by an officer of good judgment with positive instructions to co-operate heartily with Colonel Munro. The Government of India have not stated for what offence Colonel Loch is to be dismissed.

8. It is in the opinion of this Government essentially necessary for the proper administration of the country, and for the security of the officers employed, that the local management of Border affairs should be entrusted to those administering Sind itself,—they being, as has for the last three years been the case, directly subordinate, in respect of Border affairs to the Government of India. If that government are not prepared to accept the officers of this government as their agents for this purpose, it will, we think, be right for them to transfer either to themselves or to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, the entire administration of Sind; and your Lordship will find on inquiry that towards the close of Lord Mayo's government, a proposal was under consideration for annexing Sind to the Punjab, and at the same time attaching to this Presidency the Central Provinces and other Mahratta-speaking districts in the direction of Jubbulpur, to which there is easy access from Bombay by the G. I. P. Railway.

9. We may therefore express a hope that if, for reasons of which we are at present very imperfectly informed, Sind cannot remain in the position it has for several years occupied, the alternative suggested above may receive careful consideration at the hands of your Lordship.

10. We have not forwarded copies of the telegrams to which reference has been made in this despatch, as we feel certain they must have been transmitted to your Lordship by the Government of India. We have received scarcely any information as to the views on which the Government of India are acting; and shall no doubt feel it necessary to address your Lordship at greater length by a subsequent mail.

We have, &c.,

Government of India.—Foreign Department.—Political.

To the Most Honourable the Marquis of Salisbury, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

My Lord Marquis, Fort William, the 7th April 1876.

In your Lordship's despatch No. 15, dated 3rd February, our attention was directed to the changes which, under existing circumstances, seem necessary for the purpose of ensuring unity of action in the government of the Western and North-western Frontiers of India, and in particular to the advisability of making new arrangements with respect to the administration of the Province of Sind.

2. Previously to the receipt of that despatch, the subject was under our consideration, recent events having demonstrated the necessity for administrative changes on the Khelat border more radical than those effected in January 1875. By the telegram of his Excellency the Viceroy, of the 14th March, your Lordship was informed that the expediency of effecting a union, more or less complete, of the administration of Sind and the Punjab was generally admitted, and by the same telegram, and another of the 27th March, that the transfer to the Punjab of the portion of Sind known as the Sind Frontier District was deemed a matter of immediate necessity.

3. We have now the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's consideration, copies of the undermentioned papers *:—

Note by C. U. Aitchison, C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department.

Minute by the Honourable Sir H. Davies, K.C.S.I., Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, and annexure.

Minute by his Excellency the Viceroy, and annexure.

Minute by the Honourable Sir William Muir, K.C.S.I.

4. From these papers it will be perceived that it is the opinion of the Governor General that nothing less than the entire transfer of the province of Sind from the Presidency of Bombay to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab will secure that complete identity of action regarding frontier affairs which is necessary; that such transfer is desirable not only on political but on other grounds of administrative expediency; that it can be effected without serious difficulty and should be carried out without delay, the details being left to be arranged by the Government of India in communication with the Government of Bombay and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

5. In these views we unanimously concur. We would add, with reference to the alternative arrangements suggested in your Lordship's despatch, that there are no districts on the Western Frontier requiring, in our opinion, a separate military administration, and that any arrangement involving a severance of the frontier districts of the Punjab from the government of that province is to be deprecated. Such severance would be detrimental to the internal administration of those districts, on the efficiency of which the political arrangements of the frontier in great measure depend for their success, and would deprive the Government of India, quoad its administration of the western border, of the assistance of a government which has cordially carried out our policy and is best fitted by position and experience to conduct, under our orders, the relations of the British Government with its Beluch and Afghan neighbours.

6. With regard to paragraph 7 of your Lordship's despatch we concur with his Excellency in the opinion that no change in the existing administrative arrangements of the Central Provinces is at present desirable or called for, and that after the transfer of the Sind to the Punjab there will remain ample occupation for the Government of Bombay.

7. It is further the conviction of his Excellency that it will not be desirable to replace the superintendence of the Baroda State in the hands of the Bombay Government, and that it will be an advantageous course to extend the functions of the Agent of the Governor General at Baroda so as to embrace the political relations of some of the neighbouring States. These views have the concurrence of the Council, with the exception of the Honourable Sir William Muir, who, for reasons recorded in his separate minute, questions the propriety of depriving the Bombay Government of the immediate political control of Baroda affairs.

* Nos. 5, 7, 8, and 9.

8. The suggestion of Sir William Muir, that to counterbalance the additional weight thrown upon the Punjab Government by the addition of Sind, a transfer should be made of Delhi and some adjoining territory to the North-western Provinces, has not been considered by us on the present occasion, but the subject has been twice considered previously, and no change was considered necessary. The proposal will be again considered, if deemed desirable, in the event of our recommendation for the union of Sind with the Punjab receiving the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

Political, No. 72.

My Lord, India Office, London, 13th July 1876.

Para. 1. I have received and considered in Council the political letter from the Government of your Excellency's predecessor, No. 85,* dated the 7th April last, expressing the unanimous opinion of that Government that the transfer of the province of Sind from the Presidency of Bombay to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab is desirable, not only on political, but on other grounds of administrative expediency; that it can be effected without serious difficulty; and that it should be carried out without delay, the details being left to be arranged by the Government of India, in communication with the Government of Bombay and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

2. These views are, I am glad to find, in full accordance with those expressed by me in my Despatch, No. 15,† of the 3rd February last, and the requisite steps to give effect to them may be taken at as early a date as your Excellency's Government may deem advisable. Under these circumstances, and on the assumption that the transfer of the whole province will now be effected, it is needless for me to notice further the earlier proposal of the Government of India, contained in their letter, No. 65,‡ dated the 17th March last, in regard to the Upper Sind Frontier District. The peculiar condition of affairs which was thought to render the transfer of that district to the Punjab urgently necessary, without reference to the larger measure, has, it may be hoped, passed away.

3. Although the principle of the transfer of Sind from the charge of the Government of Bombay may thus be considered as decided, I am fully sensible that many difficult questions of detail in regard to the future management of the two provinces of Sind and the Punjab remain to be settled. It will, no doubt, require careful consideration whether the Trans-Indus territories shall be governed as a single district, or shall be divided; whether, for administrative purposes, they shall be entirely disconnected from districts on this side the Indus; and whether the system of administration shall be civil or military. The late Government of India was opposed to a separate military administration of any portion of the Western Frontier, and to any arrangement involving a severance from the Government of the Punjab of the frontier districts which are now under its control. Nor does it appear to have been disposed to dissent from the view recorded by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab adverse to any change in the position with reference to that Government of the territories south of the Sutlej at present administered by it. These are points on which I do not desire at present to express any opinion. They will be decided with less difficulty should your Excellency be in a position to personally visit the localities, and consult with the officers by whom the arrangements which may be ultimately thought best will have to be carried out.

4. The Government of your Excellency's predecessor considered that the exclusion of Sind from the Bombay Presidency would not require to be followed by any addition, in other quarters, to the territories administered by the Government of Bombay. I cannot agree in this view. A measure so considerably reducing the extent of the presidency, and necessarily affecting so seriously the prospects of the services employed in it, must, in my opinion, be supplemented by provisions for utilizing elsewhere under the orders of the Government of Bombay the official strength which will be placed at its disposal. The transfer would, otherwise, be open to serious objection, as involving great waste of force, tendency to undue centralization, throwing a heavy additional burden on the Viceroy, and degrading the position of the Bombay Government in a manner which could not fail to greatly impair the administration of the territories left under its control. I cannot consider that the seditious tone of a certain portion of the Native press of Bombay furnishes a valid argument against an increase to the area of that Presidency, still less against a proposal to prevent that area from being seriously reduced. The influence exercised by the Native press, whatever may be its extent, is the result mainly of propinquity, sympathy of feeling, or similarity of race on the part of its readers, and is not likely to be affected, save in a very small degree, by administrative arrangements.

5. In my Despatch of the 15th February last, I suggested various reasons which seemed to me to recommend the transfer to Bombay of at least a portion of the Central Provinces. There is, unquestionably, force in the arguments urged in 1873 by Mr. Morris against the dismemberment of those provinces which was proposed at that time. But it was then contemplated to apportion the fragments into which the territories under the charge of the Chief Commissioner would have been resolved between the several local governments, one district being annexed to Bengal, another to the North-western Provinces, a third to Madras, and the remainder to Bombay. The objections to such an assignment to widely separated authorities of districts heretofore administered as a homogeneous charge may well have been held to outweigh the arguments in its favour. But the same objections would not apply to a transfer of the provinces as a whole from the controlling authority of the Government of India to that of the Government of Bombay. Their unity would thus be preserved. Chattisgurh, the extreme eastern district of the Central Provinces, is not more distant from Bombay than is Nimar, the district in the extreme west from Calcutta; Nagpore would probably remain, as at present, the centre of government, and I see no reason to suppose that the general administration would be less efficient if conducted by officers appointed by, and under the orders of, the Government of Bombay, than it is under the existing system.

6. This arrangement, if carried out, would largely increase the extent of British territory administered by the Government of Bombay, and give sufficient scope for the employment of the officers whose services will be set at liberty on the transfer of Sind.

7. There is, no doubt, much to be said in favour of the view held by the late Viceroy, that the conduct of the foreign affairs of India, internal as well as external, should rest with the supreme Government, and that, to this end, the management of relations with all the principal Native States should be directly in their hands. On the other hand, it is very desirable to maintain, under the minor governments, an efficient service ready to occupy the highest posts in the State, and, from this point of view, the removal from them of all prizes in the political department may be open to objection. I entirely agree in the propriety of maintaining, for the present, the connexion of Baroda with the Government of India, but, before it is decided that this arrangement shall be permanent, I should desire that the subject be considered in all its aspects, and that I should have the benefit of your Excellency's views in regard to it.

No. 13.

REPORT by Sir W. Merewether, Commissioner of Sind, on the Administration of the Frontier Districts of Sind, dated 30th September 1876.

THE Northern and Western Frontier of Sind, with which this report will only deal, commences near Tega in the Sooee Pass, a mountain torrent having its source in the Boogtee hills. The waters of this torrent are usually lost in the plain soon after they leave those hills about 24 miles north of Kusmore, but in high flood they find their way to the Indus. At the point above mentioned near Tega, the Khelat, Punjab, and Sind boundaries meet. The division between the two last provinces is about 29 miles in length, and runs down to the Indus at Mittree, 11 miles eastward of Kusmore. From Tega the boundary line is solely between Beloochistan, or Khelat territory, and Sind, and passes along the Northern and Western Frontier of the latter to the sea, which it reaches at Cape Monze, about 19 miles west of Kurrachee, a total distance of some 400 miles.

2. At first the line follows the northern limit of the Frontier District of Upper Sind to Khyree Ghurree, skirting the southern edge of the desert which divides Sind from the plain of Cutchee in Khelat territory. From a little below Khyree Ghurree it passes due west to the Khyrthur range, and then south to where the Gaj river breaks through that chain of mountains, in this part belonging to the Collectorate of Shikarpur. From the Gaj it takes the watershed of the above range until it reaches the Hubb River, about 46 miles north of Kurrachee, whence that river marks the boundary to the sea at Cape Monze. The line from the Gaj to the sea forms the western limit of the Kurrachee Collectorate.

3. The portions of Sind then connected with the boundary are the Frontier District of Upper Sind, and the Skikarpur, and Kurrachee Collectorates.

4. In the Frontier District the administrative establishment consisted of a Political Superintendent (a military officer) who likewise held command of the troops, a Political Agent at the court of Khelat, an Assistant Political Superintendent taken from the brigade, and a Deputy Collector, a purely civil officer.

5. In the Shikarpur district, there was the Collector, two Deputy Collectors, who had charge of the two divisions of Larkana and Mehar, which lay immediately inside the border, and a superintendent of police.

6. In Kurrachee, there was the Collector, a Deputy Collector in charge of the Sehwan division, and a native official called Kotwal, who held charge of the Kohistan, a barren tract of hilly country lying between the Sehwan Division, and the sea, also a Superintendent of Police, all under the general superintendence of the Commissioner in Sind.

7. The other Deputy Collectors belonging to the two above collectorates are not mentioned, because their charges are altogether away from the boundary, and they have nothing to do with frontier matters.

8. The Political Superintendent and Commandant on the Frontier of Upper Sind, and Commandant-in-Chief Frontier Field Force, as he was styled, had, under the Commissioner in Sind, the entire management of political relations with the State of Khelat, the country beyond the border throughout the whole length down to the sea. He was thus brought into communication with all the different tribes of Belooch and Brahoee, forming the body of which the Khan of Khelat is the head. Also with the Patan tribes inhabiting the small district of Seebee, situated in the north-eastern corner of Cutchee, subordinate, and belonging to the Government of Kandahar. Within the border he had control over the various Belooch and Sindee tribes in the Frontier District, which is bounded on the north by the line from Tega to Khyree Ghurree, on the east by the Indus, and on the south mainly by the Biggaree canal, but having a small triangular piece to the south of that canal near its tail. He had revenue charge of the district under the Commissioner, regulating the distribution of land, and manner of recovering Government dues, and performed judicial duties as magistrate of the district. He had also general superintendence over all irrigational works, three executive engineers being in actual charge, one for the Desert canal, one for the Kusmore and Biggaree Bund, and the third for the Biggaree canal; with another to look after public buildings, local fund works, &c. He was Commandant-in-Chief of all the troops employed on the frontier, the only military force in Upper Sind consisting or a mountain train, three regiments of Sind horse, 499 strong each, and the 30th Regiment N. I., or Jacob's Rifles, 712 of all ranks. To each regiment of Sind Horse there was attached a body of 1 russuldar, 3 jemadars, and 100 Belooch sowars, in all 3 russuldars, 9 jemadars, and 300 men, recruited from the tribes in and beyond the border, and used as guides, or scouts to obtain intelligence of the movements of intending marauders. In a country where there were no roads, and tracks were obliterated by the first passing dust-storm, this was a most valuable body of men. Their knowledge of the habits of, and acquaintance with, plunderers, people similar to themselves, enabled them to get early, and good information as to projected forays on a large scale, while through their familiarity with the usual haunts resorted to by robbers, they could point out the best direction to be taken for intercepting small bodies, that had ventured to leave the hills. In all military matters the commandant-in-chief reported to the general officer commanding the Sind district for the information or decision of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. The staff consisted of a brigade major taken from the brigade, who was also superintendent of Bazars, and as such disposed of all minor cases within the cantonment. The troops were used for the protection of the border from external aggression. For the maintenance of good order and preservation of life and property within, there was a body of police, strength as per margin, entertained from the people of the country, Belooch and Sindees, and under the PoliticalS uperintendent. No others beside the troops and police were ever allowed to bear arms.

9. The Political Agent at Khelat, a military officer selected from the regiments serving on the frontier for his special fitness for the duties required of him, remained as a rule with the Khan of Khelat, wherever he might be, whether above the passes, as was usual in summer, or in the plains of Cutchee during the cold weather. His duties were to represent the British Government at the Court of the Khan, to be the channel of communication between the Political Superintendent and the Khan, to aid the latter on all occasions with suitable advice in matters in which the interests of both Governments were concerned, or wherein he could see advantage might accrue to the State he was accredited to; at the same time being very careful to prevent any action on his part appearing like undue interference, or that he had any leaning to any particular circumstances, or party in the State. He was also to keep the Political Superintendent acquainted with all that took place in the country, of the general feeling of the chiefs and people, and to do his best to obtain reliable information on what was passing in the countries beyond Beloochistan.

10. The Assistant Political Superintendent, an officer likewise chosen from the Frontier Brigade, gave his aid to the Superintendent in political matters generally, relieved him of as much of the judicial work as his powers as a full power magistrate would allow of, and had charge of the town of Jacobabad.

11. The Deputy Collector, a gentleman of the Uncovenanted Civil Service, conducted all the revenue duties of the district under the orders of the Political Superintendent, and was answerable to him only for their proper performance. He was likewise a magistrate with full powers, but as his revenue work was as much as he could well attend to, cases were seldom taken up by him, being generally referred to the Assistant Political Superintendent. A settlement was introduced by the late General Jacob in 1858, and sanctioned by Government and the Court of Directors for 20 years. It was based on fair and liberal terms, and under it as well as under a wise local rule of General Jacob's, disallowing the recovery of debt by law, the people were gradually becoming well-to-do, in many cases wealthy; but unfortunately the introduction of the Civil Code in 1864 cancelled the local order, the people foolishly recommenced borrowing from the money-lenders, until the latter have them completely in their power, and scarcely a Zemindar in the whole district is now free from debt, while many have been sold up and irretrievably ruined. Such a state of affairs would be lamentable anywhere, but in this particular district it was the more especially to be regretted. The great object had been to reclaim a lot of reckless wild spirits from habits of lawlessness and crime to those of industry and honest living. This was being rapidly and most effectually done, when the chance of giving way to the infatuation of debt was unhappily thrown open to them again before they had become thoroughly able to resist it.

12. Since the introduction of the Civil Code, all cases coming under the Act are taken and disposed of by a subordinate native judge. But a proposal is under consideration to transfer this part of the administration to the Assistant Political Superintendent, a course which will be decidedly advantageous, as from his knowledge of the people and their circumstances he could often bring about arrangements which might help, if not save the involved ones.

13. There is no Treasury at Jacobabad, and all payments of revenue are made into the Collectorate Treasury at Shikarpur, and the revenue accounts kept there, but the Political Superintendent submits annually a revenue and administration report of his own.

14. The district is divided into three Talukas, with a Mukhtyarkar, and establishment of Tapadars to each. The Mukhtyarkars are also subordinate magistrates with the powers of that class.

15. As regards the frontier from Khyree Ghurree southwards, neither the collectors of Shikarpur, or of Kurrachee, or their deputies have any political powers in connexion with affairs or people beyond the frontier. If any cases occur in which people belonging to Khelat territory are concerned, they are reported to the Commissioner for instructions, or if immediate action is required, they are referred at once to the Political Superintendent on the frontier. There has never been much trouble on this part of the border, nothing scarcely beyond petty cattle-stealing, against which the ordinary police of the district have sufficed to provide. But within the last few years the lower part of the frontier has become more disturbed, owing to quarrels among the Brahoee chiefs there, and the disorderly state of Khelat generally. An extra body of 100 policemen was added to the original force as a temporary measure. The fact however is, that if the Khan of Khelat maintains proper rule in his country, and kept the Brahooee Sirdars of this the Jalawan or southern portion of his Khanate with him, there would never be any difficulty beyond what the ordinary constabulary would be able to meet effectually. The boundary is for the greater part of the distance a high range of hills with only a few passes, which can be easily watched, while the Brahooees of these parts have at present none of the daring and enterprise displayed by the Belooch tribes to the north, to venture on plundering as a means of livelihood, or to engage in extensive raids. The number of police actually on this frontier has been for many years only—

Shikarpur police - - - -	26
Kurrachee police - - - -	40

To these 100 more men were added in April 1875 to strengthen the latter, in consequence of the unsettled state of the country outside the Kurrachee Collectorate.

16. The tribes beyond the British border, commencing from the right and facing north, are in the hills, the Belooch clans of Boogtees and Murrees. The Khetrans are north again of them, and little affect the Sind border, excepting in their connexion with and friendliness to the Boogtees. In the plains on the eastern side of Cutchee, below the Boogtee and Murree hills, there are the Oomranees at Manootee, once a powerful, but now weak and scattered tribe; the Kyherees, a priestly sect, who joined the Belooch from Tabreez while the latter were in Kirman about 1,000 years ago, who have never been celebrated for much courage, and who certainly do not now belie their ancient fame. They occupy the villages of Chuttur, Tahar-ke-Gote, Koonree, and Phoolajee, where they were placed by Sir Charles Napier after he had removed the Dhoomkees and Jukranees into Sind in 1845. Next at Lehree is a portion of the Dhoomkee tribe, the senior branch of the Great Rind Division of the Belooch. These were left by Sir Charles Napier at Lehree, because the then chief, Belooch Khan, had kept apart from the robber "Beejar," and did not abandon his place, when the other Dhoomkes fled into the Boogtee hills before the British force in 1844-45. Beyond the Dhoomkees are the Patan tribes of Baroozye and Kujjuck, occupying the district of Seebee, and subjects of the Ameer of Cabul. These two have always been at feud with each other, and constantly fighting with the Murrees, who never miss an opportunity of trying to raid in Seebee, but they are boldly met by the Seebeeites, who manage to hold their own. At Muskaf near Dadur there are a few Cosahs—Belooch— and on the west side of Cutchee there are the rinds at Shoorun, and Mugzees at Jull. The remaining inhabitants of Cutchee are mainly Sindee* or Jutts, the former peaceful cultivators when left alone, the latter breeders of camels. Though neither are naturally combatant, yet on occasions of disturbances they will freely give their services as petty plunderers and thieves, and their expertness in this respect will be well remembered by those who were, engaged in the first Affghan war. Dadur being a trade halting place, situated at the southern end of the famous Bolan Pass, is a considerable town with a mixed population. From Dadur to the "Dusht-be-Dowlut," at the head of the Bolan Pass, or about 54 miles, the country is so bare that it may be called almost uninhabited. The Koords have lands, and a little cultivation near the upper end, and a portion of the Murrees, the Muzzeeranee section, who had separated themselves from the main clan some years ago, settled down at Kirta, in the lower portion, that they might let out their services for the protection of kafilahs, and travellers moving through the pass. But these have lately removed, and rejoined the clan. The other towns of importance in Cutchee are Bagh, and Gundava. The first is quite in the centre of the plain, well situated on the Nara river, from which it obtains a regular and good supply, and is on the high road from Sind to Dadur. It has a high wall all round with several gates, but no strength against artillery. It is the residence of the Khan's Naib, or Governor of Cutchee. Gundava is on the west side of Cutchee, about 10 miles from the mouth of the Moolla pass. It is a considerable town, but open, not walled all round, and is generally considered the principal town in Cutchee, because the Khans usually made it their residence in the cold weather, when the severity of the winter above the passes drove all, who could move down, to the plains. In Gundava, Bagh, and Dadur, Hindoo merchants are largely congregated, and they drive a thriving trade by lending money to the Khan, chiefs, and people, and exporting grain from Cutchee, of which they get the chief possession, one of them generally purchasing the Government share from the Khan; when there is a good fall of rain in the hills, sending water over the plains, the return of grain is very large. The lands in Cutchee are partly held by the Khan, as ruler of the country, and partly by various chiefs, principally Brahooee, to whom free grants of considerable extent have been made on condition of their giving feudal service to the Khan. The cultivators are chiefly Sindhees, with some of the poorer Belooch. The cultivation consists of jowaree, bajree, till, and cotton during the summer season; wheat, barley, rape, and muttar in the winter. The soil is most fertile, three crops of jowaree have been known to be taken from one sowing, the plant growing out again from the roots, and forming a new head after a fresh supply of rain-water. The Khan's share of the revenue amounts to from two to two and a half lakhs of Rupees, but if the country was kept in proper order, and better looked after, he might realise a great deal more. The plain is watered by five rivers, the Taywagh, Lehree, Nara, Bolan, and Moolla; of these only the Nara, and Bolan have water all the year round outside the hills, the former as far as Bagh, the latter to a little below Myhesur. The others are mere mountain torrents, having water in their beds inside the hills, but only showing it outside when conveyed by artificial conduits, or during heavy rain, when they discharge a large volume of water, which is intercepted and disposed of for purposes of cultivation. One good soaking of the soil will give a tolerable crop. There are some other torrent beds, such as the Lunda, Sirani, and Zemani near Shahpoor, and others on the west side near Sunnee, Shorun and Jull, but they are of comparatively minor importance, though affording means for some cultivation.

* Formerly under the Kaloras the Sind rule extended to Dadur, but Nadir Shah on his return from Delhi gave it to the ruler of Khelat for services performed.

17. There is no record of the population of Cutchee, but it may be roughly estimated now at 50,000 souls, including all classes. The numbers have diminished of late owing to the disturbed state of the country having led many to emigrate to Sind.

18. Cutchee has been thus largely dwelt upon, as it is the most important piece of country facing the British border.

19. The Mugzees of Jull were the last tribe mentioned. Below their country the boundary is entirely within hilly country, and to the west of it down to the sea the inhabitants are all either Brahooees of Jalawan, under their respective Sirdars, principally the Zehrees, Sassoolees, Minguls, &c., with the Chootahs, a tribe of Sindee (that is of Rajpoot) origin. Opposite the last 80 or 90 miles of the Kurrachee border, lies the district of Lus Beyla, a tributary of Khelat, but the Jam, as the ruler is called, has for many years past attempted to make himself independent of the Khan, has paid but scant allegiance, and rebelled some eight times in 15 years, till at last he fled into Sind to escape the results of his continued misconduct. He has the credit of aspiring to the Khanate, but neither the Brahooee or Belooch would ever accept him, as, though connected by marriage with the Khans of Khelat, his tribe is of Sindee origin, and both Belooch and Brahooees look down on the Sindees. The inhabitants of Lus Beyla are mostly all of Sindee, Rajpoot, origin.

20. None of the tribes on the west of Cutchee, or those below down to the sea, have ever shown themselves aggressive against or harassing to the British Government beyond petty robberies of cattle, with the exception of one instance in February 1874, when 200 armed Sassoolees entered British territory near the Gaj, and carried off some slaves who had fled there for protection. This they would never have dreamed of doing, had not the Khan of Khelat changed from his former friendly feelings towards the British Government. About the same time, and from the same cause, petty robberies increased on the border below, and as before stated 100 extra police were entertained, principally from the local tribes, to check these, which it has done. But if the Khan became permanently unfriendly, or the tribes got beyond his control, incessant plundering would inevitably follow.

21. Facing the Sind border there is but one country, presided over by one ruler, the Khan, to whom all the chiefs of the various tribes within it own allegiance, though they have not always scrupulously paid it. The Murrees and Boogtees, though of late years, with the former at least, most deliberately defiant, and disorderly, never attempt to deny their fealty to the Khan, and however disobedient they may be, they periodically wish to be restored to favour. In the time of the Great Nusseer Khan, the Murrees and Boogtees, Dhoomkees and Jukranees, were all kept under perfect control.

22. The Khan is easily accessible from the British side, and in this way having the opportunity of dealing with only one person, and with a fixed government, instead of with a number of factious chiefs, is greatly to the advantage of the Sind border, and cannot be too carefully regarded. With a resolute Khan on the throne, steadily, and consistently supported by the British Government, the Sind border might be as tranquil as any other part of India, and the road from Sind into Affghanistan as safe as that from Bombay to Poona.

23. The country is divided into two parts, Sarawan, all the northern portion above Khelat; Jalawan, the southern, below. The tribes are designated in the same way, and are as shown in the appended list. The Khan is elected, and he must be of the family of the Ahmedzye, from which they have been taken since the Khanate was established in supersession of the old Hindoo Raj When formed for battle, the Sarawans are the right wing, the Jalawans the left; and in Durbar the chief Sarawan Sirdar sits on the right of the Khan, and the others with him; the chief Jalawan on the left; and most jealous are they of precedence being correctly observed. On all great State questions, such as war, making treaties, and so forth, the Khan is supposed to hold counsel with his barons, taking the opinion of the chief of the Sarawans first, then of the Jalawan. The Wuzzeer is selected and appointed by the Khan, but the Sirdars claim the right of approving the selection. In all other points the Khan's power is absolute, and if wisely wielded, might be most beneficial to the country. The same, however, as has been the case in all feudal countries, the Khans of Khelat, with the exception of one, the Great Nusseer Khan, who was a very superior man, have had incessant trouble with unruly barons, and the present Khan more so than any other.

24. The tribes outside having been described, those within the border have to be noticed. Commencing again from the right, there is first a portion of the Muzzaree tribe about Kusmore. The largest part of this tribe is within the Punjab, about Rojan, and the chief of all, Shere Mahomed, resides there. Those within Sind, when we became first acquainted with them, were systematic cattle-lifters, plundering from their brethren in the Punjab, from the districts on the east of the Indus, and from their next neighbours, the Boordees. The Boordees, who inhabit the large tract between Kusmore and Garhi Hassan, had an equally bad reputation with the Muzzurees, but both have improved of late years, as better means for cultivation have been afforded them. The other Belooch in the Frontier Districts consist of the Dhoomkees and Jukranees, with some Rumdanees, who were brought from Cutchee by Sir Charles Napier in 1845, and located near Khangur (now Jacobabad). Of these some have lately had lands given them, also on the Desert canal near Kusmore. The Cosahs, a portion of the Cutchee Oomeranees, and the Jumallees at Rojan, and Khyree Ghurree. These were all originally "Lootoos," or professional plunderers, but have been gradually reclaimed, and are now good, peaceful cultivators, while some are employed as guides or police, and do excellent service for Government. The other inhabitants of the Frontier Districts are Sindees, or Hindoos of the Bunniah, or trading class. In the Shikarpur collectorate, from Khyree Ghurree down to the Gaj, and again from the Gaj to Sehwan in the Kurrachee collectorate, the population on the border is very sparse, the line being within the hills, while between the hills and the alluvial plain of the Indus there is a belt of bare land the whole way down to a little above Sehwan, in which there are a few villages, and only cultivation after rain. The Belooch tribes in this part are portions of the Jumallees, Lugharees, and Rinds. There are also Chootahs and other Sindee tribes, but all are at present fairly quiet, inoffensive people. Below Sehwan the country is all hilly, mostly barren, but with some slight cultivation in the valleys where any water is found. The inhabitants are chiefly Sindee, nomades almost entirely, and beyond occasionally stealing a few bullocks or cattle from the Khelat side of the border, are a very harmless set. When heavy rain falls in this hilly district, grass grows luxuriantly, and cattle come there in large numbers from Sind. The people in the hills have any cultivation they may manage to raise free of all charge, on condition that they do not interfere with any who may come into the hills to graze their cattle or cut grass, when it is plentiful, or more so than in other parts of British territory.

25. From what has been above written it will be seen that the most important part of the Sind border is the northern part of it, or that called the Frontier District of Upper Sind. This has immediately in its front the only tribes who have ever given trouble, and the measures connected with the management of this portion have necessarily caused the British officials employed there to be brought into immediate contact and close communication with the Khan of Khelat, and this led to all arrangements with that State being entrusted to the Political Superintendent on the frontier only. To show correctly the exact nature and merits of the administration of this district, as originated by the late General Jacob, so successfully carried out by him, and desired to be followed ever since, it will be necessary to notice briefly the circumstances that occurred previous to his taking charge in 1847.

26. Our first acquaintance with this country was formed when the army marched into Affghanistan in 1839. The troops were much harassed when passing through Cutchee and up the Bolan by the plundering of robbers and difficulty in procuring supplies. All this was laid to the door of the then Khan of Khelat, Mehrab Khan, but not justly so. It was due to the intrigues of his treacherous Wuzzeer, Moolla Mahomed Hoossein, and certain Native officials in our camp, combined with our ignorance of the people and country.

27. Mehrab Khan was made to pay penalty with his life and the capture of his capital, Khelat, by Major-General Wiltshire in November 1839. A member of an elder branch of the Ahmedzye family, Meer Shah Nawaz Khan, was put on the throne of Khelat in the place of Mehrab Khan, and the son of the latter became a fugitive in Kharan. Meer Shah Nawaz's reign did not last long. He was personally disliked by the majority of the chiefs, who also disapproved of the return to the older line, and looked only to the son of their late ruler. This son, Meer Nusseer Khan, was set up by them, Meer Shah Nawaz was ousted, retiring into Sind, and ultimately Nusseer Khan was recognised by Major Outram on the part of the British Government, a treaty being concluded with him under the orders of Lord Auckland, then Governor General of India. Friendly relations were thus established between the two powers. Meer Nusseer Khan reigned ably and well for some 16 years, and was much esteemed; but his unscrupulous minister, Darogah Gool Mahomed, who had always hated the British, thought the young Khan was joining too heartily with them. To check this he caused poison to be administered to Nusseer Khan in May 1857, and placed the present Khan, Khodadad Khan, then some 18 years old, on the throne. Gool Mahomed believed Khodadad to be a youth of weak intellect, and that he could easily manage him, keeping the chief power in his own hands. In this he was greatly mistaken, for a few years afterwards he was removed from his position and kept a prisoner at large. This was done at the advice of the British officers on the frontier, but it was promptly carried out by the Khan. During the years 1841 and 1842 reinforcements and large convoys were sent into Affghanistan in consequence of disasters to our troops there. These were well protected by the Sind Horse under Captain Jacob,* who had his head-quarters at Chuttur, with detachments at Khanghur, Phoolajee, Lehree, and Mull, between the line of route of the troops and stores and the hills. The principal plunderers in those days were the Dhoomkees and Jukranees, under the famous leaders Beejar Khan Dhoomkee and Toork Jukranee, both most active and daring. The Dhoomkees lived at Lehree and Phoolajee, the Jukranees at Tahar-ka-Gote, Chuttur, and near Shapoor, so the Sind Horse were immediately over them, and could watch their every movement. The Boogtees and Murrees did not then plunder much in Cutchee. They had had a lesson taught them by the force under Major Billamore, which passed successfully through their hills in 1839, defeating the Boogtees in two stout engagements, and making their chief Beebruck a prisoner; also overawing the Murrees by paying their capital Kahun a visit. Moreover, the Dhoomkees and Jukranees wished to keep the plunder of Cutchee to themselves, and only allowed the Murrees and Boogtees to join them occasionally in small numbers. The Murrees sometimes plundered in the Bolan Pass, but only in a petty way. The Boogtees and Murrees had the Mittunkote district, in the Punjab, and Boordikha, in the north-eastern corner of Sind, to make raids upon, and used their opportunity freely.

* There were detachments of infantry also at Bagh, Seebee, and Dadur, with two guns at the latter place, and reserves of all arms at Shikarpur and Sukkur.

28. When the troops came back from Affghanistan in 1842 they were all withdrawn to Sukkur, on the Indus, leaving the frontier to the predatory tribes to deal with as they like. On Sind becoming a British possession after the war in 1843, Sir Charles Napier caused the frontier to be again occupied. A large force was established at Sukkur and Shikarpur, in support, and the district was placed under a general officer, Major-General Hunter, of the Bengal army.

29. The Dhoomkees and Jukranees had become much emboldened by the freedom and success they enjoyed after the withdrawal of the troops in 1842. Their excesses became so insolent, and frequent, that Sir Charles determined on conducting an expedition against them, and in 1844 moved a force of 7,000 men under himself, with two other major-generals, across into Cutchee. The Dhoomkees and Jukranees retired into the Boogtee hills, whither Sir Charles Napier followed them, and after four months' hard labour, and aided by Meer Ali Moorad, and the Murrees, he made them surrender, and transported them into Sind. The Boogtees fled for the time to the Khetran country, but returned to their own hills on the retirement of the troops.

30. By the Dhoomkees and Jukranees being removed Cutchee and Sind were laid open to the Boogtees, and they soon began to avail themselves of the chance thus offered of extending their predatory excursions. During 1846 they made several forays but the grandest of all, and boldest ever attempted, was in December of that year, when a large body of them, horse and foot, accompanied by nearly every chief of note in the clan, descended on Chandran, a village only 16 miles from Shikarpur, and within a mile of Mirpur, one of our cavalry outposts; remained there the whole day, and carried off every head of cattle they could lay their hands on, to the extent of some 15,000.

31. The troops in Upper Sind then consisted of a regiment of Native infantry at Sukkur, with the general and his staff, two regiments of Native infantry, a field battery, and head-quarters of a regiment of Native cavalry at Shikarpur; the latter furnishing troops to the frontier at the outposts of Mirpur, Moobarikpur, Khanghur and Shapoor. At the last place there were also two companies of Native infantry from one of the regiments at Shikarpur. At Larkana was the Sind Camel Corps, 500 strong, with 500 armed camel drivers. Political management was in the hands of the general commanding, under the Governor of Sind, Sir Charles Napier.

32. The commanding officer at Mirpur sent intelligence of the raid to Shikarpur, and asked for reinforcements. The officer commanding the cavalry moved out at once with the remainder of his regiment, and 80 mounted policemen, while instructions were sent to all the outposts to converge on the line the mauraders would probably retire by. The pursuers caught up the robbers early in the morning in some broken ground near Hooddoo. By that time the cavalry commander had 250 sabres of his own regiment and the 80 policemen. Misled by the raised appearance of the ground caused by "miraj," he unfortunately imagined the enemy to be strongly posted, and deemed himself too weak to attack them. He turned back to Shikarpur, and the Boogtees re-entered their hills in safety and triumph, securing the whole of their immense booty.

33. On hearing of this disaster Sir Charles Napier immediately ordered Captain Jacob to the frontier, with one of the two regiments of Sind Horse, leaving the other at Hyderabad.

34. Captain Jacob was to use his own discretion as to frontier defence, under the general control of General Hunter at Sukkur, reporting through him. On reaching Khanghur on the 9th January 1847, he found the Boogtees had it pretty much their own way. The very night before the Sind Horse arrived Sunjur Rind with a party of Boogtee horsemen carried off a large number of Government camels from near Jagun, only 14 miles from Shikarpur, and that distance inside the outposts. This, however, was the last successful foray they made. The tables from this time were turned upon them. Captain Jacob at first left the outposts as he found them, relieving the Native regular cavalry by parties of Sind Horse, keeping the head-quarters at Khanghur, instead of at Shikarpur, as had been the case. The posts were Mirpur half a troop, Mubarickpur the same, with a troop at Shapoor. It was soon found the two first were too far inside the border, so they were moved up to Ghurree Hassan and Dil Moorad. Small parties of horse were also placed at Rojan, and Khyree Ghurree to the west, to prevent maurauders creeping round that side. Detachments from the Camel Corps at Larkana held Shadadpur, Dost Ali, and Kumbur. The last was given up soon after, and the two former were also abandoned in a few years as unnecessary. The country to the eastward of Ghurree Hussun or Boordikha as it was called, belonged to his Highness Meer Ali Moorad, and was not then taken into consideration in protective arrangements, the Meer making his own. There was however a detachment of mounted police at Kusmore.

35. Captain Jacob at once abandoned the defensive system, and instituted a course of active patrolling. Parties were kept perpetually on the move to the front from Khanghur and from all the outposts, meeting occasionally at advanced points, such as Hooddoo and Punnian, places where water was procurable in the dry mountain torrents, a few feet below the surface, and where the "Lootoos" often used to rest either before or after a foray. The country was a hard flat desert, and this was soon marked by the tracks of moving parties, a significant sign to the Lootoos of the danger there was now of being fallen in with. This first occurred on the 20th January, 11 days after arrival, a duffadar and 18 sowars of the Sind Horse fell in a little north of Ghurree Hussun with a party of about 200 mounted robbers, and at once attacked them. The enemy were surprised at a bivouac, and in spite of their number fled ignominiously, abandoning some of their mares, and throwing away their arms in the hurry to escape. It happened to be dusk, so only a few were killed; had there been daylight many more would have received the punishment ordered for them,—capture, or death if resistance was offered. This was an early lesson to them that times had changed, and the Boogtees were more careful in future. It was discovered that a great deal of the plundering was brought about by the Belooch settlers at Janidhera near Khanghur, Jukranees and Dhoomkees.

These were under a special commissioner, Lieutenant Hamilton, but they managed to elude his vigilance, and were in the habit of crossing the frontier by stealth, and either plundering from there, or what was more often the case, joining the Boogtees in their forays, and afterwards bringing their share of the plunder back with them. A party was actually caught so returning, and were made prisoners. This was immediately put a stop to, and it was ordered that no one on the border should be allowed to bear arms, save those actually in the service of Government as soldiers or police. And it was generally notified that the State would protect all peaceful subjects, so arms were unnecessary for any one also beside the servants of the State. This had the best possible effect, and combined with the activity shown by the troops, soon instilled confidence in the well-disposed, while evil-doers became disheartened.

36. The year 1847 was one of incessant work for the Sind Horse, but their labours were crowned with success. The Boogtees met at all points, and being prevented getting grain from Sind, became desperate from loss of their usual livelihood, and from threatening starvation. After various futile attempts they sallied forth from their hills in strength, some 700 armed men, and made a descent on a Kyheree village near Chuttur. The Shahpoor outpost, which had been strengthened to a squadron, intercepted them on the 1st October on the Zimanee river, near Koonree, as they were returning to the hills, and with 133 sabres utterly defeated them, killing (for they long refused quarter) or capturing nearly the whole; 120 prisoners were brought into Shahpoor. On this occasion the Murrees not being friendly with the Boogtees, gave valuable information, which helped in a great measure to the interception of the Boogtees. This severe blow broke the strength and spirit of the tribe, and during the following year they came in, surrendered unconditionally, and were located near Larkana. They were unfortunately ill-managed there, and the chiefs fled back to the hills in the same year. They made one desperate attempt on Kusmore in April 1849, when they were assisted by both Murrees and Khetrans, but it proving unsuccessful, they remained quiet till in October 1851 they were at the intercession of the Khan of Khelat finally forgiven, and have behaved well towards Sind ever since. Some of the tribe were taken into service as guides, and proved most faithful, being placed at the advanced post of Gandui to watch and to furnish information.

37. Sir Charles Napier left Sind on the 1st October 1847, and was succeeded by Mr. Pringle, of the Bombay Civil Service, who was appointed Commissioner. The troops were placed under Colonel Dundas, the senior officer in Sind. Mr. Pringle thought fit to put the frontier under the Collector of Shikarpur, but this was so manifestly unsuitable, and would have so utterly tied Captain Jacob's hands, that the change was shortly after reversed by Sir George Clerk, Governor of Bombay.

38. In February 1848, Major Jacob was invested with sole political powers on the frontier, and authorised to arrange with his Highness the Khan of Khelat all questions relating to matters between the two Governments, and to tribes beyond the frontier, subjects of the Khan.

39. The frontier line was extended eastwards to Mittree on the Indus, 11 miles beyond Kusmore, and outposts of the Sind Horse were placed at Tungwanee, Kundkote, Koombree, and Kusmore.* The 2nd Regiment had been previously ordered up from Hyderabad to meet this extra duty. The outpost of Shahpoor was withdrawn as unnecessary, and no troops were located beyond the desert which separates Sind from Cutchee. The same system of patrolling to the front was however maintained, and is so to the present day, to prevent the hill tribes thinking any slackness would or could occur. Roads were made and bridged connecting all the outposts, and cut through the thick jungles of Boordikha, formerly a perfect nest of thieves.

* It was a great pity that the Sind Frontier was not in the following year, when the Punjab fell under British rule, extended up to Hurrund. This would have brought the whole Belooch tribes under one management, instead of two, and have prevented the unfortunate results that have occurred, of which the end has yet to be seen.

40. The system introduced and the principles followed by Major Jacob cannot be better stated than in his own words as given in a rough memorandum drawn up by him in August 1854. They were entirely offensive measures :—

"EXTRACT from a rough memorandum by Major J. Jacob on Sind Frontier proceedings since 1846, dated 9th August 1854.

"Entirely offensive measures on the part of the troops, the possibility of attack by the marauders never being contemplated. No defensive works whatever allowed anywhere, existing ones destroyed or abandoned, the troops always freely exposed, and obstacles to rapid movements removed as much as possible; the people protected.

"No distinction permitted between plundering and killing by private persons, whether friend or foe. Robbery and murder treated as equally criminal, whether the victim be a British subject or not.

"The plea of family blood-feud, or retaliation, in such cases, considered as an aggravating circumstance, as proving the most deliberate malice aforethought. No private person allowed to bear arms, or possess arms, without written permission.

"The highest moral ground always taken in all dealings with the predatory tribes, treating them always as of an inferior nature so long as they persist in their misdeeds: as mere vulgar, criminal, and disreputable persons with whom it is a disgrace for respectable persons to have any dealings, and whom all good men must, as a matter of course, look on as objects of pity, not of dread—with hatred, possibly, but never with fear.

"As perfect information as possible of all movements or intended movements of the plundering tribes residing beyond our border. Such information acted on with the greatest activity, our knowledge of the nature and habits of the Beloochee robbers being sufficient to enable us in almost every single instance to judge correctly of their probable proceedings, and effectually to check and counteract them at a distance from the British boundary.

"The feeling instilled into every soldier employed being, that he was altogether of a superior nature to the robber—a good man against a criminal; the plunderers being always considered not as enemies but as malefactors.

"The strictest justice always acted on, and no success, or want of success, or any other circumstance whatever, being allowed to influence the terms offered to, or the treatment of, offenders, whether whole tribes or individuals. Violence, robbery, bloodshed, held as equally criminal and disreputable in all men; the abandonment of such practices, and the adoption of peaceful and industrial habits, being considered as most honourable, and encouraged in every way. A few words will sum up the whole system. At first, put down all violence with the strong hand, then, your force being known, felt, and respected, endeavour to excite mens' better natures, till all men, seeing that your object is good, and of the greatest general benefit to the community, join heart and hand to aid in putting down or preventing violence.

"This is the essence of the whole business.

"The working of true principles is now apparent here in almost total absence of open physical force.

"When we came to the Sind Frontier in 1847 the people had no idea of any power but violence. The proceedings of the British authorities tended to confirm this state of feeling.

"When the men of Cutchee plundered in Sind, the only remedy applied was to encourage the Sindees to plunder in Cutchee. Both parties then were equally guiltless or equally criminal; no idea of moral superiority was thought of.

"Such being the case, it was absolutely necessary in the first instance to have recourse to violent measures, to show the predatory tribes that we possessed, in far greater degree than themselves, the only power which they respected—mere brute force.

"Our first year (1847) on the border was one of enormous bodily labour; we had literally to lie down to rest with our boots and swords on for many months together. We crushed the robbers by main force, and proved far superior to them, even in activity. And it may be well to observe that, at this time, but one regiment of the Sind Irregular Horse was on the frontier.

"When our frontier was in a disturbed state, I had my posts close to the hills, esteeming this arrangement to be an advantage. Since quiet has been established, I have withdrawn them, save as respects some Beloochee Guides. But though we had succeeded in forcibly subduing the robber tribes, I should have considered our proceedings as a failure, had it been necessary to continue to use violent measures.

"Having by the use of force made ourselves feared and respected, we were able to apply better means, and to appeal to higher motives than fear. This I had in view from the very first.

"The barbarians now feel (which they could hardly imagine before) that strength, courage, and activity may be possessed in the highest degree by those also influenced by gentle and benevolent motives.

"Under the influence of this growing feeling, the character of the border plunderers has been changed; whole tribes, within and without our border, amounting to more than twenty thousand souls, have totally abandoned their former predatory habits, and taken to peaceable pursuits.

"Our Jukranees and Dhoomkees, formerly the wildest of the border riders, are now the most honest industrious people in all Sind.

"Every man of the Sind Irregular Horse is looked on and treated as a friend by all the country folk.

"In truth, the moral power of their bold and kindly bearing and proceeding has spread far and wide through the country, and effected what no mere force would have done. Even the Murrees, who have not felt our physical force much, are fast coming under this influence, and are beginning to feel themselves disreputable.

"If the irritation and excitement to evil practices, caused by the incursions of our Muzzarees, and others, do not interfere with the full development of the causes now at work on our border, it seems to me certain that perfect peace and quiet will be established among all the tribes, in hill and plain, whose sole or chief pursuits have hitherto been robbery and murder."

41. To maintain proper and wholesome influence over the wild spirits to be met on the border, firmness and consistency are absolutely necessary, combined with kindness and just treatment. They must be taught to know and feel that the administration is working for the public good, and for them, if they will only behave themselves properly, and that implicit obedience must be unhesitatingly yielded by them. That the British officers were their best friends, but friends to be respected, and not thought lightly of. Palliative measures are not only ephemeral, but they only lead to greater complications afterwards, and are regarded as exhibitions of weakness. Win the confidence of these people by proofs of superiority in all respects, by showing a keen and thorough interest in their concerns, and a determination to be obeyed, and all decisions passed will be readily accepted. Major Jacob saw that previous want of success was in a great measure due to the non-existence of such a feeling of trust. The officers who had to serve on the frontier disliked the locality and work excessively. The climate was bad, and accommodation of a most wretched description; they were merely there to perform certain military duties at the command of some one, who was not even on the spot; they had little or no interest in what was passing around them, and they longed for the day of their release to a more congenial abode. It was not suprising that the people of the country, seeing and knowing this, felt repelled from, instead of drawn towards, their protectors, and there was no looking up to or confidence. Major Jacob determined it should be understood that he intended to remain and make the frontier his home. He built a large house and laid out an estate, and to ensure as far as possible the system he introduced being perpetuated, he endeavoured to establish a school of officers who would be trained to fill the different positions in regular gradation. Officers who would become well acquainted with the people and their circumstances, have a thorough interest in the work, and being assured of speedy rise if they showed themselves efficient, would willingly set at defiance all insalubrity of climate, or other disadvantages, and cheerfully adhere to their leader. This system was continued for some time, the commandant on the frontier was permitted to select his own officers, and his recommendations were approved and confirmed. But unfortunately of late years this has been changed, and what has gravely injured the esprit that formerly existed to such a wholesome extent, breaking up in fact the above school, is, that senior officers have been sent up to command the regiments of Sind Horse, who had no previous experience of the place, some not even any of cavalry training, and who superseded those who had been steadily and honestly working on for years in the confident hope of enjoying vacancies when they occurred. This has acted as a terrible damper, and if continued, will soon bring back the listless feeling which proved before so detrimental to the public interests.

42. The Commissioner Mr., now Sir, Bartle Frere, who came to Sind in 1850, thoroughly appreciating Major Jacob's worth, supported him in every possible way. He aided him in having pushed on large irrigational works to increase cultivation, and give peaceful employment to the old robber classes, and in 1852 placed the revenue charge of the district in Major Jacob's hands, so that the latter had complete control over everything on the border. He still reported on military matters through the Senior Officer commanding in Upper Sind, but was not interfered with. The advantages of all arrangements being concentrated in one person cannot be over-estimated. All officers, military as well as civil, with the people, look up to him as the sole arbiter of their fates. There are no clashings, the objects of all are identical, and the military take the fullest interest in all that is going on around them, hoping to rise in time to the higher places. All business was transacted in one range of buildings made for the purpose, so that all questions could be discussed and disposed of at once.

43. The military force has varied at times. When the 2nd Regiment Sind Horse came to the frontier, the infantry detachments were returned to Shikarpur. In 1857, during the mutinies, one regiment of Sind Horse,* aided by a regiment of Bengal Irregular Cavalry, held the frontier successfully, in spite of a most determined attempt at outbreak by the Belooch tribes, and a threatened rebellion at Khelat. The confidence that had been won was at this time most valuable, for the mass of the people were on our side, and kept the local authorities so well informed of all the plottings going on, that repression of the intended outbreak was effected without bloodshed, and merely by the arrest of the ringleaders. At the end of that year a third regiment of Sind Horse (all three, 800 strong) was raised, and in the following year two regiments of Rifles, 800 each, were formed on a plan proposed by General Jacob, similar to the Sillidar system of the Horse, viz, that, receiving a fixed amount of pay, they should be self-supporting and, keeping up their own carriage regularly, be ready to move anywhere at the shortest notice. General Jacob was made Commandant-in-Chief of the whole Frontier Field Force. In 1859 a mountain train was added. But in 1861, owing to the necessity of reduction, the three regiments of horse, 800 strong, were converted into four of 364 sabres each, one regiment of rifles was disbanded, and the other reduced to 712 of all ranks. Afterwards the four regiments of horse were again made three of 499 sabres each, and so they remain. Besides these, there are no troops now in Upper Sind; none north of Hyderabad. Those at Shikarpur were finally withdrawn in 1859, and Sukkur had been vacated some time before.

44. On the untimely and deeply-to-be-lamented death of General Jacob, he was succeeded by his subalterns; first by Major, now Colonel Sir, William Merewether, from 1859 to 1862, and then by Major, now Major General, Sir Henry Green, till 1868. Colonel Phayre followed from 1868 to 1872, then Lieutenant-Colonel Mainwaring, and finally Colonel Loch.

45. The cultivation in Boordikha had advanced so far to the north, that in 1865 it was found necessary to push forward the Gurhee Hussun, Tungwanee, Kundkote and Koombree outposts to Goranaree, Sunree, Toj, and Sooee. The two first and the last are in Khelat territory at the southern edge of the low hills bounding the Boogtee country. Sooee is the most advanced, 24 miles north-north-west of Kusmore, and is admirably situated to cut off any marauders that may attempt to enter Sind or the Punjab in that part. An outpost is also now sometimes placed at Diggree, north of Jacobabad. The desert tract formerly existing between Boordikha and the hills has almost ceased to exist as such, and is now covered with rich fields of corn by means of the Desert canal projected by General Jacob, which leaves the Indus near Kusmore. At present this canal is only carried westwards as far as the boundary line close to Sunree, but it is intended ultimately that it should enter Khelat territory, and passing round below Ooch, end not far from Manotee. The object of this canal is to give occupation and a means of peaceful livelihood to such of the hill and other Belooch who may be induced to abandon their predatory habits and take to agriculture.

46. The district has been unfortunate for the last five or six years in being overrun by heavy floods destroying villages and crops and injuring the soil. A bund, however, has been made from Kusmore, to the mouth of the Biggaree, intended to keep out these floods. This year the rise of the river has been excessive, and the bund (partly also from being a new work) has given way. But this can be made secure, and no expense should be spared to make it so, as the thorough pacification of the Belooch can never be made certain as long as a means of gaining an honest livelihood is not left open to them. This can never be the case while these floods render cultivation so precarious.

47. The political relations with Khelat have been so fully discussed of late, that it is unnecessary to enter upon them at any length in this report.

48. General Jacob was instructed to make a new treaty with his Highness Meer Nusseer Khan in 1854. This treaty was continued with his successor, his brother Khodadad Khan. A copy of the treaty,† as also of the excellent advice given at the time by General Jacob to Meer Nusseer Khan, is appended.

*The other regiment was employed in Persia.

†See Khelat No. 1.

49. From the time his Highness Khodadad Khan ascended the throne in 1857 up to the present time, there has been constant endeavour by the nobles to limit authority in his hands, if not to take it all away. He was wounded and deposed in 1863, his cousin Shere Dil being put up in his stead. The latter was murdered in the following year by the commandant of the regular troops, and Khodadad reinstated. There have been constant quarrels ever since between the Khan and his nobles, caused by faults on both sides. The feeling of enmity between the two has become intense, and most difficult to mend.

50. This unhappy state of affairs may in some measure be attributed to the absence of a consistent line of policy towards the Khan on our part, and our forgetting that to ensure peace, and quiet throughout such a long length of frontier, our object should be to confine our transactions to the head of the State, hold him responsible for everything done by his subjects, but at the same time to use our best endeavours to strengthen his government in every way, and to induce him to rule with firmness, tempered with justice and suitable moderation.

51. In general, as before stated, all transactions with any people, chiefs or others, belonging to the Khelat State, were conducted through the Political Superintendent on the Frontier of Upper Sind and the Khan. But in one instance this course was not followed, and it may be considered certain that the deviation from so manifestly sound a plan had a very baneful effect. The ignoring of the Khan and his position which took place, and the danger of lessening the Khan's power by so doing, was pointed out by the Political Superintendent at the time, but he was overruled by the Commissioner in Sind. The case was the establishment of the telegraph line along the Mekran coast to the Persian Gulf.* After the first 17 miles the line entered the territory of the Jam of Lus Beyla, and it was desirable to get his assistance in the protection of the line after completion. Although as a chief the Jam was subject to the Khan of Khelat, an engagement was entered into with him direct, under which he was to receive a large subsidy, for the protection of the line and telegraph offices within his district, of Rupees 15,000 per annum. This chief had always been a bad subject, repeatedly creating disturbances, and breaking out in rebellion against the Khan, and this direct recognition of apparent independence of the Khan, may well be understood to have given him encouragement in his refractory demeanour towards his sovereign; and from statements made by him since, when he even spoke of himself as an ally of the British Government, it would seem unquestionably to have been so. It may be here added that the Jam after his last unsuccessful rebellion fled into Sind, and was located in the Deccan. A portion of the subsidy, nearly Rupees 7,000, is applied to paying individually, through the telegraph department, the line riders, who actually watch and protect the line. The remainder is placed to the credit of the Khan of Khelat, who allows out of it Rupees 8,000 per annum to be paid to the Jam of Beyla while he remains quiet in British territory.

52. There have been several Political Agents at Khelat, all of whom have filled that delicate and dangerous post with the greatest advantage to the State and credit to themselves. The first was appointed in 1856, in the person of Captain Henry Green of the Sind Horse. He shortly afterwards joined the Persian Expedition, and during his absence, Lieutenants Macaulay and Dickinson, also of the Sind Horse, acted for him. On his return in the end of 1857 he rejoined the Khan's court, and when he became Political Superintendent in 1862, his brother, Captain Malcolm Green, succeeded him. The next and last was Captain Harrison, likewise a Sind horseman. He was appointed in 1868, and displayed great coolness and judgment at a most critical time, when rebellions constantly threatened, and actually broke out twice. In April 1873 he was withdrawn to Jacobabad in consequence of the Khan's neglect to act fully up to the terms of the treaty, and in April 1875, the appointment was placed in abeyance by order of the Government of India.

53. The Murree tribe, owing to the weakness of, and dissensions amongst the Boogtee tribes, have become of late years all powerful in the hills, and most insolent towards the Khan, as also to the British Government. Last year they plundered Cutchee as they pleased, and appeared to openly defy everybody. Cutchee and the trade route through it could be most easily protected by placing outposts again at Chuttur, Phoolajee, Lehree, and Mull, but this might drive the Murrees on to the Punjab. Even if it did, it would only require a year's good work, such as that of 1847, to bring them to their bearings, and read them such a lesson as they would not readily forget, and this without any very large addition of military force. But to do this effectually,

* Discussion commenced in 1861, finished in 1863.

Government should alone be the executive, all working of tribal animosities should be discarded and forbidden absolutely.'

54. The Murrees could muster now about 5,000 armed men. The Boogtees not 3,000. Both tribes are sub-divided into paras or sections, headed each by its own chief. The principal divisions of the Murrees are the Ghuzzani, to which the Chief Ghuzzen Khan belongs, residing mainly at Kahan; the Beejeranees at Mahmund and Kullu; the Loheranees on the Bamboor hill and on the north-west of the Shum Plain; and the Muzzeranees in the Bolan. These last had entirely separated themselves from the others, but lately they have left the Bolan, rejoined the clan, and set up with the Beejeranees. Ghuzzen Khan's power over the tribe is not very strong or certain, but they all render to him the chief's share (a fifth) of all plunder taken, and he regularly accepts it. The sections are again broken up into numerous sub-divisions.

55. The Boogtees have as large divisions—the Raeja, to which Goolam Moorteza the chief belongs; the Nothanees, Kulpurs, Mussorees, Phoongs, and Keeazyes. There are many subdivisions of these too numerous to mention. Islam Khan, the father of Goolam Moorteza, is still alive, but though quite in his prime then, he abdicated in about 1850, in favour of his son, and has been an element of evil in the tribe ever since by perpetually intriguing against him.

56. As these are the only two tribes that there is much, if anything, to do with from the Sind border, they are the only ones regarding whom any detail is offered.

57. There is but one special law in force on the Frontier of Sind introduced in 1872, to simplify the settlement of frontier cases. Under Act 33 Vict. Cap. 3, certain regulations were sanctioned by the Governor General of India, and brought into force for improved preservation of peace and better Government in the several Talukas bordering on the Frontier of Sind. Copy of the Government of India Notification on the subject with the regulations is appended.

58. A sketch-map is annexed, showing the position of the above two and other tribes, the divisions of Khelat, the Frontier Outposts, the Military Civil Stations, and connecting roads.

APPENDIX B.

MEMORANDA of Personal Communication by Major John Jacob, C.B., to his Highness the Khan of Khelat, at Mustoong, on the 13th May 1854, referred to in letter No. 88, of the 14th May 1854, to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Heads of Conference with the Khan.

In the year 1841 the British Government, through Colonel Outram, made with your Highness a treaty, by which your Highness bound yourself to be true to the British Government and to Shah Soojah, to protect trade, &c., through your territory, and to conform to some other arrangements, while the British Government agreed to protect your Highness against all foreign enemies.

The death of Shah Soojah, the overthrow of his dynasty, and the complete change of circumstances which have since taken place, necessarily rendered this treaty void, as Government formerly decided, at the recommendation of Sir Charles Napier, when the question was raised in 1842–43.

But your Highness has done nothing in breach of the treaty, and has deserved well of the British Government. While, with reference to the state of the Frontier of Sind, it has always been my opinion that the establishing of a firm, active, and friendly power at Khelat would be greatly for the advantage of the British interests; and accordingly, since I was placed in political charge of the Sind Frontier in 1847, I have never ceased to urge this on Government.

22nd September, 1854.

Conference with his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

There were, however, serious objections to the course recommended by me, which I will presently explain to your Highness. But, on the whole view of the case, the British Government has now authorised me to conclude with your Highness a new treaty, on such terms as will, I trust, afford satisfaction to your Highness, and I hope prove of beneficial effect on all concerned. The difficulties hitherto experienced in effecting a satisfactory arrangement between the two Governments have been caused by the peculiar state of affairs in your Highness' territories, and by the conduct of some of your Highness' officers, especially of the Wuzzeer Mahomed Hussan. Without order and unity of purpose there can be no good government. The British Government for long thought it hopeless to attempt to assist your Highness, because until some intention of establishing order and some unity of purpose appeared, such assistance would have been abused, or, at all events, have been of no permanent benefit.

When the subjects of your Highness plundered and laid waste all the British border in 1843–44, and the Governor of Sind called on your Highness to put a stop to these outrages, your Highness asserted your inability to control your turbulent subjects. A British army was then led by Sir Charles Napier against the predatory tribes in rebellion against your Highness; punishment was inflicted on them, but still the authority of your Highness did not appear to have been strengthened; your subjects were no better controlled than before, and the British territory was still insulted and wasted by their lawless inroads.

Under these circumstances, to assist your Highness with troops appeared of little use, while pecuniary assistance seemed to be equally objectionable, because whatever aid might be granted would probably be misapplied and wasted on the private intrigues and quarrels of your Highness' feudal chiefs, instead of being employed, as intended, in effecting general arrangements for the good government of your country.

From the first day of my receiving charge of the Frontier of Sind, I have exerted every effort in my power to bring about the establishment of order and good government in your Highness' neighbouring dominions. But I laboured to little or no purpose, for I was always secretly thwarted by your Highness' officers.

As your Highness is aware, the Wuzzeer Mahomed Hussan twice visited me at Jacobabad, and I, thinking that he had the welfare of your Highness in view, fully explained to him my opinions regarding the existing state of affairs, &c.

At our first interview I did not understand his intrigues, but on his second visit he exposed his real object to me, which was nothing less than to induce the British Government to recognise and treat with him on his own account, independently of the Khan of Khelat; in fact, it was treason towards your Highness, his lawful sovereign.

All this I have already explained to your Highness personally, and by letter, and your Highness is acquainted with all that has occurred since.

It was now evident to me wherein had existed the cause of all the disorder and bad management in your Highness' dominions, and the matter soon became publicly apparent; for the Wuzzeer no longer even pretended to restrain evil doers, but encouraged the rebellious subjects of your Highness, the Murrees, in their outrages, released their hostages, and by the presence of his relations and followers, assisted these robbers in plundering Phoolajee, &c.

Mahomed Hussan is, I understand, now finally dismissed from your Highness' councils, and I trust that under the arrangements about to be entered on, a new era of prosperity will commence in your Highness' dominions, which neither the ex-Wuzzeer nor any other traitor will be able to disturb.

It must be evident from my actions as well as words, that from the first I had but one plain object in view. I have not the slightest private enmity towards or regard for Mahomed Hussan or any other of your Highness' officers; but my sole object and that of my Government in this business is to arrange matters so that there may be a strong and friendly Government established throughout the dominions of your Highness. To bring this about it is necessary that the officers of your Highness should be faithful, active, and united.

22nd September 1854. Conference with his Highness the Khan of Khelat.

By the terms of the new treaty your Highness engages to prevent all outrage by your subjects on British territory; but to cause the country to be prosperous and wealthy, and the Government of your Highness to be respected, it is necessary to do more than this.

Measures should be taken to protect life and property within your Highness' own dominions also, and I strongly advise your Highness, as your very true friend, to adopt means to ensure this result.

No oppression or violence should be allowed, whether by great or small.

Justice should be strictly administered to all men. Cultivators and traders should be encouraged and protected, roads made safe and easy, and no private transit, or such like exactions, should be allowed. All this cannot be accomplished without exertion, but if your Highness attend to this advice, and act on it, the State of Khelat will, under your Highness' rule, by God's blessing, become rich, powerful, and respected. But without some such arrangements and efforts from within, no amount of external assistance alone will make it really strong and flourishing. Your Highness should understand that the pecuniary aid now to be given to you by the British Government is really of far more value to your Highness than would be assistance by force of arms, inasmuch as in the latter case it must be apparent to all that your Highness, wanting strength yourself, is only upheld by British troops. On the other hand, the aid now to be afforded to your Highness will, with proper arrangement, materially assist your Highness in establishing a strong Government of your own, in improving your own resources in various ways, and in making such arrangements as will cause your country to become rich, flourishing, and powerful, as it is the wish of the British Government that it should be.

The matter stands as if a man being sick and weakly were assaulted by an enemy, and a friend at hand strike that enemy down; in this case one enemy may be overthrown, but the weak man is no stronger than before, nor in any way permanently benefited. But if, instead of acting thus, the friend, when the other is threatened, administer food, medicine, &c., and thus cause the weak man to become healthy and vigorous, and able to support and defend himself by his own strength, the assistance thus afforded is far more important than the other, and the benefit is evidently infinitely greater.

Your Highness may rest assured that no effort will be wanting on my part to enable your Highness to carry out measures such as I have alluded to, and that they, and they only, can lead to the happiness and prosperity of your Highness, your nobles, and your people.

I beg also to recommend to favourable notice your Highness' servant, Moollah Ahmed, who has so long resided with me as your Highness' representative. He has, in all things, and on all occasions, conducted himself as your Highness' true and faithful subject; he has laboured hard for your Highness' advantage, and it gives me pleasure to be able to say that he has never, on any occasion, while performing his public duty, sought to secure his own private advantage. He is, I know, well acquainted with the views of the British Government towards the State of Khelat, and is well deserving of your Highness' favour.

(Signed) JOHN JACOB.

Dated Viceroy's Camp, Bombay, the 18th November 1872.

With reference to the preceding notification, the following Regulation is published for general information :—

Whereas the Secretary of State for India in Council has, by Resolution in Council, declared the provisions of the thirty-third of Victoria, chapter three, section one, to be applicable from the first day of January 1873 to the districts of Kohistan, Johi, Nasirabad, Sujawal, Sehwan, Kakkar, Kambar, Jacobadad, Thul, and Kashmor, bordering on the Frontier of Sind, from Mithi on the Indus to the sea west of Kurrachee:

And whereas the Governor of Bombay in Council has proposed to the Governor General in Council a draft of the following Regulation, together with the reasons for proposing the same, for the peace and government of the said districts:

And whereas the Governor General in Council has taken such draft and reasons into consideration, and has approved of such draft, and the same has received the Governor General's assent:

In pursuance of the direction contained in the said section, the following Regulation is now published in the "Gazette of India," and will be published in the local "Gazette," and will thereupon have the force of law:

1. In the event of any frontier tribe acting in a hostile or unfriendly manner to the British Government, it shall be lawful for the collector or magistrate of the district, with the previous sanction of the Commissioner in Sind, to sentence to simple imprisonment, for such term as he thinks fit, all or any members of the said tribe, and to detain or confiscate their property (provided that the person so sentenced and the property so detained or confiscated be within British territory), and also to debar members of the tribe from access into British territory, and to prohibit British subjects from all intercourse with such tribe.

2. No new hamlet, village, tower, or walled inclosure shall be erected in British territory, within 20 miles of the frontier line, without the consent of t e collector and magistrate of the district, who shall have power to prohibit the erection thereof if deemed necessary. In the event of the collector and magistrate prohibiting such erection, he must record the grounds of his decision. The collector and magistrate shall also have power to pull down any such walled inclosure erected without his knowledge.

3. The deputy collector and magistrate of the division of the district, with the concurrence of the collector and magistrate of the district, may impose fines on village communities, the members of which, after due inquiry, are found to be guilty of colluding or harbouring criminals, or combining to suppress evidence in criminal cases:

Provided that when the fine imposed shall exceed Rupees (10) ten per head of offenders of the village, the case shall be referred for sanction to the Commissioner in Sind.

All fines imposed under this section shall be recoverable in default of payment in the same manner as arrears of land revenue.

4. When any person is known or believed to have a blood feud, or other cause of quarrel likely to lead to bloodshed, with parties beyond the border, the collector and magistrate may require such person to reside beyond the limits of the territory to which these rules apply, or in such place within the territory as he may deem desirable:

Provided that if such person be a resident of the village, hamlet, or place from which he is required to remove, the sanction of the Commissioner in Sind be obtained.

5. Whenever it may be expedient on military grounds, it shall be lawful for the Commissioner in Sind to direct the removal of any village on the immediate border to any other site within 50 miles of the original site, and to award such sums to the inhabitants as shall, in the opinion of the Commissioner in Sind, be proper in compensation for any loss which may have been occasioned to them by such removal. The Commissioner shall grant an order on the proper officer for the amount of the compensation awarded.

6. When a person is accused of murder or other offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code with death or transportation for life, and the case appears to the collector and magistrate to be one which, from the inadequacy of evidence or other causes, it is not expedient to try according to the ordinary procedure, the collector and magistrate may cause the case to he referred to the decision of elders, convened according to Pathan or Beluch, or other caste usage, and cause such decision to be carried into effect as if it were a sentence of court, provided such sentence shall extend only to the infliction of a fine on the convicted party.

7. Any man who has sexual intercourse with a person who is, and whom he knows or has reason to believe to be, the wife of another man, without the consent or connivance of that man, such sexual intercourse not amounting to the offence of rape; and any married woman who knowingly and by her own consent has sexual intercourse with any man who is not her husband, without the consent or connivance of her husband, is guilty of the offence of adultery, and shall be punished with rigorous or simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both.

8. The collector and magistrate of the district, any magistrate of the 1st class inquiring into the case, or, with the sanction of the collector and magistrate of the district, any magistrate duly empowered to commit to the Court of Sessions, may, after recording his reason for doing, tender a pardon to any one or more of the persons supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to any offence, on condition of his or their making a full, true, and fair disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his or their knowledge relative to the crime committed, and every other person concerned in the perpetration thereof.

Any person accepting a tender of pardon under this section shall be examined as a witness in the case under the rules applicable to the examination of witnesses.

Such persons, if not on bail, shall be detained in custody pending the termination of the trial.

A magistrate having tendered a pardon under this section, and examined the accused person, is precluded from trying the case himself.

9. Persons offending against any of the rules here laid down, or against any prohibition on requisition made under the 1st, 2nd, 4th, or 5th sections of this Regulation, shall be liable, on conviction, to imprisonment, rigorous or simple, which may extend to six months, or fine which may extend to Rupees 1,000.

10. In every district a Register shall be kept up of all cases dealt with under this regulation, and a statement of all such cases shall be submitted half-yearly to the Commissioner in Sind.

11. In so far as this Regulation is inconsistent with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Indian Penal Code, this Regulation supersedes the provisions of those enactments.

Secretary to the Government of India.

No. 14.

Punjab Frontier. Memorandum by Mr. Lepel Griffin, Officiating Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, dated October 1876.

The instructions in accordance with which the report is prepared.

Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India has called for a special report clearly explaining the present system of administration of the frontier districts of the Punjab, the respective duties of the civil, political, and military authorities with one another, and the manner in which all are supervised and controlled. It is further directed that the report, besides embodying such statistical information as may be availiable with reference to the territories with which it deals, should note any laws or rules in exclusive operation in the frontier districts, as distinct from the other parts of the province, and be accompanied by a sketch map showing the civil and military stations, the roads by which they are connected, and the location, names and strength of the independent tribes bordering on each district.

The method of treating these subjects in the report.

2. In order to carry out the instructions of the Secretary of State with clearness and conciseness, it is necessary in the first place to briefly describe the characteristics of the frontier districts and of their population, and then to note the civil, political and military arrangements for their administration. The names locality, and strength of the various independent tribes on the border will then be given, followed by a description of the policy adopted towards them by the Punjab Government and detailing those measures which, within the last few years, have been carried out with the object of maintaining the peace and good order of the frontier. It will then be necessary briefly to notice what may reasonably be presumed to be the effect of the policy pursued and the measures adopted, in the attitude assumed at the present time by each individual tribe towards the British Government, and, in conclusion, to show how closely the interests of the tribes are bound up with those of the districts to which they are contiguous; the degree in which the interior tracts have advanced in prosperity and security, and the identity of interests of both border and plain country Trans-Indus with the tracts to the eastward of the river.

General description of the frontier.

3. The North-west Frontier of the Punjab comprises the six districts of Hazara, Peshawar, Kohat, Bannu, Dera Ismail Khan, and Dera Ghazi Khan; the line of frontier being conveniently held to extend from a point on the river Jhelum, halfway between the hill sanitaria of Abbot-abad and Murree, running due north with the Kaghan ranges into the high Himalayas, nearly to Chilas, and then descending to the south till it touches the Indus where that river emerges from the hills at Torbeyla. Turning to the north to enclose the fertile plain of Yusafzai, it again takes a southerly direction, where it crosses the Swat river, and, from that point, descends almost due south till it touches Kasmor on the Indus, on the border of Sind. The frontier line has never been strictly defined, and the boundaries shown on maps is merely that of the topographical survey, the limits of which were influenced by considerations of departmental convenience and not of general policy.

Two of these districts, Hazara and Kohat, are hilly, and in parts mountainous. The other four are almost level plains, only broken by deep ravines and torrent beds which make even the Peshawar valley difficult for the movements of cavalry and guns.

The characteristics of the people inhabiting them differ almost as much as the character of the districts themselves, and it is necessary, in as few words as possible, to describe each district before giving an account of the independent tribes beyond the border, and of the system by which they are controlled.

4. The area of the Hazara district is 2,835 square miles, and it is 95 miles in length. The land revenue amounts to Rs. 221,366, and the gross revenue to Rs. 252,922 per annum. The upper portion, especially that known as Kaghan, is entirely composed of mountain ranges, covered with magnificent forests; the lower portion of the district is, although elevated, more level, and possessing an abundant supply of water, produces excellent corps. The population, numbering 367,218 persons is generally peaceable and unwarlike. Its largest element consists of immigrants expelled, some centuries ago, from the neighbouring Swat valley, a physically weak and contemptible race. These form nearly a third of the inhabitants of the Hazara district; nearly half of the remainder is composed of descendants from Rajput and other Hindu tribes, Gujars, Ghakkars, Dunds and Karals, who have for the most part adopted the Muhammadan creed. They are industrious and good cultivators, and form the best part of the Hazara population. Descendants of Afghan immigrants, related to the Yusafzai and other tribes in the neighbourhood, constitute a fifth of the whole. It has, of recent years, been asserted that the inhabitants of the Hazara district are of a fierce and warlike disposition, and exceedingly difficult to control; but this false idea is really due to the fact of their rebelling against the oppression of the Sikh occupation. The country no doubt is mountainous and strong, but the people, though litigious, are singularly unwarlike in their habits. Their treatment has been so liberal, and the assessment of land revenue so light under British rule, that they are generally content; that they are prosperous is shown by the large annual export of silver from the district; and the only Hazara difficulties of late years have been in connexion with certain unruly independent tribes who will be hereafter referred to.

The Hazara district.

5. The Peshawar district contrasts remarkably with that just described. Consisting of a wide and level plain, it is abundantly watered by the large rivers of Swat and Kabul, and is broken only by deep ravines which intersect it in every direction. The area, 2,497 square miles, is somewhat less than that of Hazara, but the land revenue, which exceeds Rs. 651,000 per annum, is larger than in any other frontier district. The length from north to south is 50 miles, but the border adjoining independent territory is 170 miles long, adjoining the lands of the Jadans, Bonerwals, Swatis, Ranizais, Utman Khel, Mohmands and Afridis, independent and fanatical tribes. From Sikh and Afghan days Peshawar has had an infamous reputation for the character of its inhabitants, who required for their control the sternest administrators the Sikh Government had at his command, and for its climate, which, owing to the excessive irrigation from the streams and rivers, and also from the valley being inclosed by lofty hills, is, at certain seasons of the year, pestilential in the extreme. The inhabitants are strangely mixed. Ninety-five per cent. are Muhammadans, the few Hindus being found as bankers, merchants, and shopkeepers in the city of Peshawar and the larger villages. This observation, indeed, applies to all the districts south of Peshawar. The population is Muhammadan, the Hindus being but a small minority carrying on money-lending and trading in the towns. The majority is of Pathan blood, for the census estimate of 46 per cent. is believed to be considerably below the mark, and 60 per cent. to represent it more nearly. The total population of the district is rather more than half a million, of which about one-sixth are Yusafzais, an Afghan clan inhabiting the high plain to the north. After the Yusafzais the most important tribe is the Mohmand, about 30,000 in number, and related to the independent tribe of the same name beyond the border. The remainder of the population is made up of numerous Afghan tribes, representing all the tribes and clans on the Peshawar border, and Punjabi Muhammadans from Cis-Indus districts.

The Peshawar district.

The Kohat district.

6. The district of Kohat is almost entirely composed of a system of low barren hills, from which it derives its name, intermingled with small but fertile valleys. Its area is 2,839 square miles, and it yields a gross revenue of Rs. 1,98,167 per annum, of which Rs. 94,213 is from the land. The importance of the district is due to the existence of extensive salt mines, the produce of which is used throughout the Trans-Indus territory and Afghanistan, and which, chiefly from political considerations, is taxed much more lightly than the produce of the Jhelum mines which supply the greater part of North India to the east of the Indus. The Afridis are the principal carriers, and the power of being able to raise the price or stopping the supply of this necessary article is an important means of controlling this and the neighbouring tribes. The city of Peshawar is the central depôt of the salt trade, from whence it is taken by traders to Jalalabad, Kashmir and Kashgar, and exchanged for the produce of those countries. The Sikh Government charged the same rates on the Kohat as on the red Jhelum salt, without any known injurious effect on the trade; but their income from this source never exceeded half a lakh of rupees, which is now doubled, notwithstanding the exceedingly low rate of duty levied. The inhabitants of this district, amounting to 145,419, of whom 102,431 are Afghans, are, in the north, Khattaks, one of the finest tribes on the whole of the frontier, who supply our regiments with many of their best soldiers. The Bangash tribe is almost as numerous, amounting to 31,212, and generally is quiet and well disposed. The Kohat valley, which runs up to Afghan territory as far as the Kurm river, is well watered and fertile; but the trade of Kohat, as its political importance, is centred in its mines of grey salt.

The Bannu district.

7. Bannu is a flat, open plain like Peshawar, and, like it, abundantly watered by the Kurm and Gumbela rivers. The rainfall being exceedingly scanty, cultivation is almost entirely dependent upon irrigation from these streams. The area of the Bannu district is 3,171 square miles, and a large subdivision named from its principal town, Mianwali, lies Cis-Indus. In this part of the district there is a larger proportion of Hindu cultivators than in the Trans-Indus portion, where Bannuchis, a mongrel Afghan tribe, are about the worst specimens of the race on the frontier,—avaricious, litigious, bigoted, and false. Their physique, owing to the malarious climate, is as degraded as their morals. They are cowardly and unwarlike, and on this account give less trouble than the next most important section of the population, the Waziris, who are in appearance and in character immeasurably their superiors. The south of Bannu district is inhabited by the Marwatis, a high caste Pathan race, brave, simple, and honest, who form as great a contrast as can be conceived to their northern neighbours, the Bannuchis. Their country, a high plain with water so far below the surface that few wells can be sunk, is almost entirely dependent on rainfall for its crops, receiving in a few tracts partial irrigation from the mountain streams. The people are, however, in spite of great natural difficulties, successful agriculturists. They are exceedingly well disposed towards the British Government, and crime against property is rare among them. The land revenue of the district is Rs. 4,23,858 per annum, and the total revenue Rs. 4,70,076, raised from a population of 287,547 persons.

The Dera Ismail Khan district.

8. The district of Dera Ismail Khan, separated from Marwat by a range of hills which here crosses the Indus and joins the Salt Range in Rawalpindi and Jhelum, is a long strip of country, measuring 102 miles from north to south, dropping with an almost imperceptible slope from the independent hills to the Indus. That portion of it which has a sufficiency of irrigation is fertile, and especially the Tank valley, which till recently has remained in semi-independent charge of its hereditary chief. In a great part of the district, however, the rainfall being very small and irrigation wanting, the country is little better than a desert, and can only be cultivated in those exceptional years when abundant rain may happen to fall. The population of the interior of the district is as peaceable and orderly as that of any Cis-Indus territory, in which, indeed, by far the larger portion of this district lies, but this, with the exception of the low lands near the river, or where water is sufficiently near to permit wells to be sunk, is but thinly peopled and little cultivated. The manner in which cultivation has been extended since the last settlement in this wild and difficult country will be adverted to later. The area of the district is 7,096 square miles, but although, with one exception, more than double the size of any other frontier district, it stands only second in point of revenue; both the gross collections of Rs. 4,72,992 and the land assessment of Rs. 3,85,806 per annum, being below those of Peshawar. The original population of the district appears to have been Jat. Then came an immigration of Biluchis from the south, forming the bulk of the present population of the Kolachi subdivision, below the Ushtrana country, few being found north of the town of Dera Ismail Khan.. In the south they are the dominant class; in the country Cis-Indus they are mixed with and practically on an equality with the Jats.

The only Biluch tribe found together in any numbers is the Kasranis, inhabiting the country about Daulatwala. The Pathans occupy the north of the district up to Isa Khel, together with Marwatis, all recent settlers and rapidly increasing in numbers. They are not, like Jats and Biluchis, scattered over the district, but form a continuous fringe along the Kolachi and Tank subdivisions, and in number amount to about 50,000.

The Dera Ghazi Khan district.

9. The characteristics of Dera Ghazi Khan resemble closely those of the Trans-Indus portion of the Dera Ismail Khan district. It consists of a strip of country, some 170 miles in length, lying between the Indus and the hills, here entirely occupied by Biluch tribes. The area of the district is 4,740 square miles, the land revenue amounting to Rs. 3,88,007 per annum, and the gross collections to Rs. 4,66,816 per annum. The character of its independent neighbours has exercised as great an influence upon the interior of Dera Ghazi Khan as it has in the districts to the north. Out of the 308,840 forming the population, a third are Biluch. Half the population of the district consists of Jats, originally of Hindu descent but Muhammadans for many generations past, and the remainder is composed of Pathan immigrants, and a larger proportion of pure Hindus than are found elsewhere on the border. The character of the population of Dera Ghazi Khan may generally be described as being as well-disposed and law abiding as that of any district in North India. As in Dera Ismail Khan the rainfall is very scanty, in some years no rain falling at all. The people are, however, skilful cultivators, and the elaborate system of inundation canals from the River Indus both attests their industry and raises the producing power of the district to a not unfavourable standard of comparison with others possessing much greater natural advatages.

Communications.

10. The length of frontier thus described* is about 704 miles. As regards communications, the Trans-Indus territory is, owing to the character of the country and the poverty of the local funds, far behind the rest of the Punjab. Communications are carried on for the greater portion of the length of the frontier by two roads, one in the interior of the districts connecting the principal towns, and the other, close to the border, connecting the outposts of the regular army and the militia, and maintained in order by the military commandants. All travelling has to be performed on horses or camels, and during the rainy season, owing to the alluvial character of the soil which becomes after rain almost as slippery as ice, travelling is exceedingly difficult and laborious. The only break in the frontier line is where a narrow strip of independent territory intervenes between the important stations of Peshawar and Kohat, regarding which a dispute is now unsettled with a portion of the Afridi tribe, which will be referred to hereafter.

The civil administration.

11. The system of civil administration of the frontier is similar to that which prevails throughout the Punjab. The three northern districts form the commissionership of Peshawar, the three southern ones that of Derajat. The Commissioner of Peshawar is the officer who, under the Lieutenant-Governor, conducts all necessary negotiations with the Kabul court. So far, indeed, as the tribes on the immediate border are concerned, there is little communication with the Amir; for he has no authority, real or asserted, over them, with one or two exceptions, which will be noted in their place. The questions most frequently referred to Kabul are matters of general policy, not specially affecting the Punjab border, in which the Lieutenant-Governor being, ex officio, the diplomatic successor of the Governor General's Agent on the North-western Frontier, merely acts as the medium for communicating, either through the officer most conveniently situated, or personally, like Sir John Lawrence in 1855, the wishes, policy, and orders of the Supreme Government. This method of conducting the diplomatic business of the British Government with Kabul has remained unchanged since the annexation of the Punjab, and has worked without difficulty or friction. The Punjab Government, from the nature of the case, has never had a policy of its own towards Kabul, and has only carried out the policy prescribed by the Government of India.

Each district is governed by a Deputy Commissioner, who, in subordination to the Commissioner of the Division, has full control over the civil and political work. He is the chief magistrate, original and appellate, and carries on all necessary communications with the independent tribes on his border. He has nothing to do with questions affecting Kabul; for the frontier of his district does not touch, except in one or two points, territory owned by or in any way controlled by the Amir of Kabul. Subordinate to him, in the three most heavily worked districts, is a civil judge, bearing the title of Judicial Assistant, and, in all, European and Native assistant magistrates with the rank of Assistant and Extra Assistant Commissioner, having both civil and criminal original jurisdiction, and their number varying with the amount of work to be performed in the district. Still lower in the administrative scale are the Native revenue officials in charge of the several subdivisions, the Tahsildars; whilst each revenue charge has a subordinate Native judge who disposes of the less important civil cases, and from whose orders an appeal lies to the Judicial Assistant. There are, moreover, honorary magistrates, of whom a list is given in a statement annexed, chosen from among the more capable and influential of the chiefs, and not only disposing of a considerable amount of judicial work, but strengthening the administration by their example and their active exertions in the cause of law and order. The entire control of the civil, political, and police arrangements of the districts of their divisions rests with the Commissioners, under the direct orders of the local government. These officers have been, in Peshawar permanently, and in the Derajat temporarily, relieved of the necessity of hearing civil, and, so far as they may choose, criminal appeals, by the appointment of additional commissioners as civil and sessions judges. They have thus been set free for the most important part of their work, the administrative control of their districts and the satisfactory management of the relations of Government with the independent tribes.

Appendix A., p. 83.

The military arrangements of the frontier.

12. The military defence of the frontier is, one district excepted, entrusted to the Punjab Frontier Force, under the immediate orders of the Lieutenant-Governor of the province. This force consists of 12,402 men, of whom 8,967 are infantry, 2,827 cavalry, and 606 artillery, with 16 mountain guns, two light field batteries with four guns each, being now converted into mountain batteries. The exception is Peshawar, the headquarters of a brigade of the Bengal army, and, with Nowshera and five outlying fortresses in the valley, absorbing nearly a quarter of the whole of the Bengal force in the province. The Peshawar garrison occupies one of the most important military positions in India, and the character of the command is shown by the fact that while the portion of the Bengal army quartered in the province amounts to 16,889 British troops, and 18,244 Native, with 97 field guns, no less than 8,059 men of this force, 2,976 British troops, 5,083 Native, and 19 guns, are cantoned in the Peshawar district.

The Punjab Frontier Force is composed of many races, but principally Sikhs, Afghans, Gurkhas and Punjabi Muhammadans. A large proportion of the soldiers are recruits from independent territory, who readily take service; and that there is a very general spirit of loyalty and contentment in the force is shown by the fact that during the year 1874 there were, notwithstanding the ample opportunities of absconding, only 27 desertions, many of these being the cases of men who failed, for unknown reasons, to rejoin from leave from foreign territory. The Afridis, splendid fighting men, take service most readily. Of them are to be found in the force 732 men; while of other independent mountaineers, Orakzais, Mohmands, &c., there are 333. In regiments under the Commander-in-Chief are 1,196 men of independent tribes, chiefly Afridis. The Biluchis do not take service, there only being a few in the different regiments. A statement annexed to this memorandum gives the exact composition of the force. The policy of enlisting men of independent tribes with whom hostilities at some time or another are not improbable, has been sometimes questioned, but there is a general agreement among competent authorities in its favour. It results in leaving among the tribes an influential body of men favourably disposed to the Government, and impressed with a knowledge of its power and resources: while in war the sense of military honour and fidelity of these mountaineers is strong, and they fight, against even their own clansmen, without demur. The command of the Frontier Force is with a brigadier-general, and the military administration is locally distinct from the civil and political, but combined with it in the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor.

Appendix B., p. 84.

The co-operation of the civil and military authorities.

13. The military head-quarters in each district is also the head-quarters of the magistrate of the district, who, under the general Army Regulations, is empowered, at his discretion and on his personal responsibility, to call upon the officer commanding for such military service as may be of an urgent nature, reporting at once to his immediate superior and the local Government the character and necessity of the requisition.

All the troops of the Frontier Force are furnished with carriage, and are ready to move out at a moment's notice. All military operations are directed by the officer in command, who is supported by the local knowledge and influence of the district officer and the tribal chiefs. No inconvenience or conflict of authority is found to arise from this separation of civil and military authority. It has, indeed, the best results, and in the normal and peaceful state of the frontier it merely represents that division of labour which aids and ensures good administration. Nor does the fact of the Frontier Force being under the local Government give rise to any conflict of authority even in the Peshawar district. Where active service is such as to require only the use of the local force, the brigadier-general commanding the Frontier Force directs the operations; but if it be advisable to unite with them troops of the Bengal army, the whole force at once passes under the command of the Commander-in-Chief.

The discipline and efficiency of the force were only last November praised by the Government of India, and in the recent camps of exercise at Hassan Abdal, at Delhi and before His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, regiments of the Frontier Force were held to compare not unfavourably with those of the Bengal army.

Under the officer commanding in each district, in consultation with the magistrate so far as recommendations for enlistments and dismissals are concerned, are the Frontier Militia, who hold the intermediate outposts not occupied by troops. The intimate knowledge of the country, of the headmen and chiefs, and of the independent tribes, which this duty enables military officers to acquire, is of the utmost advantage to the civil head of the district and is most freely made use of. Their services have proved of great value to the civil administration, and the reorganisation of the militia, to which reference will hereafter be made, was effected chiefly on the advice and with the assistance of the officers commanding the several districts on the frontier.

14. The following is a list of the principal independent tribes on the Punjab border, showing the district which they adjoin, and their estimated number of fighting men :

* The numbers here given differ in many cases and in the total from those furnished in the Administration Reports of this Government, but the present statement has been carefully compiled and is believed to give as near an approximation of the numbers as can be attained. No census of these tribes is of course possible, and the figures must be accepted as a mere approximation. They comprise all the adult males in the tribes capable of bearing arms, and in the case of no single tribe would it be possible to bring into the field much more than half the numbers here entered, even were it not that, with the Afghans, feuds of the most deadly description between the numerous sections of a particular tribe prevent them from coalescing as a whole, except in the presence of extreme danger threatening the safety of the whole tribe.

15. The attitude at the present time of each of these tribes towards the Government will hereafter be noticed; but it is in the first place necessary to explain and illustrate the general policy which has of late years been pursued towards them. The Secretary of State has desired that any discussion of a controversial character as to the merits of the systems pursued in the Punjab and Sind should be scrupulously avoided. Such a discussion under no circumstances and at no time would the Lieutenant-Governor desire to open. He does not know a Sind policy or a Punjab policy, and his endeavour has uniformly been to carry out on the frontier the imperial policy approved by the Government of India. He would not assert any superiority in the measures adopted in the Punjab, or in the men who worked them, over Sind policy or Sind officers. If they have differed as to the policy to be pursued, it may be presumed, not that one province was right and the other wrong, but that circumstances differed in the Punjab and Sind. It is important to bear this in mind, or there will be an irremediable confusion as to the merits of particular systems of frontier policy, and a belief in the existance of a rivalry between those favoured by the Punjab and Bombay, a rivalry which is most certainly unknown in the Punjab. The conditions of the borders of the Punjab and Sind are absolutely different; conclusions drawn from the state of affairs on the Sind border would not necessarily be applicable to the Punjab; and experience gained in Sind alone furnishes no certain guide for the decision of disputed questions on the Punjab frontier. The Lieutenant-Governor has no reason to doubt that the policy of Sind has been wise and successful; but the political officers on that border have only been concerned with two or three Biluch tribes, such as the Marris and Bugtis, who are the nominal subjects of the Khelat State, and who border on Dera Ghazi Khan. With this district alone would a comparison be possible, for throughout the whole remaining Trans-Indus territory the conditions of comparison are altogether absent. This point is one of extreme importance, and in discussions on frontier policy is generally overlooked.*

The policy pursued towards the independent tribes by the Punjab Government.

16. The boundary between the Afghan and Biluch tribes is ordinarily fixed at Vihowa, opposite Dera Fatah Khan, and at the southern extremity of the Dera Ismail Khan district. This point has been somewhat arbitrarily fixed, but, as a general rule, it may be said that all the tribes north of this point are Afghan and all below it, with the single exception of the Khetrans, are Biluch.

The Biluch-Afghan boundary. The extreme difference between these races.

The Punjab Government, so far as it can be justly said to have any regular system at all in the management of the hill tribes, has two systems,—one suited to Afghan tribes, and one to Biluch. Between these races there is, so far as their national and political constitution is concerned, little in common. While both the Afghan and Biluch communities are in the tribal phase of social progress, the organisation of the former resembles the germ from which democratic institutions may have arisen, whilst in the constitution of the latter may be traced the rudiments from which monarchical principles may have been devoloped. The Biluch tribes have thus a tendency towards an aristocratic and oligarchical form of government, rendering obedience and service to their acknowledged chiefs, who are thus the natural channel of communication with their tribesmen, and through whom any desired amount of control can be effectively exercised. This manner of influencing the Biluch tribes has for many years past been followed in the Dera Ghazi Khan district, and generally with success.

With the Afghans to the north such a system of management would be useless. Their national constitution inclines rather to the republican than the aristocratic. Every tribe is divided and sub-divided into numerous clans, each independent of the others and yielding but small obedience to its own petty headmen; constantly indulging in internecine war; hating each other with the hatred begotten of generations of blood feuds; with interests ever in collision, and only uniting under the most exceptional circumstances against a common enemy. Control exercised over such tribes through their chiefs would be impossible, for the chiefs do not exist. With them the only policy which showed hopes of success was, in peaceful times, to render the whole tribe friendly by conciliatory, just, and liberal treatment, and by encouraging their settlement in British territory; and when times of difficulty arose, to divide the hostile tribe by playing the interests of one section against those of the others.

17. One great superiority of Biluchis over Afghans is their freedom from religious bigotry. Afghans are blindly subservient to their priests, and this is the chief reason that European life is so insecure in their hills, while it is safe among the Biluchis, there being no instance on record of a Superiority of Biluchis over Afghans.

* The great difference of the Sind and the Punjab in questions having reference to the States on their border, Khelat and Afghanistan, is further noticed in para. 40-41.

European being assassinated by them. The character and influence of the Afghan religious teachers have been described by many writers. The Taliban-ul-ilm, or "seekers of wisdom," half students, half secular priests, swarm in the mosques, leading an idle life and ever ready to incite their clansmen to mischief. They are ignorant and fanatical in an extreme degree. Where life is easy and food cheap, as in the Swat and Daur valleys, they most abound, and with reference to the last-named tract, the scene of our latest military expedition, it is notorious that to the dictation of these priests are the Dauris indebted for any exhibition of martial spirit which they may have ever shown. The entire absence of religious bigotry in the Biluchis makes their control comparatively easy, for there is not the perpetual fear of some outbreak of fanatical rage against the infidel, which, to the north and among Afghan tribes, has always to be guarded against.

The effects of Sikh misgovernment and the difficulties of early English rule.

18. The system of the Punjab Government on the North-west Frontier has varied with the times. We succeeded to an inheritance of anarchy, the result of the Sikh management of the Trans-Indus districts. They had ever been in a state of war with the border tribes and even with the people in the interior of the districts. The whole country was studded with forts, each the head-quarters of a robber chief, and the revenue was collected by an army or not collected at all. With the introduction of English rule a change was at once apparent, and the border became tranquil in comparison with its condition in the time that had preceded it. But it was not to be expected that the savage and suspicious races in the independent hills should at once accept the new order of things, abandon their predatory habits, and look upon the English successors of their old enemies as their friends. Expedition after expedition was necessary to show each tribe, in turn, the strength of the British Government, and the folly of resisting it by force of arms; while, the lesson having been taught, no effort was spared to encourage friendly feelings, and to show the mountaineers that all the British Government insisted upon was the peace of its border. This ensured, the hillmen were as free to go and come and trade within British territory as our own subjects.

The results of the firm yet friendly policy of the Government.

That this policy has been successful is proved by the fact that within the last six years but one expedition has been necessary into independent territory, and this took place so far back as 1872, when the inhabitants of the Daur valley to the west of the Bannu district received a necessary lesson by which they have so far profited as to remain on good terms with the Government ever since.

The nature of frontier punishments.

19. The active measures which the Government adopts, when necessary, for the punishment of hostile or unfriendly tribes beyond its border, consist in fines, blockades, and military expeditions. Before describing the manner in which these punishments are applied, it is desirable to say a few words upon the nature of the outrages which the independent tribes are in the habit of committing in British territory, and to describe the character of their country from a military point of view.

The military aspect of the border.

20. The whole line of the frontier, from the extreme northern limits of Hazara to below the fort of Harrand, in the Dera Ghazi Khan district, consists of a continuous line of difficult and rugged mountains. From the lofty peaks of Khagan and the lower Himalayan ranges above Peshawar to the low hills on the Dera Ghazi Khan and Sind frontier, the ranges generally decrease in height and the passes in difficulty, from the north towards the south, only rising again to a formidable elevation in the Suliman range opposite the district of Dera Ismail Khan.

The map which accompanies this report does not show the line of hills, and would thus give, unless the character of the frontier were specially noted, an erroneous impression. The fact is that the territory in possession of the British Government runs up to the very foot of the hills which have from obvious reasons of convenience been called the frontier. In the lower part of Dera Ghazi Khan the hills become low and easy, and on the Jacobabad border altogether recede from the line held by the Government.

The military qualities of the Biluch and Afghan tribes.

21. A reference to maps and to the records of our hostile operations on the Biluch and Afghan frontiers will clearly show that the Afridis, Mohmands, and the Bonerwals are each as much more formidable an enemy than the Biluchis, as the high rugged mountain ranges of the northern Punjab frontier are more difficult of penetration and invasion than the flat plain on the Sind border. Mere detachments have penetrated to the headquarters of the Marri tribe; but no one acquainted with the facts would assert that anything less than a corps d'armée could cross our frontier and enter the Khaibar or the Tira hills with a prospect of success. So far as the fighting qualities of the border tribes are concerned it has been already shown that those adjoining the Hazara district are comparatively contemptible as soldiers, their extreme religious bigotry alone making up for their absence of martial qualities.

To the south, between the Swat river and Dera Ismail Khan, the Afghan tribes are both fanatical and brave in an extraordinary degree. Courage with them is the first of virtues, and cowardice the worst of crimes.

The Biluchis as turbulent and formerly of habits quite as predatory as their neighbours, are still of a far milder and more amenable disposition. They are as brave as the Afghans, but they are animated by no fanatical hatred of the English, they have not the military genius of the Afghans, and as an enemy on the hillside they are far less formidable. As an illustration of their rude conception of tactics it may be mentioned, that though famed as horsemen, it is their rule to dismount for a fight, which is conducted hand to hand, and often with sword and shield. Less robust than the Afghans they still are remarkable for their endurance and make incredibly long journies on their mares of a renowned breed. The character of their country seems, to a certain extent, to have developed their method of attack. Comparatively low ridges intersected by numerous and easy passes, favour their style of attack and reprisal, which consists of dashing and unforseen inroads followed by precipitate retreats.

22. The outrages perpetrated in British territory by the independent tribes are numerous and of many kinds. Sometimes, and especially in the early days of British occupation, raids in force have been directed against British territory, almost rising to the dignity of open war. Such was the attack of the Kasranis on Dera Fatah Khan in 1852. On the northern frontier, especially in the Peshawar district, fanaticism has excited wild and bigoted men to attempt the life of individual Europeans, believing that the assassination of an infidel was a sure passport to Paradise. To this fierce feeling of fanaticism may be attributed the deaths of the customs officers, Messrs. Tapp and Carne in 1851, on the Khagan frontier, and the murders of Colonel Mackeson and Major Adams, Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Peshawar, and Lieutenant Ommanney, in 1853 and 1865. Nor have Europeans alone been the object of attack. Natives and Native officers have been the victims of assassination; villagers killed in the commission of raids, and detachments of troops inveigled into murderous ambuscades. If these more special forms of frontier offences be put aside, together with a large class of murders due to female infidelity, and offences against the person attributed to the possession of arms, there remains as the residuum, those crimes which it might naturally be presumed would be committed by fierce and savage tribes inhabiting barren hills impregnable except to a large force, and overlooking fertile plains which from time immemorial they have considered as their rightful prey.

The nature of the outrages of the border tribes.

23. Those offences which mostly fill the frontier calendar are, horse stealing, house breaking, and above all, cattle stealing, the mere brigandage of wild tribes and the gravamen of which consists in an association of numbers to accomplish the offence, and the free and sacred asylum given in the independent hills to the successful marauders. The complete suppression of robbery in a land of brigands is of course impossible; depredations may be said to be almost invited by the character of the country and by special causes, prominent among which is the annual migration of the great trading tribe of Afghanistan, the Powindas, with their camels and immense herds and flocks to Hindustan, for whose protection special measures have been adopted which will be hereafter noticed.

Ordinary frontier offences.

24. For the defence of the plain country against the incursions of hill robbers there is a line of posts, military and militia, along the frontier. On the border of the Hazara, Peshawar, and Kohat districts these are comparatively few and far between, but are held in considerable strength by regular troops. Here the difficulty of the country, and, as regards the Peshawar and Kohat border, the jealous and stubborn character of the tribes render the pursuit of raiders and robbers too difficult and too likely to cause future complications to be hastily adopted. Indeed, with the exception of the Afridis, the tribes on the Punjab border, including the districts of Bannu and Dera Ismail Khan, are the jealous guardians of mountain passes that lead to nowhere. Under such circumstances, and with no possible advantage to be gained by the occupation of these barren hills, obvious considerations of military prudence limit pursuit, in the case of a raid, to the mouth of the passes; and an officer who attempted to enter, with an inadequate force, a defile in possession of the enemy, would be undertaking a grave responsibility.

Military defence. The forts and outposts.

The line of defence in Bannu and the two southern districts of the Derajat is maintained by smaller and far more frequent posts, only 10 or 12 miles apart, and each situated so as to command one or more of the numerous passes leading to the hills. These outposts are garrisoned, in part by troops of the Frontier Force, and partly by them associated with the Frontier Militia; and the smaller and less important ones by the Frontier Militia alone. While, from the local knowledge of the militiamen, intelligence is often gained which leads to the prevention of a raid or robbery, yet such is the inevitable exposure of the villages and cultivated lands which lie between the posts and the hills, such the carelessness of a population habituated to danger, and such the facilities for attack and flight which the numerous passes afford, that it is only too often the case that the first intelligence which a military outpost receives of a raid is the news that it has been committed and that the robbers are already back in the hills.

A list of the military and militia outposts on the Punjab border, showing the composition of the garrison of each, is attached as an appendix to this memorandum.

Appendix C., p. 85.

25. Such being the nature of the country from a military point of view, such the martial qualities of the independent tribes, and such the nature of the offences committed by them against British territory, it remains to note the manner in which these offences are punished.

Modes of punishment used. Fines.

The most simple method of punishing a refractory tribe, and in many cases the most effectual, is to inflict a fine and demand compensation for plundered property or for lives lost. When the tribe is dependent upon trade with British territory, or when a portion resides within British limits, or is easily accessible from the plains to the attack of a military force, the demand for payment of fine and compensation is usually acceded to, and being paid, the tribe is again received into favour. Should the demand be refused, hostages are demanded, or members of the tribe and their property found within British territory are seized, until such time as the compensation and fine are paid.

26. Against some tribes, as at the present time against that section of the Afridis responsible for the safety of the Kohat Pass, a blockade is an effective measure of punishment, though year by year it has been found less necessary to make use of it. It can only be employed against such tribes as trade with British territory, like the Afridis, who undertake most of the carrying trade of the northern portion of the frontier. During the continuance of a blockade the offending tribe is prohibited from entering British territory, and any members found there, in contravention of the order, are arrested. This means of punishment has often been found most effectual, and if effectual, it is preferable to a military expedition, which leaves behind it bitter memories in the destruction of property and loss of life. A very full statement is appended showing, for all the frontier districts, the offences committed, the method of coercion, and the reparation exacted.

Blockades.

Appendix D., p. 87.

27. Last, as a means of punishment, comes the military expedition, which is only resorted to in exceptional circumstances and when every other means of coercing a hostile tribe has failed. A statement attached to this memorandum gives the number of expeditions which have been undertaken since annexation, and it is sufficient proof that they were necessary and effected their object,—that the tribes formerly so persistently hostile have so far changed their attitude as to have rendered, since 1869, but one expedition necessary, and that of a small force and only of a few days' duration.

Military expeditions.

Appendix E., p. 119.

28. The manner in which expeditions against hostile tribes on the Punjab frontier have been conducted has been much misunderstood, and has been the object of much undeserved reprobation. It may be truthfully asserted that the operations against the independent tribes have been distinguished by the utmost consideration, both before the march of the expedition and during the continuance of actual warfare. An expedition is never proposed by the local Government unless the officers on the spot are able to show so long a list of insults and offences that military action is absolutely necessary to maintain the prestige of the British Government. Sometimes, when it is necessary to strike a sudden blow, no previous notice is given to the tribe; at other times, as in the Ambeyla and Black Mountain expeditions, warning after warning has been given, and troops slowly collected, in order to allow the recusant tribes to make their submission and render hostilities unnecessary. When an expedition has entered the hills its proceedings are not characterised, as has so often been stated, with any unnecessary harshness or barbarity. The universal habit of Pathan tribes, when they have made up their minds to fight, is to remove their women, children, and cattle to a distance. They are well armed, fine marksmen, and fond of fighting. Their tactics are to contest our advance as long as they can in safety. Under cover of breastworks, and aided by the naturally strong features of their country, they inflict much more loss than they suffer. As we retire they advance, and are most formidable in their pursuit. Their villages and crops are really their only vulnerable point. If they submit they are spared, if they continue to resist they are destroyed. The stories of indiscriminate destruction and refusal of quarter, are libels which require no serious refutation. Those officers who have been most distinguished on the frontier, and who have served in numerous expeditions, assert that they have on no single occasion seen quarter refused, or an unresisting or wounded enemy treated otherwise than with the greatest consideration by our troops.

The manner in which expeditions are conducted

Measures of a special character and importance.

29. It is now necessary to refer to two measures of great importance carried out along the whole frontier of the Derajat in the years 1873–4, and which, of themselves, have done much to render the exercise of force towards our unruly neighbours unnecessary. These are the re-organisation of the Frontier Militia, and the enforcement of Pass responsibility. These two measures are in reality so intermingled as to form but portions of one uniform system, which consists in making the tribes immediately on the border, and over whom the Government has some control from their possessing lands in British territory, responsible for the safety of the interior portion of the district from raids, and liable to pay compensation for property carried off through the passes of the independent tribes which lead through their lands.

Re-organisation of the Frontier Militia.

Previous to 1872 the Frontier Militia, or military police garrisoning the outposts on the immediate border, was far from efficient. The numerous retainers of the Saddozai and Alizai and other chiefs, who performed conspicuous service in the war of 1848–49, had to be provided for, and were nominated to the militia. In many cases they had become, from old age, incapable of active service, or, not being natives of the part of the border where they were stationed, were generally destitute of that precise local knowledge which can alone render a frontier militia efficient. In 1872 this system was reformed. A committee, composed of the district officers and military officers commanding the several districts, was convened, and the militia was entirely re-organised, a certain number of nominations to horse and foot being given to each tribe on the border in proportion to the number of passes and the length of the territory it occupied. In return for these appointments the emoluments of which were a matter of great moment to the several tribes, they were required to be responsible that the passes leading into their lands were not used by raiders into British territory, or, if they were so used, that the tribe through whose pass they issued should make good any loss so caused. This system, which has during the past year been completed by the adhesion of the important Bhittanni tribe on the Dera Ismail Khan frontier has been successful, and along the whole Derajat border raids from the hills have been reduced to a minimum. This system will probably be never found suited, in its entirety, to the Hazara or Peshawar frontier, but it is being introduced with modifications into the former and into Kohat.

Prohibition of private war.

30. It is of course difficult to prevent militia of the same race as the hillmen from using the arms and training they have received from the Government in private war on their own account and in prosecuting their own blood feuds. This disposition has been always sternly repressed, as the following extracts from the Brigade Orders of the Frontier Force will show :—

"When employed with regular troops the militiamen are expected to act merely as guides, and are not justified, except when an engagement takes place, or in self-defence, in using their arms against or attacking marauders."

"The object of this order is to prevent these men carrying out their own private feuds under the pretence of performing Government service, or unnecessarily creating blood feuds, as would often happen on the lower border if Biluch militiamen acted against Biluch marauders."

"The Brigadier-General desires that officers in charge of frontier outposts will again impress upon the militiamen, horse and foot, serving under their orders, the absolute necessity for their abstaining from mixing in any way in border feuds, and they should again be warned that severe and summary punishment will follow every infringement of the standing orders on the subject."

The settlement of members of independent tribes in British territory.

31. Another measure which has already proved successful and which each year increases in value, so far as the control of the independent tribes is concerned, is inducing them by grants of land on favourable or even nominal assessments to settle within British territory; and many frontier tribes, such as the Wazirs, Afridis, Gurchanis, Bhittannis and Bugtis have extensive lands and numerous villages in British territory, and are thus able to influence their independent clansmen in the hills in the most favourable manner.

32. Another measure proposed by the Punjab Government, and sanctioned by the Government of India, in 1873, owed its origin to the fact that from the extreme difficulty of the frontier languages Pashtu and Biluchi, and the absence of good text-books for their study, but few officers in civil employment were able to converse freely with the independent tribes in their own vernaculars. This caused much inconvenience, and the hillmen complained that the Native interpreters did not properly represent their grievances and their wishes. In the above-named year it was made compulsory on all frontier officers to pass in the vernacular of the border of the district in which they happened to be stationed, and as a reward for this additional labour an extra allowance of Rs. 100 a month was sanctioned for those who might prove their competency within a fixed and reasonable time. The consequence of this rule has been that almost every officer now employed in the frontier districts has proved his colloquial knowledge of the frontier languages, and the administration has been immensely strengthened. The intelligent interest of civil officers in the Punjab Commission in the frontier districts in which they serve is shown by the publication, within the last few years, of the "Haiyat-i-Afghani" by Muhammad Haiyat Khan, C.S.I., Assistant Commissioner, being an account of all the Afghan tribes of the frontier, translated by Mr. H. Priestley, late of the Civil Service; by histories of the Dera Ghazi Khan district by Mr. Robert Bruce, Assistant Commissioner, and Lieutenant-Colonel Minchin, formerly Deputy Commissioner of that district; and by a work on the Afghan frontier at Bannu by Mr. Thorburn, Settlement Officer of the Bannu district. Next may be mentioned a work on Pashtu literature called the "Kalid-i-Afghani," compiled by the Reverend Mr. Hughes, of Peshawar, and translated by Captain Plowden, Assistant Commissioner of the Peshawar district, which has been adopted by the Punjab Government as the text-book for Pashtu examinations; and a Biluchi grammar and vocabulary by Mr. Gladstone, of the Civil Service. Dr. W. H. Bellew, C.S.I., late Civil Surgeon of Peshawar, and for many years in the Punjab Frontier Force, has published a valuable work on Yusafzai, and a Pashtu dictionary and grammar. It may be doubted whether the civil officers of any other part of India have shown greater literary industry, or more interest in their districts than those on the Punjab frontier.

The compulsory study of the frontier vernacular by civil officers.

The literary activity of frontier officers.

33. The last of the special means for securing the good order of the border is by legislation suited to the peculiar circumstances of the case, and modifying in some particulars the general law.

Special legislation.

It must be remembered, and there is no greater proof of the excellence and adaptibility of our systems of procedure and substantive law, that no radical difference exists between the law as administered on the frontier and that in force elsewhere. This fact struck the Honorable FitzJames Stephen, the Legislative Member of the Government of India, very forcibly, and in his minute on the administration of justice in British India he wrote to the following effect:—

The civil and criminal law in force on the frontier is ordinarily that in force elsewhere in India.

"The Punjab Local Government has lately submitted rules for the government of the districts on the frontier lately brought under the operation of 33 Vict. c. 3. Similar rules have been made under the Agror Valley Act by the same authority. It is instructive to see how very little it has been thought necessary to deviate, even in these wild districts, from the ordinary course of law established for the rest of British India. Power to fine villages for crimes not brought home to individuals, and power to punish women as well as men for adultery, are the most important differences between the rules established on the frontier and the law in force in the rest of the Punjab. The officers responsible for the peace of the district ask for no substantial alteration in the Code of Criminal Procedure. Yet this is the very district in which, within the memory of men still in middle life, Avitabile tried in vain to suppress crime by hanging people by scores from every tree, at the discretion of chiefs who, as far as I can understand the matter, often differed very little from the robbers and murderers whom they mutilated or put to death."

Where the procedure in frontier districts differs from that in force in the rest of the Punjab, it will probably be found that it differs for the better, inasmuch as it has endeavoured to recognise existing facts, and acknowledge the tribal constitution of society. In the quiet districts to the east of the Indus, tribes, with their characteristics as clearly marked as those on the border, exist; but their cohesion, under the English system of administration, is apt to become weak. Nor is this, in settled and advanced districts, matter for either surprise or regret. In the eye of the trained lawyers who preside in the courts, the tribal idea is weak or absent, and attention is given alone to the rights and claims and wrongs of the individual. On the frontier the cohesion of the tribes has been partly maintained by force from without, the necessity for union against the enemy in the independent hills, and partly from the readiness with which the Government has recognised the temporary advantages, in the present backward condition of the frontier, of tribal union, and has encouraged its existence by judicious concessions to tribal claims and even tribal prejudices. The whole system of special law on the frontier, putting on one side such regulations as were of a temporary nature, or whose effect was limited to a single district, have their origin, either in the contiguity of independent territory, or in the recognition of the fact that, beyond the Indus, tribes and communities must be dealt with as such, and the social peculiarities which spring from tribal and clannish sentiment practically acknowledged.

It will be seen, however, that, as stated by Mr. Stephen, the deviations from customary law and procedure, though important and significant, are not very numerous. Generally the Trans-Indus districts are legally in the same position as those Cis-Indus. They are administered under the same laws; subject to the same procedure; and their civil and criminal courts are under the appellate jurisdiction of the Chief Court at Lahore. When this arrangement was introduced and the frontier districts placed under regular legal discipline and control, there was a strong impression on the part of some frontier officers that the change was premature, and that these districts could best be governed without the interposition of the Chief Court. Experience has, however, proved the wisdom of the action of the Government. The introduction of regular procedure has in no way crippled the power or diminished the legitimate influence of the administrative officers; whilst the supervision of the Chief Court, which has not been exercised in any hypercritical or arbitrary spirit, has greatly improved the standard of work in the civil and criminal courts.

Special rules needed for the suppression of special border offences.

34. The special regulations which have, in accordance with the principles above noted, been found necessary to lessen the rigidity of the regular courts and provide for circumstances which no formal system of law or procedure can forsee, will be found as an appendix. The most important is Regulation I. of 1872, which consists of rules sanctioned by the Imperial Government on the recommendation of the Government of the Punjab, and places under legislative sanction a procedure which considerations of administrative convenience had compelled the local authorities to adopt. These rules empower the Deputy Commissioner to arrest and seize the property of members of offending tribes; to prohibit the erection of villages or hamlets in so close a proximity to the frontier as to give rise to apprehensions for their safety; to fine village communities for harbouring or assisting criminals, a most important regulation and one the enforcement of which has done the greatest possible good in the Peshawar district; to remove from any place where his residence would be likely to cause bloodshed any person having a blood feud with persons beyond the border; and to provide for the trial and punishment by fine, by a committee of Pathan or Biluch elders, of persons against whom there might be a strong presumption of guilt, but whom, from strong clan feeling or other reasons, it may be impossible or undesirable to prosecute in the criminal courts. Another rule makes women punishable for adultery, experience having shown that among Afghan tribes the infidelity of the wife is the cause of the great majority of the murders committed; and Regulation VII. of 1873 gives the magistrate of the district power to prevent persons passing the frontier of any one of the border districts when such action might cause grave inconvenience to the Government.

Appendix F., p. 119.

Regulation I. of 1872.

Regulation VII. of 1873.

35. Act XXIII. of 1867, the Murderous Outrages Act, was passed to ensure immediate punishment for fanatical attacks of assassins on English officers, of which at one time there were many instances in border districts. But it is matter for congratulation that it has never been necessary to enforce this Act, though as a precautionary measure it may be desirable to retain it for some time longer on the statute book.

Act XXIII. of 1867.

36. Regulation I. of 1874 legalises rules, which were framed by the Committee on Frontier Militia, to prevent grazing within the military road along the border, unless the flocks so grazing were adequately guarded. These rules had been found imperatively needed to check the carelessness of Powindas and other trading or pastoral tribes, in allowing their cattle to graze without an armed guard the moment they enter the presumed security of British territory, and thus offering the greatest incentive to cattle theft.

Regulation I. of 1874.

37. It has been found necessary to make special regulations for the safety of the Powinda traders, who, during the autumn months, move down the Ghwalari or Znob Passes, entering the Derejat by the Gumal valley and returning with their caravans, which go as far as Bombay and Calcutta, in the following spring. They move through the Waziri country in large bodies of from 5,000 to 10,000 in number, led by a Khan or Chief, and observing regular marches and encampments. It is thus inevitable that skirmishes should occur, stragglers be cut off, and cattle lifted. Beyond British territory, however, the Powindas, brave and powerful men, are well able to take care of themselves. It is only within the English border that their precautions are relaxed. During the former governments of the Punjab, the Powindas were subjected, in addition to various cesses, to a grazing tax for the privilege of feeding their flocks on the fertile banks of the Indus, With British rule the cesses were discontinued, with the exception of the grazing dues which amounted to upwards of Rs. 8,000 per annum. In 1872 this tax was somewhat raised, and from the funds at the disposal of Government, a special establishment formed to protect the interests of the different Powinda encampments. This establishment, known as the Powinda Police, has been raised with the aid and consent of the Powindas, and as far as possible from among themselves. Since its institution the Powinda trade has increased, and its losses from robbery have diminished.

Forest and Land Revenue Rules.

38. Other regulations referring to the frontier districts—the Forest Rules of Hazara, and the Hazara Tenancy Act—have been framed to meet peculiarities in the tenures and customs of the districts in question, but, only differing in a few details from the general law of the country, require here no special notice.

The effect of the special legislation. Appendix G., p. 122.

39. A list of cases which have been tried and of the action taken under the frontier rules is appended to this report. It will be seen that some rules have been frequently worked, others it has hardly been necessary to use at all, and that they have been used very differently in different districts, Their general effect has, however, been excellent; they have given to the Executive a strength in the particular direction in which it required support, without in any way interfering with the general course of law and procedure followed in the regular criminal courts.*

The tribes beyond the British border.

40. It is now necessary to advert in somewhat more detail, though as briefly as clearness will permit, to the attitude of the independent tribes on the Punjab frontier.

* NOTE.—It is not necessary to encumber the text with an account of the legal position of the frontier districts, but the Memorandum will not be complete without a brief review of the position.

Act XXXIII. Victoria, Cap. 3, empowers the Secretary of State by Resolution in Council to declare the provisions of section 1 to be applicable to any part or parts of the territory under a local Government or Administration. When this is done the head of such Government or Administration may submit draft regulations for the peace and government of such part or parts of the territory, and the draft regulations when sanctioned by the Governor General in Council have the force of law.

The provisions of Act XXXIII. Victoria, Cap. 3, were extended to the districts of Hazara, Peshawar, Kohat, Bannu, Dera Ismail Khan, Dera Ghazi Khan, and the parganna of Spiti by the resolution of the Secretary of State, dated 6th October 1870, published in Gazette of India, Notification No. 2101P, dated 2nd December 1870.

Under the authority of the above-mentioned Act and Notification, the Punjab Frontier Regulations have been passed.

They fall into two classes—

(1.) Those arising out of temporary needs consequent upon the introduction of the regular settlement, such as the Peshawar District Limitation Regulation No. 1 of 1871, and the Hazara Settlement Rules (Clause 13 of No. 1 of 1872).

(2.) Those due to the permanent peculiarities which distinguish the frontier from other parts of the province such as No. I. of 1872, Nos. IV. and VII. of 1873, Nos. I. and VII. of 1874, and No. II. of 1876.

The Hazara Forest and Tenancy Regulations occupy an intermediate position, being partially designed to meet temporary necessities and partially to supply permanent wants.

So far as the distinction between regulation and non-regulation provinces has a legal aspect, the last remaining trace of it in the Statute Book was removed by the passing of Acts XIV. and XV. of 1874. The first of these enactments enables local Governments (with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council) to do for the so-called scheduled districts what the Punjab Laws Act has already done for the Punjab generally, i.e., to declare what enactments are in force in them. The second of these enactments, called the Laws Local Extent Act, 1874, does for British India at large what XIV. of 1874 enables local Governments to do for the scheduled districts, that is (without affecting the operation of any Act or Regulation before extended to or declared to be in force in, any of the scheduled districts) declares certain Acts to be in force throughout the whole of British India except in such scheduled districts.

Under both Acts the scheduled districts include the districts of the Punjab frontier.

It is, therefore, a peculiarity of the Punjab frontier, in common with the other scheduled districts throughout India, that it is exempt from the operation of Schedule I. of Act XV. of 1874, the enactments therein enumerated not applying thereto unless previously in force there; and it is another such legal peculiarity that with the previous sanction of the Government of India the Local Government can declare what enactments are and what are not in force on the frontier, and can extend to the frontier any enactment in force in any part of British India. But so slight is the divergence between the legal necessities of the frontier and of the province at large that no use has been made of this power.

The independence of the great majority of these is complete; while over a few the neighbouring States of Kabul and Khelat exercise an authority differing in kind and in degree. Afghanistan, as a geographical and ethnographical expression, signifying the countries occupied by races of Afghan blood, must not be confused with Afghanistan as constituted and acknowledged by treaties and engagements with the British Government. The treaty of the 30th March 1855, between the British Government and Amir Dost Muhammad Khan, recognised that chief as ruler of Kabul and all those countries of Afghanistan at that time in his possession: and any pretensions to authority over such Afghan countries as Buner and Swat, on the part of the Amir of Cabul, have been, in 1857 and 1858, expressly repudiated by the Government. Over the Mohmands inhabiting the country between the Swat and Kabul rivers the Amir exercises authority, and during the past year he has demanded from them the payment of fines aggregating Rs. 32,000, as punishment for the contumacious behaviour of Naoroz Khan, the Chief of Lalpura, who, when summoned to Kabul, refused compliance and raised the Mohmand clans in rebellion.

The nature of their independence

The position of Kabul towards the tribes.

Over the Afridis to the south Kabul has never pretended to exercise any control. Certain of the Wazirs, and especially the Mahsuds, while repudiating any supremacy of Kabul, have been known to refer grievances to that Darbar; and the undoubted right of the British Government to the Dour valley, which had been relinquished by Shah Shuja in the treaty of the 26th June 1838 with the Sikh Government, and to which the British Government succeeded as inheriting all Sikh possessions, was waived in favour of Kabul in 1855. Still further to the south, below the Vihowa Pass, the Biluch tribes generally, and the Marris and Bugtis in particular, acknowledge the supremacy of the Khan of Khelat, though over them he has never been able to exercise any effective control.

The position of Khelat towards the tribes.

41. Still, the position of the Biluch tribes in reference to Khelat differs most materially from that of the Afghans in relation to Kabul; and this difference affects the diplomatic procedure of the Government. The supremacy of Khelat, though constantly opposed by the predatory Biluch tribes, in hostile action directed against the Khan of that State, is nevertheless generally acknowledged, and this has justified the attempt to control them by means of the Khelat Darbar, which claims the Biluchis as its subjects, and professes to be able to influence and punish them. That these professions have rarely been carried out does not affect the question in any important degree; for, supposing the Khan to be able to control his acknowledged subjects, negotiations to secure this result would naturally be conducted through his agency. It is merely an accidental circumstance that, the Khan being unable to enforce respect for British territory, and diplomatic arrangements with his court being conducted through Bombay, the Punjab Government has been ordinarily compelled, while in no way denying such supremacy over the Biluch tribes as the Supreme Government may have considered his, to negotiate direct with the tribes on its border and to make with them such arrangements as might provide for the security of British districts.

With the Afghan tribes the case is altogether different. Independent in fact as in name, repudiating all connexion with or dependence on the Kabul State, the Punjab Government has merely recognised an unquestioned fact in dealing with them, without any reference to his Highness the Amir. Even the Afridis, on the main road between Kabul and Peshawar, boast that they have seen kings come and go, but have never paid homage to a king themselves, and to emphasise their boast they plundered the baggage of the Amir on the last occasion that he passed through the Khaibar, which at no time he would ever be able to do without an escort so strong as to be called an army. Lastly, the political position of Khelat, with reference to the British Government, is altogether different from that of Kabul. The latter State is independent in the absolute and unconditional sense of the word. It is free to act as it chooses, and, in its alliances, to consult alone its own interests or fancies. But Khelat is only independent in the narrow and circumscribed sense that Native States in Hindustan are so. The British Government is its paramount; it is, under treaty, forbidden to ally itself or enter into diplomatic relations with other powers; English troops may, under engagement, at any time, occupy the country; and its position, under the strict definition of treaties now in force, is less independent than the Cis-Sutlej Sikh States of Patiala Jind or Nabha.

42. It will be convenient to treat the independent tribes in the order given at page 63, commencing with the Northern Frontier. First come the Akazais, who form a sub-division of the great Yusafzai tribe, inhabiting the eastern slope of the Black Mountain on the Hazara border. Since 1868, they have continually given trouble and committed many raids on the Agror border. The chief of this latter place, being dissatisfied with the action of the British Government towards him, encouraged the hostilities of the tribe; and the refusal of the British Government to surrender to them the village of Shahtut, which was destroyed in 1869, in punishment for their raids, has been, till recently, a constant cause of dispute, the Government persistently refusing to allow them to rebuild and occupy the village. During the past year, however, the relations with this tribe have been most satisfactorily settled. In September 1875 the headmen visited the Deputy Commissioner of the Hazara district in Agror, and entered into agreements for the future. They surrendered all claim to the disputed lands of Shahtut, expressed regret for the past, and pledged their faith to respect in future British territory and British subjects. Since that date they have kept their word and not a single offence has been committed by any member of the tribe, some of whom have been entertained in service in the police.

The Hassanzais.

43. The Hassanzais form another division of the Yusafzai tribe, living on both sides of the Indus, on and in the immediate neighbourhood of the Black Mountain. They have since 1851, when they murdered two officers of the Customs Department, given continual trouble to the British Government, which in 1852 sent an expedition against them under the command of Colonel Mackeson. They with the tribe last named continued to join in all the attacks on Agror, and upon the slightest provocation were always ready to threaten hostilities. With these, too, satisfactory and it is to be hoped permanent arrangements have been completed. In December of last year the headmen of the tribe came in to the Deputy Commissioner at Haripur; one party through the instrumentality of the Nawab of Amb, and the other, and more important body, of their own free-will. Both parties agreed to respect British territory in future, and since that date no member of the tribe has committed any offence. Accidental circumstances favoured the submission of both these tribes. An attack of the Hassanzais upon the Akazai induced the latter to come in; while the inconvenience of their consequent isolation compelled the submission of the Hassanzais themselves.*

The Hazara border completely tranquil.

44. The year 1875 has seen the submission to the British Government of the Black Mountain and other tribes, Chagarzais, Hassanzais, Akazais, Tikri, Allai, and the Syads of Pariari who, since 1868, have set the Government at defiance: and the arrangements made on this border have received the special commendation of Her Majesty Secretary of State.

The Jaduns.

45. The Jadun tribe, like those last named, live on the slopes of the Mahaban and in the Hazara district. In former years they have given considerable trouble, but since 1870 their conduct has been little open to complaint. During the past year they have given no cause of offence.

The Bonerwals.

46. The warlike tribe of Bonerwal inhabits the valley at the immediate north of the Yusafzai plain, and in the Umbeyla Expedition of 1863 were our most gallant opponents, losing so large a number of men and being so completely humiliated by the occupation of their country and the destruction of Malka, the head-quarters of the fanatical Wahabi colony of Hindustanis, that they have since behaved in a manner which has not given rise to much complaint. During the past year they have been much divided by internal feuds, but have not committed any offence against British territory.

The Swatis.

47. The people who inhabit the rich and highly cultivated valley of the Swat river are the immediate neighbours, and generally the allies of the Bonerwals. They are, however, very much inferior to the latter in courage and physique, the climate of the Swat valley being unhealthy and malarious. The valley of Swat is divided into five districts: 1 Baizai; 2, Rhanizai; 3, Khadakai; 4, Abazai; and 5, Khwazozai. Of these the two first are situated to the north, and the three last to the south of the Swat river. The names of the districts are taken from the names of the clans inhabiting them belonging to the Abazai division of the powerful and numerous Yusafzai tribe, other portions of which inhabit Dir to the west and Boner to the east. From the annexation of the Peshawar district in 1849 the Pathans of Swat have shown themselves hostile to the Government, and not only continually sent marauding expeditions into the plains, but permitted their country to became an asylum for all the enemies of the British. Of late years, however, the influence of the Akhund, who exercises supreme spiritual authority over northern Afghan tribes, has created a far more friendly feeling, or at any rate, has repressed any outward signs of hostility. The great age and failing health of the Akhund have given rise to intrigues as to the succession to the chiefship in the valley, his son, Mian Gul, being anxious to be appointed, although he was not supported by his father, who nominated Syad Ahmad, an incompetent person, without authority, who has since been refused the succession, and the only other candidate of importance is Sherdil Khan, the Chief of the Ranizais, whose claims are supported by several of the clans.

The Akhund of Swat.

The Utman Khels to the north of Peshawar, between the Mohmands and the Ranizai, hardly claim space as a separate tribe, being an off-shoot from the Afghans of Swat. During the early years of British rule they gave great trouble, and were punished by a military expedition in force under Sir Colin Campbell, in 1852. Of late years, and indeed consistently since this punishment their conduct has been good. In June 1875 all old cases against the tribe, all of them of a mild character, were settled, since which no case of misconduct has occurred.

48. The Mohmands are a most important tribe inhabiting the hilly country between the Kabul and Swat rivers. A very large number of the tribe inhabit British territory, giving their name to a subdivision of the Peshawar district. From 1849 to 1866 this tribe perhaps gave more trouble to the British Government than any other on the Peshawar border. The raids committed by them were innumerable, and the number of British subjects killed and cattle carried off was very large. The influence brought to bear upon them by the Kabul Government was not of much effect till 1866, when strong pressure having been exercised by our Government the Khan of Lalpura, the head of the principal clan, was carried prisoner to Kabul, where he afterwards died. Since 1866 the Mohmands have given little trouble except in the case of the murder of Major McDonald, in March 1873. As has been before noticed, during the past year Naoroz Khan, son of the Khan deposed in 1866, was expelled from Lalpura for rebellion and for his complicity in the murder of Major McDonald, the several clans being heavily fined. A portion of the fine was paid, while the leading men of one of the sections were arrested and kept prisoners until arrangements were made for the payment of the whole. The marked distinction of this tribe is that it is subject to the Amir of Kabul, and to that court reference has always been made when it has been necessary to obtain redress for offences committed by the tribe.

The Mohmands.

49. The powerful Afridi tribe, one of the bravest and most turbulent on the border, inhabits the southern frontier of the Peshawar and the northern frontier of the Kohat districts. Their numerous clans are much divided by feuds, and the action of one section is generally altogether independent of that of the others. The two sections which have given the most trouble in Peshawar live for the greater part of the year in the neighbourhood of the Khaibar Pass. These are the Zakka Khels and the Kuki Khels, most inveterate and audacious robbers, whose depredations up to the very walls of Peshawar, and even within the city and cantonments, have been notorious from the days of the Sikh occupation. During the past year attempts have been made, with very considerable success, to conciliate the Zakka Khels by inducing representatives of the different clans to come into Peshawar. This they have done, promising good behaviour for the future; and during the past year the conduct of the clan has been fairly good. Engaging very little in trade of any kind, and possessing sufficient food in their own hills to support themselves, and being moreover difficult to attack, it must be expected that they will be, for a long time to come, more or less addicted to plunder, which has been from time immemorial the custom and pride of the Afridi race. The Kuki Khels have, on the whole, been well behaved; the principal reason of this being that they are active traders, and it is their interest to remain on good terms with the Government. The last affair of any importance was on the 4th April 1875, when a police constable was wounded and five mules carred off by Kuki Khel robbers; but the whole of these were recovered. There are no other cases pending against this clan.

50. The only event of any importance on the Kohat border has been the closing of the Kohat Pass and the blockade of that section of the Afridis responsible for its management. Negotiations towards the close of last year were opened with the Pass Afridis for the repairing of the road through it, forming the direct communication between Kohat and Peshawar. An option was given to the Pass men either to improve the road themselves or forego the allowances paid them for the use of it. The Sherakki clan of the tribe opposed the measure in so insolent a manner, insulting the messengers of the Deputy Commissioner, as to necessitate the closing of the road to British subjects, and further misconduct on the part of this section led to the blockade of the whole of the Pass Afridis, as they were either unwilling or unable to coerce the refractory section. The blockade still continues, and two other sections, the Hasanzais and Asha Khels, it has been necessary to include in it. The institution of this blockade has, as a matter of course, led to some raiding and robbery in British territory, but these offences have been comparatively few and unimportant.

The blockade of the Pass Afridis.

The blockade is enforced by additional police levies without any movement of troops and without any cost to the Government; any additional expense being met by the suspension of the allowance ordinarily granted to the Pass Afridis. The blockaded sections are almost entirely dependent upon trade with Kohat and Peshawar, especially as carriers of salt, so that they suffer materially from the maintenance of the blockade, and the great body of the Afridi tribe have, so far, shown no inclination to join them.

The Orakzais.

51. The Orakzai tribe live on the northern Kohat border, and in the mountainous region known as Tira, to which they retire in the summer months. They are a powerful and fanatical tribe, and one section, the Daulatzai, committed many acts of hostility, till 1869, when an expedition against them and the Bazotis, another section of the tribe inhabiting the immediate vicinity of Kohat, brought them to their senses. Since that time they gave no cause of offence until certain sections joined the Pass Afridis in the present dispute. Their whole border, together with that of the Zaimusht and Turi Afghan tribes, has during the past year been absolutely free from serious outrages, and the few cases of petty plundering which have occurred, have been, as a rule, promptly adjusted by the councils of the tribes concerned. A long-standing feud between the Tira Muhammadan sects of the Sunis and Shias in the Orakzai and Afridi tribes threatened inter-tribal warfare during the past year; but this in no way affected British territory, and the only action necessary on the part of the British authorities was to prevent the residents of the frontier villages proceeding into Tira to take part in the disturbances.

The Zaimusht.

52. The Zaimusht Afghans are physically a fine race, inhabiting the hills between the Miranzai valley and the Kurm river. They have generally maintained a friendly attitude, and this it is their interest to do, as they trade very largely with British territory. As has been noted, no cases during the past year are recorded against them. A trade route, though not of first class importance, passes through their country, which the expedition of General Sir N. Chamberlain proved to be less difficult than had been supposed.

The Turis.

53. The tribe next in order is the Turis, inhabiting the valley of the Kurm river. They are a wild, fierce, thieving tribe; but in recent years they have respected British territory, their feuds with their Waziri neighbours to the south, alone causing some disturbances on the frontier. During the past year this portion of the border has, however, been perfectly tranquil.

The Waziris.

54. One of the most important Pathan tribes on the north-west border is the Wazirs or Waziris, who inhabit the whole country to the west of the Trans-Indus frontier from Thal and the Minranzai valley, on the Kurm river, to the Gumal Pass on the southern border of Tank. They are strong in numbers, and brave and powerful individually, making excellent soldiers, many of them taking service in British regiments. There is little tribal cohesion among them, the different individual sections being generally indifferent to the action or policy of the others, some behaving in a friendly manner, others remaining persistently hostile.

The Mahsud section of the Wazirs.

The powerful section of the Mahsuds, inhabiting the immediate border of Bannu and Tank, for many years gave great trouble, and their raids have disturbed the whole of the frontier from Bannu to Kulachi. Their country is exceedingly difficult to penetrate, being intersected by deep ravines, the only roads being through difficult passes, while a blockade affects this tribe less than many others with a smaller trade, for the reason that the Waziri country is fertile, well watered and well wooded, and the tribe is able to support itself on the product of its fields and cattle. Of the Mahsuds there are three main sections, the Alazais, the Shaman Khels and the Balolzais. The first have been friendly during the past ten years, and their intercourse with the British Government has been uninterrupted. The Balolzais, mustering some 8,000 fighting men, which is more than the other two sections can together muster, have ever been among the most inveterate of our foes, and in 1860 their conduct had become so outrageous that it was necessary to send against them an expedition of more than 5,000 men, under General Chamberlain. Their chief town, Kanigorum, was occupied, and the section was heavily fined, but the spirit of the tribe was unbroken, and in 1861 a murderous outrage necessitated their proscription and exclusion from British territory. At last, after years of turbulence, the Balolzais submitted in 1873 to the Government. They agreed for the future to restore property plundered in British territory, to pay compensation for the death or injury of British subjects, and to submit, in the case of any proved offence, to any fine that might be inflicted at the discretion of the Government. For past misconduct they paid down in cash an indemnity of upwards of Rs. 10,000, and, in return, the section was re-admitted to the privileges of intercourse and trade, and its political prisoners were released. Hostages for the observance of the terms, being thirty-three representative men of the different clans, were sent to Dera Ismail Khan, these being liable to imprisonment or deportation if the conditions of the engagement made were violated.

From 1868 the Shaman Khel section had been subjected, owing to outrages committed by them, to the same disabilities and restraints as their Balolzai tribesmen. But in 1873, many of the clan having fallen as prisoners into our hands, they accepted terms offered them by the Government, and in 1874 the Lieutenant-Governor received the submission of the representatives of all the sections of the Mahsud tribe at Tank, an event unprececented in the history of the Waziri tribe.

The Tank valley and its management.

55. The semi-independent district of Tank, ruled by a Nawab related by blood to the Mahsud Wazirs, had long been the most unsatisfactory part of the Punjab border. The whole arrangements for police control and for necessary communications with the independent tribes in the neighbouring hills were in the hands of the Nawab, whose influence, great though it may have been, was still insufficient to control his warlike and savage neighbours, whose raids, robberies and murders were incessant in the Tank valley. This state of things became at length so intolerable, that in 1872–73, after the most careful consideration of the whole case, the Lieutenant-Governor submitted certain proposals in regard to this district, which in 1874 received the sanction of the Government of India. The police administration was taken out of the hands of the Nawab, who was compensated for this loss of dignity by a very large increase to his revenue, which the land assessment, then being carried on in the district, permitted the Government to satisfactorily arrange. The revenue administration was left in his hands, his eldest son being appointed the chief revenue officer. The Mahsud Waziris were encouraged to go direct to the district officer of Dera Ismail Khan or Bannu, as the case might be, to state any grievances of which they might have to complain; and the intervention of the Nawab of Tank between the independent tribes and the British Government was ended.

The Gumal trade route.

56. Through the Mahsud country passes the Gumal route, the road chiefly used by the Povinda traders between Hindustan and Ghazni and Kandahar, comparatively easy for laden camels, with abundant water and forage. Next to the Bolan, this route, more commonly known as the Ghwalari, is the most important on the North-west Frontier. In 1861 the trade passing by this road was estimated at Rs. 33,00,000, and in 1870 at Rs. 50,00,000. The improvement of this route has been long desired by the Government, and on the submission of all the sections of the Mahsuds in 1874, opportunity was taken to discuss the subject with them. The difficulty of the road is chiefly owning to the hereditary feud between the Mahsuds and the Povindas, though the former have been the aggressors and the latter the attacked. Should the behaviour of the Mahsuds continue satisfactory, it is proposed to engage them to defend the road, or at any rate to guarantee its protection.

The satisfactory result of the Tank arrangements.

57. The result of the arrangements made in Tank, together with the acceptance of pass responsibility by the powerful Bhittanni tribe who hold the lands at the mouths of the principal passes leading into the Mahsud country, has been to altogether change the character of the border during the past year. The Bannu frontier has been tranquil; and on the Tank border the improvement has been still more marked. Previous to the changes effected in 1874–75 in the administration of Tank, serious crime by the Mahsuds and Bhittannis was matter of weekly or even more frequent occurrence. The total number of offences for the past year amounts to only 18, in all of which full redress was obtained. The policy of the Government with regard to the Tank district would thus seem to have been justified by the marked increase of security to life and property on that border.

58. To the immediate south of the Waziris come the Sharanis, living opposite the British subdivision of Kolachi and Draband. Since the expedition against this tribe in 1853, in which they received severe punishment, the Sharanis have generally behaved well. In March 1875 friendly relations with them were for a time endangered by the misconduct of the Gandapur chief, Guldad Khan, who took advantage of the authority allowed him and the confidence reposed in him by the Government to erect a fort in Sharani territory, a step at once opposed by the tribe, who attacked his followers engaged in this work and killed 15 of them. For thus taking the law into their own hands, although the provocation was great, it was necessary to impose upon them a fine, which was at once paid, while the offending Gandapur chief was deposed and compensation made from his allowances to the families of the slain.

The Sharanis.

59. That portion of Dera Ismail Khan occupied by the Ushtranas and Kasranis has been entirely quiet throughout the year. The Ushtranas are a Pathan tribe who inhabit the outer hills opposite the southern portion of the Dera Ismail Khan district. They are a brave and warlike tribe, but the great number of the tribe that has acquired lands in Dera Ismail Khan has for many years past guaranteed their conduct being peaceable and friendly.

The southern portion of the Dera Ismail Khan district.

The Ushtranas

60. The Kasranis are a poor and feeble tribe inhabiting a desert and rugged country, and in the early days of annexation gave much annoyance by their constant raids. Their offences were crowned in 1852 by an audacious attack on the town of Dera Fatah Khan, which resulted in an expedition the following year under Major Nicholson. Between them and their neighbours, the Bozdars, a blood feud of long standing exists which has given rise to many inter-tribal disputes and engagements. But, so far as the British Government is concerned, the conduct of the Kasranis has for some years past, indeed since 1870, been satisfactory. Very many of the tribe inhabit the plain country, and although, like all Biluch tribes, of most predatory tastes originally, they are gradually settling down into a more honest life.

The Kasranis.

61. The state of the Dera Ghazi Khan frontier, reaching from the Bozdars on the north to the Bugtis on the border of Sind, has been comparatively undisturbed during the year, and all the property of British subjects carried across the border has been recovered. The means used for the recovery of stolen property, or for obtaining an equivalent from the offending tribes, are exceedingly simple. The constitution of the Biluch tribes facilitates such recoveries, and all that is usually required to be done is to hold the chiefs and headmen in charge of the passes responsible for the restoration of cattle or other property taken through those passes to independent territory. Our relations with the chiefs of the trans-border tribes in the Dera Ghazi Khan district are generally on a footing so amicable that little difficulty is experienced in obtaining restitution, through them, of property carried away into their territory, or its value. The estimated value of all such property, consisting chiefly of camels and bullocks, during the past year was less than Rs. 4,000, or about a quarter of the aggregate of the preceding year, and the whole, as already stated, was recovered. Most of these petty thefts were committed on the Bozdar and and Gurchani border. No British subject was murdered by hillmen, and there were no raids properly so called. Upwards of a thousand head of cattle, stolen from Upper Sind by members of the Marri or Bugtee tribes, were either restored to their owners, or an equivalent exacted from the offending tribe, through the District Officer of Dera Ghazi Khan and his Assistant at Rajanpur, and the headmen of the Biluch tribes on the lower portion of the Dera Ghazi Khan frontier, the assistance of the Mazari chief being very conspicuous.

The Dera Ghazi Khan frontier. Its complete tranquillity.

62. Only one event of the smallest importance occurred involving the violation of British territory. This was due to an inter-tribal dispute between the Khetrans on the one hand, and Bozdars and Bugtis on the other. A large party of Khetrans entered British territory stealthily by night, and penetrated one of the Bozdar passes and plundered the first Bozdar village they reached, killing some of the occupants, returning after this outrage by the same road. Although this raid was committed beyond the border, yet British territory had been violated by the Khetrans passing through it, They were intercepted on their return by our troops and militia, and compelled to disgorge their spoil, which was restored to the Bozdars, and a fine was also imposed, which has been paid.

Khetran and Bozdar disputes in foreign territory.

63. Of the tribes on the Dera Ghazi Khan border, their attitude having thus been shown to be altogether friendly to the British Government, and only giving trouble by feuds among themselves in the independent hills, it is necessary to note but very few particulars.

The Biluch tribes on the Dera Ghazi Khan border.

64. First, the Bozdars, who occupy the hills on the immediate north of the Dera Ghazi Khan border, and who, up till 1857, gave constant trouble to the local authorities by raiding into the plain country. The tract which they occupy is very barren, and its character accounts in a great measure for their thievish habits. In 1857, when their offences, robberies, and raids had become so numerous as to render punishment imperative, an expedition under General Chamberlain, and numbering over 3,000 men, entered their hills by the Sanghar pass, and inflicted on them severe loss, the tribe submitting to the terms imposed of compensation for the property stolen and the lives lost in their raids in British territory, and giving hostages for their good conduct in the future. Since this expedition the conduct of the Bozdars has, on the whole, been friendly.

The Bozdars.

65. The Ketrans are a Pathan tribe, with no very defined boundary of the territory they inhabit, but generally occupying the country opposite the Luni Pass. They are an industrious and an agricultural tribe; their country is open, and a blockade paralyses their trade; consequently their conduct, from a consideration of their own interests gives rise to no other complaint than that they are, though not themselves thieves, notoriously receivers of stolen property, which they dispose of for other tribes. But the enforcement of pass responsibility, and compensation for everything stolen, has brought this means of profit to an end.

The Khetrans.

66. All the tribes to the south are Biluch. First come the Kosas, a brave and formerly a very influential tribe, and many of their number have done good service in the ranks of the British army. Their internal disputes have, however, reduced the tribe to political insignificance, although the richness of their country and their industrious habits make them, for their numbers, one of the wealthiest tribes on the border. There is no cause of complaint against them.

The Kosas.

67. The Lagharis occupy the country opposite the famous shrine and pass of Sakki Sarwar, Choti and Kura. The head of the tribe, Jamal Khan, is an exceedingly intelligent and enterprising man, possessing great influence with the Khetrans and other tribes, and his services have been largely utilized by successive district officers. For some years past the conduct of this tribe has been excellent.

The Lagharis.

68. Next come the Gurchanis, a mongrel tribe of half Biluch descent. A large section resides within the Dera Ghazi Khan district in the Jampur subdivision, in the neighbourhood of the Harrand fort. For many years the Gurchanis had an exceedingly bad reputation as robbers and raiders, and their border was always disturbed. But in 1857, when the town and fortress of Harrand was attacked by the assembled Marris, Bugtis and Khetrans, the Gurchani chief, Ghulam Haidar Khan, with a view of re-habilitating his people in the estimation of the Government, joined cordially the English, and, with the Lund tribe, attacked and defeated the raiders, with the loss of their leader and 257 men killed. The privileges and rewards which were granted to the Gurchanis for this excellent service have thoroughly attached them to the British Government, and latterly they have given no cause of complaint.

The Gurchanis.

69. The Marris acknowledge the nominal supremacy of the Khan of Khelat, and their lands do not actually touch British territory; but their conduct has a great effect on the peace of our border, and their control forms one of the most important duties of the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ghazi Khan. The tribe, which is a powerful one, numbering 4,000 fighting men, has always been distinguished for its habits of robbery and violence; their country is large and difficult, while the importance of the trade routes which pass through it make the orderly conduct of the Marris of the greatest importance. Their nominal allegiance to the Khan of Khelat has not prevented them from committing constant raids into his country, and it is due to them that the rich tract of Katchi, in Khelat territory, instead of being highly cultivated and covered with populous villages, is almost deserted. The arrangements which have been effected in the last few years, and notably since the conference held by the present Lieutenant-Governor with the Sind authorities at Mithankot in 1871, when the Sind and Punjab system of policy towards this and the Bugti tribe was made uniform, have resulted in a great change. The attitude of the Marris towards the

The Marris.

British Government is now exceedingly friendly, and their headmen have given cordial assistance to Major Sandeman, the Deputy Commissioner, in his recent visits to Khelat territory. In former days the raids by Marris committed on British territory were innumerable.

The Bugtis.

70. Of the Bugti tribe a large number inhabit British territory, the rest living in the rocky and barren country on the Rajanpur border. Like the Marris, this was a tribe absolutely devoted to robbery. Their allegiance to the Khan of Khelat, was, like that of the Marris, nominal, and the greater proportion of their robberies and their raids were committed in Khelat territory. With the Marris they have been continually at war, only uniting with them to commit raids on the lands of their neighbours. During the last four or five years the conduct of the Bugtis towards the British Government has been satisfactory. Their chiefs have accompanied the Deputy Commissioner to Khelat, and have given him every assistance in their power. Many of the tribe have taken service in the Frontier Militia, for which their chief, Ghulam Murtaza Khan, receives an annual subsidy of Rs. 8,880.

The Mazaris.

71. The Biluch tribe to the extreme south of the Dera Ghazi Khan border is the Mazari. The majority reside in British territory, where they own a large number of villages, and their chief, Imam Baksh Khan, holds large estates and subsidies from Government, to which he has often rendered the most distinguished service. Formerly of very predatory habits, the Mazari tribe have settled down peaceably as cultivators.

The whole of the Derajat frontier more tranquil than at any former time.

72. The above resumé will show that the state of the Derajat border during the past year will compare favourably with its condition in any previous year since the annexation of the Punjab.

The internal administration of frontier districts.

The regular settlements of land revenue.

73. It is now necessary to notice certain matters with reference to the internal administration of the Trans-Indus districts. First, perhaps, in importance, are the measures undertaken with reference to the land revenue demand. The summary settlements made shortly after annexation were necessarily rude and defective. The assessment of land revenue was unequal, and the record of rights most incomplete. The regular settlements have now been undertaken in all the frontier districts; that of Hazara is completed and sanctioned by the Government; those of Peshawar and Dera Ghazi Khan are also completed and about to be submitted for final sanction. Operations in certain subdivisions of Dera Ismail Khan and Bannu are finished, and the assessment reports submitted. Those of Kohat and the remaining portions of Bannu and Dera Ismail Khan will be completed during next year.

The policy of Government in frontier settlements.

74. Although in some cases a large increase of Government revenue will be the result of the re-settlement, owing chiefly to the great extension of cultivated area since the summary settlements, yet it has been the desire of the Government, here as elsewhere, to keep the revenue demand within such limits as to ensure the contentment and loyalty of the population. In border villages a system has been introduced of assessing the village lands at the full average rate of the district, and then remitting a portion, often as much as a third of the whole payment, in consideration of the exposure of the inhabitants to attack from independent tribes, and on condition of active loyalty and union with the local authorities in preserving the peace of the border. The deviations from the commonly accepted principles of revenue policy which the state of frontier society has shown to be necessary are nowhere considerable, and are such as the local peculiarities of any special portion of a large province might reasonably involve. Care has been taken to recognise, by the liberal grant of jagirs and allowances, the interests and position of the heads of the tribal and rural communities. It has been the desire of the Punjab Government to invest its revenue policy, in the frontier districts, with the character best suited to a country whose inhabitants, rapidly developing or perhaps disintegrating under the influences of British rule into village communities of the familiar type, are still, as corporate bodies, associated with the Government for the defence of British territory against attack from without.

Special and fluctuating assessments.

75. In a few tracts, and notably in certain riverside villages in the Isa Khel and Dera Ismail Khan subdivisions and in the submontane region of the last-named district, systems of fluctuating assessments have been approved in consequence of the capricious changes of the river Indus, or owing to the precarious condition of cultivation, dependent alone upon irrigation from hill streams; but these varieties of land assessment have no special frontier significance, and are adopted in other parts of the province where the conditions are similar, and where such divergence from the usual procedure is needed for the relief of agriculturists.

The increase in the cultivated area. Appendix H., p. 122.

The statements attached to this report give the statistics of the increase in the land revenue and in the cultivated and assessable area, and show how large an amount of prosperity has accrued since the date of the summary settlements.

The introduction of regular police.

76. A second measure of importance, as affecting the internal administration of the districts, has been the introduction of the regular police. This has been effected with certain modifications, the commissioner of the division taking the place held, Cis-Indus, by the inspector-general of police; the deputy commissioners of districts holding the place of the deputy inspectors-general, having the whole control of the police in their respective charges, with special police officers subordinate to them. This measure, though at first it was opposed, on theoretical grounds, by many frontier officers, has worked thus far well, and those who most objected to it are now ready to admit its advantages.

Appendix I., p. 127.

The effect of this measure on the statistics of crime.

77. With reference to statistics of offences committed, it must be especially borne in mind that on a frontier like that in question, which has, by slow degrees, been brought from a state of anarchy to comparative tranquillity, the number of offences might reasonably be expected, with the introduction of a rigid procedure and an efficient police, to appear to increase rather than to diminish. The theft of a single bullock in 1876 attracts almost as much attention, and occasions as much correspondence and inquiry, as a raid in force in 1856. Even murders were often not reported at all, and ordinary thefts and cattle-lifting were so accepted by the people as the ordinary incidents of frontier life that they did not form the subject of special complaint. The people were accustomed to defend themselves; they even ploughed their fields armed with sword and matchlock; and it has only been increasing tranquility and security which have made them regard crimes against person or property as matters requiring the consideration and action of the Government. The population of the frontier districts has further increased very rapidly since annexation; and when these facts are allowed their due weight, the statistics of crime, which show a steady diminution in the number of offences since 1868 (the figures for 1875 being for the first time increased by the addition of the offences on the Tank border, hitherto excluded from the statements), will probably be considered to show a satisfactory advance. It must lastly be remembered that the general disarmament, which has long been enforced rigidly throughout the Cis-Indus territory, has never been extended Trans-Indus, and thus, among a naturally turbulent, hot-blooded and fanatical population, one, too, especially sensitive in the matter of female chastity, and in a tract where escape from justice across the border is so easy and pursuit so impossible, crimes of violence must necessarily be far more frequent than among a disarmed and less excitable population. So far as these crimes are concerned, the Peshawar district has always had an evil pre-eminence, and, at the present time, the murders in this district from year to year may be said to equal those in the other five Trans-Indus districts put together. To this subject the attention of the Lieutenant-Governor has been most seriously directed for some years, as voluminous correspondence with the Government of India and the annual reports of the Punjab Government prove. The state of crime in the Peshawar district cannot be considered satisfactory; but the Frontier Regulations, which have been before noted, and the power which has, within the last few months been granted to the Puujab Government of disarming villages or portions of the district in which crimes of violence are specially rife, will, it is to be hoped and may reasonably be expected, have each year an appreciable effect in diminishing the amount of violent crime.

No general disarmament has been enforced on the frontier.

Crime in the Peshawar district.

Public Works system.

78. It is necessary to say a few words on the system under which Public Works are undertaken in the frontier districts; and first it may be noted that, for Public Works purposes, the cantonment of Peshawar, with its five outposts and connecting roads, has been made over to the Military Works Branch, under the immediate control of the Government of India. With this exception, all works on the frontier required in connexion with the troops, and all civil works that have not been entrusted to municipalities or to district committees are, as in other parts of the province, constructed and maintained by the Public Works establishment under the orders of the local Government.

79. The Frontier Public Works Divisions are Hazara, Kohat, and Dera Ismail Khan. Each is in charge of an officer of Royal Engineers, with such a staff of assistants and subordinates as may be suitable for the work to be done.

The Public Works Frontier Divisions.

All works requiring professional supervision (excepting municipal works) are carried out by Public Works officers; but there are many of a less important character not requiring close professional superintendence, in which the assistance of the local officers, both civil and military, is very valuable, such for example as a petty military work at a distant outpost, when it is at times convenient to employ the British officer of the Frontier Force who may be on duty there as a Public Works agent, to see that the work is properly done and to pay the workmen.

Co-operation of Public Works and Civil officers and officers of the Frontier Force.

Again, in the construction and repair of the less important civil buildings and roads, the assistance of the civil establishments is both useful and economical, particularly in the more remote tracts. The civil officers have charge of many roads and buildings, and in connexion with their maintenance and construction act as agents of the Public Works Department, rendering accounts to the Examiner.

80. In those towns where municipalities exist, the committees raise their own income, and expend it, in accordance with rules framed under the Punjab Municipal Act of 1873.

Municipal and district expenditure on Public Works.

Funds raised under the Punjab Local Rates Act of 1871 are administered by District Committees guided by special rules issued for their observance.

81. The Public Works arrangements are not peculiar to the frontier (excepting in the employment of officers of the Frontier Force as Public Works agents), but are similar to those which obtain in all other parts of the province. There are no difficulties in carrying them out, and for administrative convenience it is most desirable that over the whole Punjab the same general system should prevail.

The Public Works arrangements on the frontier are similar to those all over the province.

Under the local Government are all the cantonments for troops on the frontier. This has obvious advantages in the more special attention that can be given to their sanitation and improvement. The Sanitary Commissioner of the Punjab, whose duties do not include the care of the Imperial cantonments, has, under the direction of the Lieutenant-Governor, been engaged in 1873 and 1874 in a careful examination of the condition of frontier cantonments, with especial reference to the prevalence of pneumonia, and his suggestions will, it may be hoped, have good results in improving the sanitary condition of these stations.

Frontier cantonments.

82. Similarly, the operations of the Irrigation Department are under the control of the local Government. During the last few years, in the districts of Peshawar, Bannu, Dera Ismail Khan and Dera Ghazi Khan, extensive surveys have been made with the view of improving existing, and designing new canals. The project for the Swat River Canal to water the Doaba and Hashtnagar plains in the Peshawar district has been submitted in detail, and has been sanctioned by the Secretary of State. The construction of this canal was strongly advocated by the Punjab Government, which considered it desirable to develope cultivation on the Peshawar border and to encourage, by facilities of irrigation the settlement in the plain of members of independent tribes.

Operations of the Irrigation Department.

The Swat Canal.

83. The Trans-Indus parts of the Bannu and Dera Ismail Khan districts have been closely examined with the view to giving to existing canals an additional supply from the various rivers and mountain torrents which pass through these districts on their way to the Indus. As the result of these investigations proposals for various works have been made, and estimates of their costs are now being prepared in communication with the local Civil and Settlement officers.

Derajat canals.

A canal commenced by Abdul Rahim Khan, of Isá Khel, has been purchased from him, as he was unable to complete it.

A very large project for extending and supplementing the existing irrigation in the Dera Ghazi Khan district was drawn up some time ago. Its cost, however, was calculated to be so great, and the returns from it so uncertain, that it is not considered advisable to recommend its adoption to the Government of India.

Of the existing system of canals in the Derajat, the principal ones are managed by officers of the Irrigation Department. A large area, varying from about 120,000 to 170,000 acres, is irrigated in the course of the year, and on the cultivation of this irrigated tract the land revenue mainly depends.

84. The efforts of the Punjab Government to maintain the legitimate influence of the chiefs and headmen over their clansmen have been generously seconded by the Government of India, who have sanctioned liberal grants and emoluments, both by deductions from the land revenue demand in favour of the headmen of villages, and in jagirs and allowances to the principal chiefs. Many of these latter have performed, both in the critical days of 1849 and 1857, and generally in the political administration of the border, the most loyal and distinguished services. Prominent among these may be mentioned the chief of the Khattaks in the Kohat district, Nawab Sir Khwaja Muhammad Khan, K.C.S.I.; Abdul Majid Khan, chief of the Kalil tribe in the Peshawar district; Fatah Khan and Sarfaraz Khan, chiefs of the Mohmand tribe in the same district; the late Nawab Sir Faujdar Khan, all of whose jagirs have been continued, together with the title of Nawab, to his son; Nawab Sarfaraz Khan, of Dera Ismail Khan, and Nawab Ghulam Hassan Khan, formerly British agent at Kabul; and, in the Dera Ghazi Khan district, Jamal Khan, chief of the Lagharis, and Imam Baksh Khan, the Mazari chief. These noblemen and gentry, though their services have generally had some connexion with the frontier, are still among the most important of the provincial aristocracy, and it is to Lahore that they look for the recognition of their services, and for the representation of their claims and grievances to the Government of India. Their sons and relations receive a liberal share of the higher judicial and administrative appointments in the gift of the local Government; and should the day ever arrive when, for reasons which it may be hoped that the statement of facts here recorded will prove not now to exist, it might be desirable to remove the Trans-Indus districts from the charge of the Punjab Government, such a change would, in the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor, be viewed by the chiefs and people of the entire frontier with extreme discontent and alarm.

The chiefs on the frontier; their services and rewards.

85. This report has now, with unavoidable briefness and incompleteness, touched upon all those points on which Her Majesty's Secretary of State desired information.

Conclusion.

The frontier tribes are slowly but surely losing their suspicion of and dislike to the British Government. The change is gradual; but if we look back 20 or even 10 years, we see how substantial has been the progress made. They are still savage, fanatical, and ignorant; but they have learnt to believe in the fairness of our intentions, and so far appreciate our rule that they leave their hills in large numbers, abandon their predatory life, and settle quietly in British territory. It may reasonably be questioned whether any change in the administration could work more beneficially or influence the independent tribes more quickly or more powerfully for good.

With the people in the interior of the districts the case is similar, though in a less marked degree. They have reached a more advanced stage of social evolution than their mountain neighbours, and under laws which secure life and property, and discourage ontbursts of savage sentiment, they are losing their tribal homogeneity for that multiform heterogeneity which, in its ever increasing complexity, is the result and sign of increasing enlightenment and development. That the Punjab Government have freely acknowledged that this development is still backward is evident by the tendency of the legislation which they have proposed to the Imperial Government as suited to frontier districts. But every effort is being made to encourage the social advance of the frontier population, by withdrawing them from their sullen isolation, and extending to them the rights and privileges which belong to the inhabitants of more tranquil districts. They have now, it may fairly be said, entered, with somewhat hesitating steps, the community of enlightened and civilized men. They approve the equal law of the courts; in the less fanatical districts they are eager to accept education for their children at the hands of the Government. Their chiefs and representative men become honorary magistrates, and are as efficient, in time of peace, as guardians of civil rights, as, in time of war, at the head of their clans in the field. To separate these chiefs and people from the wholesome influences of the civil administration, and to deny them a share in the life and progress and prosperity of the Punjab as a united province, would, if necessary, be a matter for profound regret. It would almost seem a retrograde step in the history of civilization for the British Government to drive back a capable and intelligent race into the isolation from which it is being so slowly and painfully won, and compel it to produce, by its very isolation, the tribal peculiarities which, though they must be accepted as the necessary attributes of one stage of national life, are still the badge and sign of social degradation.

LEPEL GRIFFIN,
Officiating Secretary to Government, Punjab.

October 1876.

APPENDIX H.

COPY of Letter No. 48 S. M., dated 4th September 1876, from the Secretary to Financial Commissioner, Punjab, to the Secretary to Government, Punjab.

WITH reference to your confidential demi-official dated 10th August, calling for statements showing for six frontier districts—

I. The increase in assessed and assessable area as compared with the first settlements;

II. The amount of inams which have been sanctioned in the different settlements for chiefs and headmen,—

I am desired to forward three statements prepared under the Financial Commissioner's supervision, with the following explanatory remarks.

2. Area and Resources.—Statement I. gives, so far as it is available, information regarding the comparative cultivation and resources of the six districts at summary settlement and at the recently completed or now progressing settlements.

The cultivated area may be regarded as tolerably correct. Where it has not been possible to obtain the area under cultivation at summary settlement for a portion of the district, owing to the absence of measurements, a comparison has been made for those tahsils on account of which statistics are forthcoming upon which a comparison can be instituted, or else the census returns of 1855 have been consulted.

The assessable area, or cultivated and abandoned, cannot be given with any approach to accuracy for former settlements, and no safe comparison can be made.

The population given in the Settlement Officer's returns is frequently only the agricultural portion of the population, so the column has been filled up for the most part from the census returns of 1855 and 1868. The limits of the districts in the Derajat, however, have been so much altered that in these districts the Settlement Officer's figures have had to be taken. For Bannu no returns are available at present. The Settlement Officer has been addressed, but meanwhile, as it is considered best not to delay this reference, the figures given in the census returns of 1855 and 1868 have been compared, the districts of Leia and Dera Ismail Khan in the former representing the same area as Bannu and Dera Ismail Khan in the latter.

3. Assignments.—The statement showing assignments (No. III.) is a transcript of the annual return accompanying the Financial Commissioner's report. As this is not exhaustive, remarks have been added so as to convey an idea of the total amount assigned. There is considerable difficulty in compiling a statement of these assignments upon any other plan at a short notice; but as in the recent settlements all assignments were considered and reported for orders of Government, it may fairly be said that to some extent all the Peshawar, Hazara, and Dera Ghazi Khan assignments have been granted or continued at these settlements.

4. Remarks on each District.—A few remarks will be offered in regard to each district, which the Financial Commissioner hopes will give a succinct view of the fiscal property of each.

5. Peshawar.—The Sikh collections in this district amounted in 1842–43 to Rs. 9,96,944, including assignments, which reached Rs. 2,89,767. The jama at the summary settlement of 1851 was Rs. 7,80,183, and the present jama Rs. 8,09,963, of which Rs. 1,44,876 are assigned. The incidence of the summary settlement in tahsils Peshawar, Nowshera, and Doaba Daudzai was Rs. 3-13-0 per acre of cultivation, but, notwithstanding that the demand has not been lowered at the recent settlement, cultivation has increased to such an extent (67 per cent.) that the rate per acre is now only Rs. 2-4-4. In the other three tahsils it falls at Re. 0-11-11 per acre.

Favourable assessments have been granted to border villages in this district; Rs. 38,000 of the Government demand has in this way been abated.

The proprietors of land in jagir villages have received the same favourable terms of assessment as their brethren in khalsa villages, and Government has compensated the jagirdars by large grants from the Imperial revenue.

The excise revenue has not increased since 1860–61, but the stamp revenue has risen from Rs. 24,079 to Rs. 62,716. The selling price of land has been steadily rising, and now amounts to 16 years' purchase of the Government demand, according to the annual returns received by the Financial Commissioner. Between 1855 and 1868 population increased 16 per cent.

6. Kohat.—For Kohat not much information is procurable. Between 1855 and 1868 cultivation increased 37 per cent.; population 43 per cent. The large jagirs held by the Khattak and Shakardarrah chiefs have not been assessed, so the total amount of assignments enjoyed cannot be given. The excise and stamp revenue both show a large increase between 1860–61 and 1875. The rise in price of land is very marked.

7. Hazara.—The extent to which this district has increased in prosperity has recently been fully reported by the Settlement Officer. Between 1864 and 1874 cultivation increased 26 per cent.; population between 1855 and 1868 rose 24 per cent. The amount of assignments in this district is Rs. 87,238. The stamp revenue has nearly tripled, and the selling price of land has largely increased. Although the assessment of the district was raised 35 per cent., yet the incidence of the new assessments was scarcely higher than that of the summary settlement when applied to the cultivated area of 1864.

8. Dera Ismail Khan.—Comparative statistics are available only for the Bhakkar and Leia tahsils. The increase in cultivation here has been 103 per cent., the whole being irrigated land. The assessments are under report. Upwards of a lakh of rupees are alienated to chiefs and others. The excise and stamp revenues show great elasticity. Land, however, is not so valuable here as in other districts.

9. Dera Ghazi Khan.—The recently concluded settlement shows an increase in cultivation of 103 per cent.; population 29 per cent.; ploughs 45 per cent.; cattle 36 per cent.; and although the assessment was enhanced 37 per cent., yet the rate on cultivation fell 50 per cent. lower than that of the summary settlement. The value of land is very high as compared with the Government demand on it. The excise and stamp revenues have doubled and quadrupled since 1860–61. The assignments in this district amount to Rs. 17,515, besides the tumandars' allowances, Rs. 35,000, and the Kalora jagir, valued at Rs. 13,715.

10. Bannu.—As before remarked, the only way in which any comparison of area can be effected is by taking the two districts of Leia and Dera Ismail Khan and comparing them with the present districts of Bannu and Dera Ismail Khan. The former were converted into the latter in 1860–61. The comparison does not show so favourably as in other districts, but as in the Bhakkar and Leia tahsils in cultivation has been shown by the Settlement Officer, Dera Ismail Khan, amounting to 103 per cent., the correctness of the census figures of 1868, which only give an increase of 2 per cent. on the two districts, may well be questioned. The demand has been lowered, reducing the incidence per acre of cultivation from Rs. 0-15-7 to Rs. 0-12-2. The Financial Commissioner hopes that the Settlement Officer may be able to supply further information, though it is not probable that he can do this for all tahsils.* The statistics for parganna Marwat have been received, and are added to the statement. From these it appears that in the Marwat tahsil the increase in cultivation since the first summary settlement is 40 per cent. This confirms the opinion above stated. The excise revenue has also expanded, and stamp income nearly tripled. Land fetches a good price, amounting to 21 years' purchase of the revenue. The assignments in Bannu are small, amounting to Rs. 10,085; but the Settlement Officer's proposals have not been received yet for any tahsil except Marwat, and in that tahsil he proposes a remission of revenue of about Rs. 3,700 to frontier villages.

No. 15.

RE-ORGANISATION OF THE FRONTIER.

MINUTE BY THE VICEROY. (Extract.)

Dated 22nd April 1877.

1. In February 1876 the Secretary of State addressed a despatch to the Government of India on the subject of the administration of the frontier and "the changes which, "under existing circumstances, seem necessary for the purpose of ensuring unity of "action in the government of the Western and North-western Frontier of India."

2. In this despatch the Secretary of State reviewed briefly the past administration of the frontier, and the evils which had arisen from the dual system of government. In so doing, he dwelt strongly on the necessity for unity of action, and for bringing the whole frontier under the direct control of the Government of India. He confined himself, however, to indicating broadly the various measures by which this object might be effected; leaving it to the Government of India to make proposals for carrying it out, and requesting an early expression of their views on the subject.

3. On the 7th April the Government of India replied to the above-mentioned despatch, expressing their unanimous opinion that the transfer of Sindh from Bombay to the Punjab is desirable both on political and administrative grounds; but deprecating any arrangement involving the severance from the Punjab of the frontier districts now under its control.

4. On the 13th of July the Secretary of State expressed, in reply, his satisfaction at finding his views with regard to Sindh in accord with those of the Government of India, but deferred any expression of opinion as to the future administration of the frontier,—a question which could, he observed, be better decided after I had had the opportunity of personally visiting the localities, and consulting the officers, concerned.

5. The negotiations going on in Khelat at the time of my arrival, and my own proposed autumn tour (for the express purpose of visiting the frontier districts, and meeting and conferring with the principal frontier officers on the spot), decided me to postpone action till matters in Khelat should be more settled. The Delhi assemblage, and the urgent calls of the Bombay and Madras famines, have still further delayed action in the matter. But, in the meanwhile, I have been assiduously collecting the detailed information requisite for a practical decision of this question, which is rendered peculiarly urgent by the character of recent and present events. In recognition of this fact, as also in deference to the expressed wishes of the Home Government, I now desire to submit to the earliest consideration of my colleagues a statement of those arrangements which, after careful and prolonged attention to the object in view, I believe to be best adapted for the attainment of it.

6. In the despatch of 3rd February 1876, the Secretary of State thus indicates the courses which suggest themselves to him:—"The whole territory of Sindh may be "annexed to the Punjab; or the lower portion of the valley of the Indus may be placed "under a distinct government; or the districts requiring special military supervision "may be separately administered; or some other division of these provinces, involving "larger re-adjustments, may be made." And he continues—"Local circumstances, "facilities of communication, the character of the population under British rule and of "the tribes beyond the frontier, must be taken into careful consideration before any "decision can be taken on this important point."

7. Before discussing the courses thus suggested, I would premise that there are three points on which there seems to me to be such an overwhelming concurrence of opinion that it is unnecessary for me to go over the arguments concerning them. The first point is the necessity for a re-adjustment of our frontier administration. This the Government of India has affirmed both by its action and in despatches and telegrams. It has been equally affirmed by the Home Government, which only withheld its sanction to the measures originally proposed by this Government because those measures appeared to it temporary and incomplete.

8. The second point is the severance of Sindh from Bombay. On this point the Government of India and the Secretary of State are in complete accord; and the Secretary of State, in his despatch of 13th July, authorises the early adoption of such measures as may be requisite to effect such a severance.

9. The third point is that the line of demarcation between the Sindh, or lower frontier, and the Punjab, or upper frontier, should be re-adjusted according to the distribution of the races on the border; so that the Belooch tribes may all come within one district and administration, and the Pathan tribes within the other. On this point there seems perfect unanimity of opinion.

10. Accepting, then, these three points, and keeping in view the main principles laid down by the Secretary of State, viz., unity of action, and direct control by the Government of India over our frontier policy, it seems to me that we have practically the choice between three courses: first, having severed Sindh from Bombay, and rectified its northern boundary, to form it into a separate province, directly under the Government of India; second, to attach Sindh to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab, either retaining its autonomy, or merging it entirely in the Punjab; third, to form a separate Trans-Indus district, under one head, who, as the Viceroy's representative, would directly control all frontier administration and trans-frontier relations.

11. Now, whether we approach this question from an à priori consideration of broad principles of policy and administration, or work upwards from the existing condition of affairs to an à posteriori solution of the difficulties and anomalies in which our frontier administration is now involved, we seem to be irresistibly led to the same conclusion.

12. It is not necessary for me to dwell again on the growing importance of our frontier politics,—their gradual merging into one great Central Asian question, and so into the Imperial policy of the British Government; nor on the effect which our advance in Khelat may have on our trans-frontier relations. It will probably be admitted that at no time has there been such urgent necessity for care, combined with vigour and unity of purpose and action, in our frontier policy. And, if it is asked how such desiderata can be best secured, the natural answer must be, by placing all in the hands of one officer; by selecting him with special regard to the peculiar requirements of the appointment, which should be high enough to command the services of the best men; by letting him have as little as possible to attend to apart from his purely frontier duties, and as much power as possible within his own jurisdiction; on the affairs of which he should be in direct communication with the Viceroy, who is the only exponent of Imperial policy in India.

13. Such a reply at once outlines a scheme in accordance with what I have mentioned as the third course open to us. The "one officer" cannot be the present Commissioner of Peshawur, whose control is limited to a small portion of our frontier, and whose position is not sufficiently high for the purpose here proposed; nor can it be the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, who, already burdened with the administration of a large province, can give but a fraction of his time and attention to frontier politics. The Foreign Secretary occupies a position equally unfitted for the personal supervision of the frontier: for he is not an executive officer; he is too far removed from the spot; and he has many other important duties to perform. The "one officer" required for this purpose must necessarily be a Chief Commissioner and Governor General's Agent, residing on the spot; and his authority must be co-extensive with the whole length of the frontier. Mixed up as are the tribes within and beyond our border, he must evidently have charge of the immediate frontier districts, as well as of all our trans-frontier relations; while, at the same time, his jurisdiction should be confined to the smallest possible limits, in order to diminish the pressure of his purely administrative work. To all those conditions, the Indus boundary naturally tends itself. Finally, as every unnecessary link between the responsible head and his executive agent tends to sub-divide responsibility and diminish efficiency, the Viceroy's agent on the frontier should be responsible to the Viceroy only, owing no divided allegiance to any local government.

14. This may, perhaps, appear too abstract and theoretical a way of dealing with a very practical question, but I think an examination of the actual condition of affairs, and of the several proposals hitherto made for the amelioration of it, will lead to the same conclusion. There has always been, and I conceive that there always must be, an officer of rank at Peshawur charged with the general management of our relations with the tribes on that frontier and with Cabul. Similarly there always has been, and always must be, an officer in Sindh, having in his hands the general conduct of our relations with the Belooch tribes and Khelat. And the question which this Government is now forced to decide (as the result of Major Sandeman's mission to Khelat, and the disagreements between him and Sir W. Merewether,) is—What should be the relations of these officers to one another, to the local governments, and to the Government of India?

15. The first course I have named, viz., to form Sindh into a separate province directly under the Government of India, does not seem to me to meet the difficulty at all. The dual system of government would remain, as before, with no better guarantee against the recurrence of similar complications, for at the very time that the disputes between the Sindh and Punjab officials obliged the Government of India to interfere, Sindh, so far as its political relations beyond the border are concerned, was directly under the Government of India.

16. There are other reasons also against forming Sindh into a separate province. On administrative grounds the multiplication of small independent provinces is undesirable; though, under exceptional circumstances, it may become necessary, but none of these exceptional circumstances exist in Sindh. On the contrary there are special reasons why that province should be attached to its great neighbour, the Punjab. Its revenue is small, its population scanty, and it is in no sense self dependent. Its importance is derived from two sources, both depending on extraneous support. The first is the harbour of Kurrachee, which is important, not as the port of Sindh, but as the future port of the Punjab, and the development of which depends more upon its communications and trade with the Punjab than on the comparatively small trade of Sindh. The second source of Sindh's importance is its position at the debouch of the Bolan Pass, thus commanding the great western gate of India. But this again, so far from being a reason for the isolation of Sindh as a separate province, suggests a strong argument for the closest possible connexion of Sindh with the rest of the frontier, of which it forms an integral part.

17. I think, therefore, that the first of the three above-mentioned proposals may be dismissed, and that we may pass on to the consideration of the second, viz., the attachment of Sindh to the Punjab, keeping both undivided. This proposal has, I am aware, received the support of many distinguished men, my predecessor among others, and I believe has, on more than one previous occasion, been considered and strongly advocated by the Government of India. It therefore claims our most attentive consideration, and I now propose to examine how far it fulfils the conditions essential to the attainment of the objects we have here to keep in view as the great, but only, justification of any change at all in the present regime.

18. These are, 1st, unity of action in the government of the Western and North-western Frontier; and, 2nd, the exercise of direct and effective control by the Government of India over the whole frontier. Now, from the context of the despatch we are acting on, as well as from the circumstances which gave rise to our receipt of that despatch, it is evident that what is there meant by the "government of the frontier" is not so much the internal administration of the frontier districts as the conduct of our relations with the frontier tribes and the independent states beyond our frontier. I cannot too often repeat that the tendency of recent political events has been more and more to merge minor tribal politics into the larger general question of our relations with the independent States beyond our border. We know for certain, for instance, that foreign intrigues are now active in these States, and that these intrigues react on the conduct of the independent tribes immediately located on our border.

* * * * * *

19. Now the great questions which, arising out of this situation, must necessarily and surely tend to swallow up, or govern, the minor ones of tribal policy, are questions not directed, or susceptible of direction, by the Punjab Government. As stated in the memorandum of that Government, the Punjab Government has no foreign policy of its own, and the Lieutenant-Governor merely acts as a medium of communication for carrying out the wishes, orders, and policy of the Supreme Government. The contingencies mentioned in the Secretary of State's despatch, as most needing the action of a single will along the whole frontier, are those which fall entirely outside the administrative scope or political influence of the Punjab Government. Placing the Khelat frontier under the Punjab Government would, therefore, do little towards securing the desired unity of action unless the Punjab Government were given a much greater control than it now exercises over the whole sphere of our trans-frontier politics. But this again would be directly at variance with the second object proposed, viz., the more direct and unembarrassed management of frontier affairs by the Government of India.

20. At present the Commissioner at Peshawur practically obeys two masters, for while he receives instructions regarding local politics and administration from the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, he receives his orders regarding the larger trans-frontier politics direct from the Government of India. In the same way, the Commissioner in Sindh formerly received his orders from Bombay on matters of administration, and from the Government of India on matters of foreign policy. It has already been found necessary to place the present Governor General's Agent for Beloochistan, Major Sandeman, more directly under the Government of India. I cannot consider the present dual system of managing our relations with the tribes and independent States beyond the Punjab border as conducive to administrative efficiency, or such as it is, from any point of view, desirable to extend and perpetuate.

21. Of the friction inevitable under such a system, we have, at the present moment, an illustration in the correspondence still going on with Bombay regarding the removal of Colonel Loch. If an officer appointed by a local Government, and performing his duties to the entire satisfaction of the local Government, is removed because in another branch of his duties he has failed to give satisfaction to the Government of India, such removal cannot be effected without giving rise to considerable irritation on the part of the local Government. But the evil lies deeper than this. If there be one department of the Government, for the administration of which, more than of any other, the Viceroy is directly responsible, it is the Foreign Department. This department he directs, not merely as head of the Government of India, but, unlike all other departments, personally as head of the department itself. This, therefore, is, above all others, the one department in which the selection of officers should rest entirely in the hands of the Viceroy. Under the present system, however, the Viceroy has to carry out the most important and delicate of all the duties devolving on him, not through agents of his own selection, but through officers selected for him by the Punjab Government, and looking to that Government for their advancement.

22. I am aware that it is urged in favour of the present dual system, that it has worked well hitherto. But on this point the Viceroy is necessarily the best authority; and with the fullest appreciation of the loyalty and ability with which I have been served by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the Commissioner of Peshawur, I am bound to say that, from my assumption of office up to the present moment, the existing system has been to me a source of grievous embarrassment. Under this system, either the Lieutenant-Governor must be made the channel of all correspondence on frontier matters, and in that case, the most delicate, confidential, and urgent communications can only be sent through him with a risk of misconception, a certainty of delay, a greatly increased chance of publicity, and no compensatory advantage whatever; or else he feels himself slighted, kept in the dark about important matters closely affecting his own duties, and entitled to complain that his subordinates have been practically withdrawn from dependence on his orders. By the growth of this system, the Punjab Government, though inferior in status to others which are necessarily subordinate to the Supreme Administration, has now virtually become the Foreign Office of the Government of India; and a Foreign Office more inconveniently situated or organised could not possibly be devised. The present arrangement is, indeed, so palpable an anomaly, and so contrary to the first principles of good administration, that I should not have thought it necessary to discuss it at all, but for the fact that it has been defended on the fallacious ground that it works well in practice; and because it indirectly derives an apparent support from the weight of those opinions which have been expressed in favour of attaching Sindh to the Punjab without any modification of our actual frontier arrangements.

23. Briefly then:—the addition of Sindh to the Punjab would extend and continue an anomalous and most inconvenient system of frontier administration; without giving us any greater guarantee than we have at present for unity of action in the most important of our frontier relations, unless the Government of the Punjab be simultaneously invested with a wider control than it now exercises over those relations; and to give it such control would involve the sacrifice of one of the principal objects of any change in the present system, viz., the more direct administration of the whole frontier by the Government of India. Such enlargement of the local, with a corresponding reduction of the supreme authority, appears to me particularly undesirable at a time when the character of frontier politics is daily becoming less provincial and more Imperial; and when, by the addition of a large district to his already heavy charge, the Lieutenant-Governor would be able to devote less time than ever to the study and management of these politics.

24. The addition of so large a tract as the whole of Sindh to the already onerous charge of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, would be, even apart from this consideration, a measure fraught with serious disadvantages. Although the lieutenant-governorship of the Punjab is inferior to those of Bengal and the North-western Provinces as regards population and revenue, yet the extent of its jurisdiction, coupled with the variety of interests included in that jurisdiction, and the amount of care and constant attention demanded by the condition of affairs along the whole length of its frontier, render it, perhaps, as at present constituted, a more difficult lieutenant-governorship than either of the other two. With Sindh, and the control of our political relations with Beloochistan added thereto, the present burdens of the Punjab Government would be heavily increased. The administration of three localities, each of them so distant from the other, yet all of them so important, as Peshawur, Delhi, and Kurrachee, is in itself a severe strain to throw on the machinery of a lieutenant-governorship, already occupied with the most difficult task of all, viz., the care of a long unsettled line of frontier; while the amount of responsibility devolving on the Lieutenant-Governor in other ways may be roughly measured by the fact that his province would require nearly one third of the whole armies of India for its garrison.

25. It remains now to consider the third proposal, viz., that of forming a frontier district separate from Sindh and the Punjab under a Chief Commissioner, or Governor General's Agent, having the management, directly under the Government of India, of all our frontier business, and trans-frontier relations. The administrative advantages of such a measure, as regards the conduct of these relations, have to a great extent, been already indicated. The Viceroy would, by means of this arrangement, command the services of his own specially selected agent, in whose hands the threads of all our border politics and tribal relations, would be concentrated. The time of such an agent could be devoted, almost entirely, to purely frontier duties; and he would be better able, than any Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab can possibly be, to visit with adequate frequency, freedom of mind, and singleness of interest, all parts of the frontier; thus making himself personally and thoroughly familiar with the social facts, individual characters, and local sentiments, which claim incessant and concentrated attention in the successful administration of border politics. The political and administrative conduct of the frontier would be in the same hands, and pass through the same channels. All division of responsibility, and all antagonism of schools and systems, would thus be eliminated.

26. I am aware, however, that some decided opinions have been expressed against this proposed severance, based, as far as I understand them, on the following principles: —1st., that these frontier districts naturally form an integral part of the Punjab; 2nd., that their internal administration would suffer by separation; 3rd, that our frontier relations are best carried on through the Punjab Government.

27. Now, as regards the first of these objections, all that I can learn on the subject leads me to an exactly opposite conclusion. The frontier districts are separated from the Punjab by almost every possible kind of distinction. They are separated geographically, historically, by race, by institutions, and by customs. The Indus, for a great part of its course, forms a natural and little-traversed boundary between two essentially distinct territories. The Trans-Indus districts were only conquered and annexed to the Sikh kingdom late in the reign of Runjeet Singh. They are mostly inhabited by races different from those which occupy the Cis-Indus districts; and the tribal system prevalent throughout the greater portion of them differs widely from the institutions of the Cis-Indus population. Their essentially different conditions have been practically recognised by making them the subject of separate and special legislation. Sir H. Maine, in a remarkable and most suggestive minute written on the subject in 1864, pointed out that the association with the Punjab of districts so essentially different from it in character and conditions as those which lie beyond the Indus, is quite as likely to delay the progress of the Punjab as to hasten that of their less civilized populations. And, so far from these districts forming a natural and necessary part of the Punjab, Sir J. Lawrence (than whom no one knew the Punjab better) actually advocated their abandonment, and the selection of the Indus as the boundary of the Punjab and of India.

28. As regards the second objection, it seems to me to rest on assertion rather that argument, at least in the numerous papers on the subject before me; though I find in repeatedly declared that the separation of these districts would be prejudicial to their internal administration, yet I have found almost no arguments advanced in support of that assertion, except the general one as to the injurious effect of change, whatever, the change may be. But any such general objection applies with equal force to the severance of Sindh from Bombay, to the steps already taken with regard to our political relations on the Belooch frontier, and to every administrative improvement rendered necessary by the progress of time and the development of a country. I confess I am unable to understand why the Commissioners and Assistant Commissioners of these frontier districts should administer them less ably and conscientiously when reporting to a high officer at Peshawur, than when reporting to a high officer at Lahore, or why the closer and more frequent supervision of the former should be less efficient than the rarer and more distant supervision of the latter.

29. I may here observe that the great weight of opinions against the separation of the frontier districts is from officers who are, or have been, directly connected with the Government of the Punjab. These officers are, undoubtedly, the best qualified judges on certain points which must not be lost sight of in our consideration of the question we are dealing with; but on the general merits of an arrangement involving some reduction in the scope and power of a particular Government, the previous and present officers of that Government, proud as they may justly be of their association with its achievements and traditions, are scarcely in a position to form the soundest, or most impartial, opinion. At any rate, if overwhelming weight be given to the opinions of the Punjab officers on the question of separating the frontier districts from that province, then the same weight must be given to the opinions of the Bombay and Sindh officers on the question of the transference of Sindh to the Punjab, a measure to which the last-named local officials are quite as unanimously opposed, but which the Government of India has declared to be expedient. I venture to think it would be difficult to find an instance in which measures of this kind, however beneficial they may have ultimately proved themselves to be, have not been opposed by those who were called upon to surrender a portion of their administration of the special interests to which they had devoted much care and attention.

30. The last objection is, that our frontier relations are best carried on through the Punjab Government; or, as it has been expressed, that the proposed separation would deprive the Government of India, quoad its administration of the western border, of the assistance of a Government which has cordially carried out our policy, and is best fitted, by position and experience, to conduct under our orders the relations of the British Government with its Belooch and Afghan neighbours. Now, this argument seems to me to require very careful examination. Governments are not entities possessed of special knowledge or experience, but a collection of individuals selected for certain special qualifications. If the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab were specially selected for his knowledge of frontier affairs, then he would naturally be the best adviser of the Government of India on these matters. If, on the other hand, an exceptionally qualified frontier officer is sent to Peshawur, and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is selected rather with a view to his special qualifications for the administration of the more settled districts, then the whole argument falls to the ground. As regards Secretariat assistance, it is only necessary to instance the circumstances of the present moment, when the Secretary of the Punjab Government happens to be officiating as Foreign Secretary to the Government of India. The Government of India is, therefore, presumably better advised on these matters than the Government of the Punjab. So long as our relations with the trans-frontier States are carried on by an officer of comparatively subordinate position there may be reasons why he should communicate through the local Government rather than directly with the Government of India. But, if the conduct of these relations be transferred to an officer whose official rank is little below that of the Lieutenant-Governor himself, it is, in that case, difficult to imagine what advantage could be gained by reserving to the Punjab Government any share in the conduct of them. All unnecessary links in an administrative chain admittedly weaken the strength of it. The frontier officer has all the local knowledge necessary to enable him to form and submit an opinion, or to frame a line of policy, for the consideration of the Government of India. The Government of India reviews the information and opinions thus submitted to it, with a knowledge of British and Imperial interests, as also of the military and financial conditions of India, far wider and more accurate than that of any local administration. But what new light can the Punjab Government throw on the matter? It has not the local knowledge of the Chief Commissioner on the spot, and it has no knowledge of Imperial policy and political conditions which the Commissioner does not equally possess.

31. Therefore, whether I consider the question on abstract principles of administration or policy, or from the standpoint of the practical unity of our present frontier administration, I am irresistibly brought, in either case, to the conclusion that the unity and direct impulse, so necessary to the efficiency of our frontier policy, will be best secured by the formation of a separate Frontier Government, such as I shall now proceed to describe.

Proposed Frontier Government.

Territorial.

32. The proposed Frontier Government should comprise the six frontier districts of the Punjab, viz., Hazara, Peshawur, Kohat, Bunnoo, Dera Ismail, and Dera Ghazi, Khan, with the exception of the Cis-Indus portions of Bunnoo and Dera Ismail Khan; and the Trans-Indus portion of Sindh, with the exception of Kurrachee. The Indus would thus form the boundary of the new Government along almost the entire length of its jurisdiction; and this great natural boundary would conveniently divide countries which are not only geographically separate, but also socially distinct; countries differing from each other in their material configuration and popular institutions.

33. The two points where the boundary line leaves the Indus are at the extreme north, and the extreme south, of it. The Cis-Indus district of Hazara, which forms part of the present Peshawur district, is included in the Frontier Government; because it is essentially a frontier district, and allied in character and conditions to the Trans-Indus, rather than to the Cis-Indus, territories. Some modification of the present boundary between this district and Rawul Pindi may be found desirable for the convenience of the population; but these details may be hereafter settled by the local authorities.

34. The Trans-Indus taluka of Kurrachee, and, perhaps, a small portion of the adjoining Trans-Indus territory, are not included in the Frontier Government; because Kurrachee, as the great future port of Sindh and the Punjab, is connected rather with the development of those countries than with the management of frontier tribes; because, with its large English population and mercantile community, it requires a more elaborate judicial system than would probably be found necessary for the ruder frontier districts; and because the administration of it, with its promising harbour and growing mercantile interests, &c., would be a heavy and most undesirable addition to the charges of the frontier administration.

35. The Cis-Indus portions of Bunnoo and Dera Ismail Khan are detached from those districts; because they are physically separated from the Trans-Indus portion by a great natural barrier, the river which divides them; because the population of them is Cis-Indus in character, and their administration unconnected with frontier arrangements. In fact, their association with Trans-Indus districts is comparatively recent in time, and has not, I believe, proved convenient in practice.

36. The question whether the great military supports of the frontier, Rawul Pindi, Attock, and Mooltan should be included in the Frontier Government, is a military rather than a territorial question, and will be so considered. Nothing, however, but very strong military reasons should outweigh the manifest disadvantage of including in the Frontier Government large Cis-Indus towns and districts, which would materially add to the charges of the frontier administration, and are entirely distinct in population and condition from the districts constituting its special charge.

Administration and "Personnel."

37. At the head of the Frontier Government should be a "Chief Commissioner of the North-western Frontier," with the powers of a Chief Commissioner, and such additional powers as it may be found necessary to confer upon him. In consideration of the importance of his charge, he should take rank above other Chief Commissioners, and his pay should be slightly higher than theirs, say Rs. 5,000 per mensem. He should have the power of a local Government in all revenue matters, and the power of temporarily moving troops without having to make formal requisition for their services. He should also be assisted by a Judicial Commissioner exercising the powers and performing the duties of the Chief Court throughout the territory. He should further have a secretary, assistant secretary, and staff and office establishment on a scale proportionate to his position. The head-quarters of the Frontier Government should be at Peshawur.

38. Under this presiding authority, the Government should be divided into two great divisions,—an upper and a lower division; each under a Commissioner; the Commissioner of the southern division being also Governor General's Agent, or Political Agent for Beloochistan. The upper division should include the districts now forming part of the Punjab, with the exception of Dera Ghazi Khan; the lower division should include the latter and the territory taken from Sindh. By this arrangement the administrative divisions would correspond with the great tribal divisions on our frontier.

39. The head-quarters of the northern division should be at Peshawur; that of the southern division at Jacobabad, or Sukkur. It is probable that when Khelat affairs are more settled, a sanitarium may be found at no very great distance from the former place, which would remove the principal objections to making it the seat of an important Government.

40. Each Commissioner should exercise, not only the ordinary powers of a Commissioner, but also the powers of Judicial and Financial Commissioners; and should be allowed the services of an Assistant or "Additional" Commissioner. In consideration of the importance and responsibility of their duties, these officers should also receive salaries somewhat above that of an ordinary Commissioner; the Commissioner of the lower division receiving, in addition thereto, a special allowance as Governor General's Agent for Beloochistan.

41. Each division should be distributed into three districts; the upper division to consist of the Hazara, Peshawur, and Dera Ismail Khan districts; the lower, of Dera Ghazi Khan, Shikarpore, and a southern district embracing parts of the Sukkur and Kurrachee Collectorates.

42. By this sub-division of the upper frontier, two districts (those of Bunnoo and Kohat) would be abolished; the former being merged in Dera Ismail Khan, the latter principally in Peshawur. If this proposal be adopted, able assistants to the Deputy Commissioners of Peshawur and Dera Ismail Khan would have to be stationed at Kohat and Bunnoo, respectively. But there seems reason to think that greater administrative unity and efficiency would be gained by making these two, out stations of, and subordinate to, Peshawur and Dera Ismail Khan, respectively, than by making them independent districts.

43. Each district should be administered by a Deputy Commissioner, with increased judicial powers, nearly equal to those now exercised by a Commissioner; and each Deputy Commissioner should be provided with a judicial assistant. In the case of Peshawur, two such assistants will, perhaps, be necessary.

44. The staff of assistants in the upper division would be increased by two, to replace the deputies at Kohat and Bunnoo; and a still further increase would probably be advisable throughout the province generally. I am aware that these changes will entail a slight increase in the cost of the administration of the frontier; but I think such cost is more than compensated by the relief that will be afforded to the divisional and district officers from the drudgery of routine work, and the increased opportunities afforded them of becoming personally acquainted with the tribes, &c. on their frontier, a point to which I attach the highest importance.

45. The above is only a sketch of the proposed administrative staff of the province. When once the broad principles of our frontier administration have been approved, a detailed list would be prepared by the officer appointed to the charge, in communication with the local authorities, and submitted for the approval of the Government of India. Possibly it would not be desirable, for the present at any rate, to interfere with the district of Kohat.

46. Proposals regarding the administration of the Cis-Indus portions of Bunnoo and Dera Ismail Khan, and Kurrachee and the Cis-Indus portions of Sindh, might be submitted by the Punjab Government; Kurrachee and the Cis-Indus portions of Sindh being annexed to the Punjab and forming a commissionership under that Government.

47. I do not consider that the position of the officers in the frontier districts need be much affected, nor their prospects in any way injured, by the transfer of these districts to the Frontier Government. They would, it is true, lose their chance of succeeding to some of the high offices of the Punjab; but, on the other hand, their actual appointments should, I think, be raised in importance and in pay; their work would be more varied, and they would have exceptional opportunities of bringing themselves under the notice of the Government of India, and succeeding to the higher political appointments in the Viceroy's gift. The Sindh and Punjab frontier officers would be amalgamated in one list separate from that of the Punjab proper, but with every facility offered for exchanges; and the titles, and as far as possible the powers, of the Sindh officers should be assimilated to those of the Punjab officers, as being those generally accepted under the Government of India.

48. Agents in Khelat, Quetta, and any places beyond our border, should be directly subordinate to the Frontier Government, and correspond through it; the agent at Khelat being immediately subordinate to the Commissioner of the lower division. To save time, diaries and ordinary communications might be sent direct by the Commissioner of the lower division to the Government of India; and, in cases of urgency, important communications might be similarly sent; but copies of all communications so sent, and, in the latter case, telegraphic notice of papers having been so sent, as also of their contents, should always be despatched to the Chief Commissioner. Political agents beyond the border should be included in the frontier list of officers.

49. Kashmir, however, being as it were in the rear of the new frontier Government, should not be considered as coming within the sphere of the Chief Commissioner's frontier duties; and the officer on duty with the Maharaja should communicate direct with the Government of India, keeping the Chief Commissioner informed, however, of anything in any way affecting his duties.

Military.

50. The Punjab Frontier Force and the Sindh Frontier Force should be amalgamated into one "Frontier Force," and the whole placed under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief. It seems to me unnecessary to revert to the many discussions and controversies which have taken place on the subject of the peculiar position of the Punjab Frontier Force. Conditions have changed; along most of the frontier the position and duties of the Frontier Force now differ in no respect from those of any other part of the Indian army; and most of the arguments urged in favour of maintaining its special character have lost their force. In practice, in almost all recent military operations the Frontier Force has been associated with other troops, and the whole have passed under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief. On the other hand, all the anomalies and inconveniences of the system remain as strong as ever; and some of the chief arguments for placing it under the Commander-in-Chief have been strengthened by the increasingly Imperial character of our frontier politics. I think, too, the frontier has passed the stage which all countries and borders go through when military and police duties are almost synonymous; when the civil government partakes of a military character, and the military force partakes necessarily of a civil, or police and local, character. In short, the time, I think, has come for the military force to take its proper place with the rest of the troops under the immediate orders of the Commander-in-Chief; and for the civil government to rely more directly, under ordinary circumstances, on its own force, the police. The intermixture of commands, which has been so often pointed out as the great blot in our frontier military system, would thus cease; and Peshawur, instead of being a separate command interposed between, and interrupting the continuity of, the frontier chain of posts, would take its natural position as the military head-quarters of the northern division.

51. Though amalgamated and placed under the Commander-in-Chief, the force should still be localised, and retain its character of a frontier force, that is to say, the regiments should serve only within the frontier military districts, though interchangeable within these.

52. As regards the constitution of the frontier military districts, I know that many arguments are urged in favour of making the military and civil divisions of the frontier conterminous; but if it is decided that the military force should be directly under the Commander-in-Chief, and not under the local Government, these reasons in a great measure disappear. On purely military grounds the most convenient distribution would appear to be to make Peshawur the head-quarters of the upper military district and Mooltan of the lower; the upper to include Peshawur, Nowshera, the districts of Eusefzai, Kohat, and Bunnoo, with their outposts; the lower to include Dera Ghazi Khan, Dera Ismail Khan, Jacobabad, and the troops in Khelat.

53. Although Mooltan is without the limits of the Frontier Government, it is undoubtedly the most convenient military head-quarters for the lower district, with most parts of which it will be in easy communication when the Indus Valley Railway is opened; it is, moreover, an important frontier fortress and arsenal, and the station of a British regiment; and I see no objection in the fact of its lying outside the civil boundary of the frontier sufficient to counterbalance these advantages; while, on the other hand, I see no sufficient military advantage in including Mooltan within the Frontier Government to outweigh the undoubted disadvantages of extending the Commissioner's jurisdiction across the Indus.

54. As regards Rawul Pindi, there seems no military reason for including it within the Frontier Goverment; and interests of civil administration are strong against it. It would remain, therefore, as now, the great support of the frontier, but outside the boundaries of the frontier district. The troops at Abbottabad, Khyragully, and Kuldunna might form a brigade under a brigadier, reporting to the major-general commanding at Rawul Pindi; and the troops at Kurrachee and Hyderabad remain, as now, under a brigadier at Kurrachee.

55. The precise staff for these commands would be hereafter matter of discussion in the Military Department. The Peshawur command, increased as it would be by the troops at Kohat, &c., is such an important one that perhaps it might be raised to a major-general's command; and, in this case, it would seem better that the brigade at Abbottabad, &c., which essentially forms part of the Frontier Force, should report to Peshawur rather than to Rawul Pindi, which latter is not a frontier command.

56. The precise manner in which the amalgamation of the Sind and Punjab Frontier Forces should be carried out is also a point to be settled in the Military Departments of the Governments of India and Bombay. I think, however, that in the process one regiment of Sind Horse might be reduced and the Jacob Rifles abolished altogether. The unhealthiness and inefficiency of this corps has been the subject of frequent report; its abolition has been several times considered; and the peculiar constitution of it would make very difficult its delocalisation from Jacobabad and amalgamation with the rest of the Frontier Force.

57. By the transfer of the command of the Frontier Forces to the Commander-in-Chief, the patronage of the regiments composing them will naturally devolve on him; and I think it is for the interests of the force itself, as well as of the army generally, that this should be the case. As a rule, promotion should still go within the force, but facilities should be given for exchanges, and thus by degrees the field of selection, as well as the field of employment for frontier officers, would be widened. But, considering the special character and importance of the two frontier commands, I think that these appointments should be subject to the approval of the Government of India.

58. Some slight modifications of the distribution of the military force along our frontier will probably be desirable, in connexion with recent events and frontier re-organisation. I have already expressed my opinion that one regiment of Sindh Horse might be reduced. On the other hand, the occupation of the high ground of Beloochistan renders necessary an increase of infantry on the lower frontier. Dera Ismail Khan has somewhat lost in importance, and the cavalry regiment there would apparently fulfil its object better at, or near, Tonk. These points, however, would be better settled hereafter in consultation with the officer in charge of the frontier.

59. For the immediate security of the frontier against petty raids, &c., it is essential that it should possess a picked and most efficient police force, commanded by picked officers. For the Sindh frontier the money saved by the reduction of one regiment of Sindh Horse might suffice to increase and improve the police force, the existing Belooch Guides forming part of the police organisation. Whether the Frontier Force in the upper frontier also admits of reduction, or the conversion of part of it into a police force, is a question which would have to be considered later, in connexion with the re-distribution of the Frontier Force; but, in any case, I consider the formation of a picked and efficient police force one of the first requisites for the successful administration of the frontier. I am hopeful that the force thus formed may eventually become an admirable school for frontier work, and a promising and popular field of distinction for young men of energy and character.

60. As regards the judicial system of the new Government, little change seems immediately necessary. All the districts included in it are subject to Statute 33 Vict. c. 3., and are "scheduled districts" within the meaning of our Act XIV. of 1874. The differences in civil procedure between the Sindh and Punjab frontier districts are few, and of no serious importance, and, as regards criminal procedure, the same Code (Act X. of 1872) is in force in both groups of districts. Appeals lie now, in the case of the Punjab frontier districts, to the Chief Court at Lahore, and, in the case of the Sindh frontier districts, to the Sadr Court at Kurrachee. In future all appeals should lie to the Judicial Commissioner at Peshawur, giving him power, in case of doubt, to make such references to the Chief Court at Lahore as the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh is already empowered to make to the High Court at Allahabad. Any legislation needed to assimilate the judicial procedure in the upper and lower frontiers, and to invest the Chief Commissioner with the powers of a High Court, can be effected in the simplest and easiest manner by a regulation under 33 Vict. c. 3., and a notification under Act XIV. of 1874. Whether the whole system of legislation for the Frontier Government might not be simplified is a difficult question, deserving very careful consideration, but I think it would certainly be undesirable to attempt it until the new Government has worked for some time and gained experience. All changes not absolutely necessary should be avoided at first.

In the same way, as regards the revenue systems, I think it would not be desirable to attempt any assimilation until experience has proved that change is necessary or expedient.

General Principles of Frontier Administration.

61. I think it desirable that I should take this opportunity of indicating broadly the views I personally hold regarding frontier administration. Very broad the sketch must necessarily be, when so much depends on conditions constantly changing, on the prejudices and passions of races with whom we are as yet but imperfectly acquainted, and on the individual judgment and special qualifications of the officers on whom so much depends. If, in the views I am about to express, I have the concurrence of our frontier officers, and they claim to have been endeavouring to act on the lines here set forth, I shall feel myself strengthened and encouraged by their support. If, on the other hand, they differ on some points from the conclusions I have arrived at, I can only say that these conclusions are not "evolved from my inner consciousness," and that I claim no supernatural insight into frontier politics. My views on this subject have been derived from long and careful study of masses of correspondence, reports, minutes, &c., containing the opinions of the most competent judges, both actors and spectators. By the recorded experience of others I have endeavoured to test and correct all à priori impressions of my own, and the conclusions thus gradually matured are confirmed by such knowledge of the facts they refer to as I have been able to acquire from a year's tenure of office, during which several important frontier questions have forced themselves prominently on my notice. It is well to bear in mind that in policy, as in other games of skill, the observant spectator is often a better judge than the player absorbed in the chances of the game.

62. In the first place, then, I think it should be our aim to cultivate more direct and frequent intercourse than at present exists between ourselves and the tribes on our borders. I have already had occasion to observe more than once, what I cannot too often repeat in reference to this subject, that it is to the effect of the straightforward, upright, and disinterested action of English gentlemen, and to the influence which higher mental power and culture never fail to exert over those who are brought much in contact with them, rather than to superiority in fighting power and appliances, that I attribute British supremacy in India, as well as the exceptional success of British rule in all quarters of the globe. If personal character and influence be the powerful engines I believe them to be, it is desirable that their force should be exercised as constantly and directly as possible. For this, among other reasons, I propose the appointment of a Chief Commissioner at Peshawur, invested with exceptionally high powers, who can represent to the Native mind more directly and personally than either the Lieutenant-Governor at Lahore, or the still more distant Viceroy at Calcutta, the embodied power and dignity of the British Government. For this reason also I propose to increase the administrative staff of divisions and districts, so that the Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners, relieved of much purely routine work, may have more time for visiting and becoming personally acquainted with their troublesome, but not hopelessly unmanageable, neighbours. I have before me now a minute by Major James, formerly Commissioner of Peshawur, in which, as the result of 13 years' frontier experience, he expresses himself most strongly as to the absolute impossibility of combining a proper intercourse with the border tribes with the execution of his ordinary civil duties. The then Lieutenant-Governor and Lord Lawrence hinted, indeed, that this incompatibility of functions was Major James's own fault, yet from all quarters I hear Major James spoken of as one of the ablest and most active administrators the frontier has known, and one who, but for his untimely death, had a brilliant career before him.

63. Again, for the reasons given above, I think that the employment of Arbabs, or middlemen, should be discontinued as much as possible. I do not myself believe that it strengthens our hold even upon the small class we thus employ. For every man gratified by employment a host of jealousies are raised against him and ourselves. There is some reason to fear that these personages are not altogether incapable of provoking or promoting difficulties on the frontier in the hope of increasing their own importance, and the police authorities at Peshawur have now ascertained that one of the Arbabs most trusted by the Punjab Government on that frontier was carrying on a few months ago a treasonable correspondence with persons in Cabul, which nothing but the man's death enabled us to detect. I admit, however, that there are many occasions on which the services of Arbabs have been, and may again be, most valuable to us, especially in opening communication with frontier tribes, but I think that whenever their services can be dispensed with, and direct communication opened or maintained by our own authorities, this should be done. Even if we could always depend on the absolute loyalty of Arbabs, these men cannot convey to the Native the same clear idea of our views and character that he would gain by personal intercourse with British officers.

64. For the same reasons I would be inclined to relax somewhat the restrictions now placed on district officers corresponding with chiefs beyond the border, and on officers crossing the border. I am aware that this is a matter which will require very careful and delicate handling; and that any relaxation of the present restrictions may be attended with considerable risk. But it seems to me that, in our anxiety to avoid present risk and complications, we have somewhat sacrificed future influence and security. I think there is no one who considers our present relations with the trans-frontier tribes to be altogether satisfactory. I believe that our North-western Frontier presents at this moment a spectacle unique in the world; at least, I know of no other spot where, after 25 years of peaceful occupation, a great civilized Power has obtained so little influence over its semi-savage neighbours, and acquired so little knowledge of them, that the country within a day's ride of its most important garrison, is an absolute terra incognita; and that there is absolutely no security for British life a mile or two beyond our border. I can see no force in the oft repeated argument that the Sikh and other kingdoms were no more successful than ourselves in their intercourse with these hill tribes; unless, indeed, it be assumed that English civilization and rule are no better than those of a Sikh or Persian kingdom; that an English officer represents no higher type of character than the servant of an Eastern king; and that our power and military resources and appliances are not immeasurably superior to those of the kingdoms which were crushed by a mere fraction of the force now at our command.

65. Next, as regards our general system of frontier defence, and the punishment of offences committed by the independent tribes; I think, as already stated, that the time has come when the military force should pass under the Commander-in-Chief, losing somewhat of its police character, while the civil power should be more directly responsible for the protection of life and property. I propose, therefore, to increase somewhat the police force, giving it as good an organisation as possible, and placing it directly under the district officers. The local militia also should be under the district officers; and ordinarily these civil forces should be sufficient to meet and punish any attempts from over the border. With a picked police force, composed of men of the same stamp, and as inured to hill work as the tribes whom they have to act against, but better armed, organised, and disciplined, under picked officers, and with a proper system of espionage and intelligence, I see no reason why the security of the frontier should not be maintained, in ordinary times, without the assistance of troops. But when once the troops are called out, then the control of all armed forces, military, police, or militia, should pass into the hands of the officer commanding the troops; and he alone, acting of course in concert and communication with the civil authorities, should be responsible for the protection of the frontier.

66. I have already, on several occasions, expressed my strong disapproval of the system of small punitive military expeditions; and I have twice within my short tenure of office refused to sanction them when they have been recommended. I do not for a moment suppose that these turbulent and savage tribes can be managed without occasional displays of power and severe punishment; but I object to this particular form of punishment. I object to it because it perpetuates a system of semi-barbarous reprisals, and because we lower ourselves to the ideas of right and might common to our barbarous neighbours, rather than endeavour to raise them to our own ideas;—because it seldom really touches the guilty, and generally falls most heavily on the innocent; because its natural tendency is to perpetuate animosity rather than lead up to good relations; because, as a rule, it leaves no permanent mark, and the tribes assailed by us can point triumphantly to our having evacuated their country after all; because there can be no more trying fighting for our own troops than that which obliges them ultimately to retire before an enemy increasing in strength and boldness; and it appears from the records of these expeditions, which are not always successes even in the most limited sense, that the losses suffered by ourselves often exceed the losses we inflict. Finally, I object to this system because I think the confidence of the hill tribes and their warlike spirit are quite as likely to be raised as lowered by contests in which they generally fire the last shot at a retreating foe. I am aware that the expeditions I thus deprecate are defended by a large number of our most experienced frontier administrators on the grounds, so far as I understand them—1st, that they are the only means of dealing with barbarous races; and 2nd, that their success has been proved by results. With regard to the first argument, I cannot find that any other system has ever been tried with sufficient persistence to give it a chance; and, with regard to the second, I cannot at all admit the results that have been obtained, after 25 years' frontier administration, as evidence of successful dealings with these tribes, seeing that European life is as insecure as ever beyond our immediate border; that we have recently been exposed to a series of successful raids and outrages from one tribe; and that in my short tenure of office I have twice had to consider the necessity of military operations against offending sections. I maintain that under ordinary circumstances the police should be able to cope with offences committed within our border, and, if necessary, follow up and inflict punishment beyond it. I also maintain that when troops are used, the expeditions should be on a considerable scale, and productive of permanent results. At any rate, under no circumstances should the troops be withdrawn until all opposition has absolutely ceased; they should never be required to turn their backs to an enemy who is still firing at them. And I think these expeditions, in which, while doing little to put our relations permanently on a better footing, we injure a whole tribe for the vicarious punishment of an individual, are particularly inapplicable where (as is so repeatedly and strongly represented to us by the Punjab authorities) there really is little or no tribal responsibility or control. In the Punjab Report of October 1876 it is pointed out that the Beloochee system of tribal responsibility cannot be applied to the Pathan tribes, because "every "tribe is divided and sub-divided into numerous clans, each independent of the others, "and yielding but small obedience to its own petty headman." These tribes, it is stated, "only unite against a common enemy. Control exercised over such tribes "through their chiefs would be impossible, for the chiefs do not exist." Yet it is to these very tribes that the system is applied of burning certain villages because other members of the tribe have committed outrages.

67. In dealing with barbarous tribes, our object should be either to support and enforce tribal responsibility to the utmost wherever it already exists, or to reduce tribal cohesion to a minimum where no recognised authority can be found and used. The worst system of all is that which, while it gives us none of the advantages of tribal responsibility, yet unites the tribe against us when we seek to exact reparation for injuries inflicted. If, therefore, as we are repeatedly assured by the Punjab authorities, the heads of these tribes cannot be held answerable for the actions of individuals, it should be an object to trace the offence, and bring home the punishment to the individual and his immediate abettors, rather than to punish the tribe itself for the acts of the one or more of its members.

68. It is hardly necessary to say that in reference to this, as to other points which I have indicated, I am fully alive to the difficulties of execution; but I think it none the less important to lay down general lines for guidance in our action.

69. The last point, to which I attach special importance, is the gradual disarmament of the population immediately within our frontier. The old reasons for allowing and encouraging them to carry arms, namely, that they were required to participate actively in the defence of the frontier, have almost disappeared; and, in any case, I would entrust the protection of the frontier against violence to the police and military, rather than to the inhabitants themselves. One of the first steps towards civilization and social progress is the separation of the military from the agricultural and trading classes; and the sooner our subjects can be taught to confine themselves to peaceful pursuits, looking to the authorities for protection and redress instead of taking the law into their own hands, the better it will be for all concerned. Such a measure would require care and time for its execution; but whenever the inhabitants of a village or district have shown themselves troublesome, or specially mischievous, or slow to render assistance when called upon, the opportunity should be taken to deprive them of their arms. Meanwhile all who do carry arms should be to some extent organised; and the carrying of arms be clearly understood to carry with it certain responsibilities. The number of able-bodied men carrying arms, and the nature of their arms, should, as far as possible, be registered, and all armed villages required to furnish assistance to the police or civil power, or supply escorts, watchmen, &c., in proportion to their armament.

70. These are my general views on the subject of border policy. The re-organisation of the frontier districts, which is here proposed, will doubtless afford great facilities and advantages for giving practical effect to the principles on which I am anxious to see the management of frontier affairs conducted. But I need scarcely point out that the necessity for a speedy and complete re-organisation of the present system of Frontier Government is entirely independent of any administrative theories, or political principles, peculiar to myself. This measure is absolutely and urgently requisite for the efficient execution of the policy of the Government of India, whatever that policy may be, or howsoever that Government may be composed now or hereafter.

71. I need hardly add, that notwithstanding the special pains I have devoted to the consideration of this subject, on which my opinions have been guided by careful reference to the most experienced local authorities in every important part of the frontier, as well as by personal investigation of the geographical and administrative facts to be dealt with, it is practically impossible to lay down, in such a paper as the present, a scheme of re-organisation complete and perfect in all its details.

Many of my recommendations on incidental points may, of course, be susceptible of important modification; for instance, it may be found, on further consideration, expedient to constitute two Courts of Appeal, one at Jacobabad, and the other at Peshawur; and some of the military details to be dealt with must necessarily be re-considered, in further consultation with the military authorities concerned.

I by no wise desire to commit either my colleagues, the Secretary of State, or myself to the premature adoption of every particular subsidiary measure roughly indicated in this memorandum; but, as head of the Government of India, I must honestly say that I cannot, with any comfort to myself, or any confidence in the future, accept, as permanent, the present system of frontier management, and the only reform of it which I could recognise as satisfactory must be in general accordance with the principles I have now laid down.

LYTTON.

No. 16.

MINUTE by the Honourable Sir E. C. Bayley, K.C.S.I., dated 22nd May 1877.

It is hardly to be disputed that the political arrangements on our North-west Frontier require modification, and modification in the direction of bringing them more completely and directly under the direction of the Government of India, at any rate, as regards the relations with ruling Powers beyond our own frontier.

I quite think that our relations with Khelat, Afghanistan, and even with Kashmir, should be managed directly by the Supreme Government, and not through the local Governments. This opinion is based on the general course of political action in India, so far as I have observed it, of which I have had considerable opportunities for forming a judgment, and it may be illustrated by the case immediately before us; for, as I have had occasion to point out elsewhere, the result of the interposition of the Government of Bombay between the local authorities in Sind dealing with the subject of the relations with Khelat and the Government of India, was that through a long series of years the local authorities carried out a policy diametrically opposed to that inculcated by the Government of India, and with the most disastrous consequences.

As regards the relations with the tribes on our borders, the relations of our officers with these tribes also, I believe, seem to need improvement; but the matter is far from an easy one, and as the evils arise from wholly different sets of causes, so also they require different treatment in different places.

In the first place, the relations between these tribes and ourselves vary seriously in character along the different portions of the border, and it is hardly possible, except in the broadest terms, to lay down any general policy equally applicable to the whole. Thus, as far as I am able to gather, all along our frontier in Lower Sind the tribes owe a very loose allegiance to the Khan of Khelat, and are very much bound up in interests and kinship with the neighbouring inhabitants within our frontier; this is very nearly the case also with the tribes on the Dehra Ghazee Khan frontier; while intermediately we march with territory directly under the authority of the Khan himself. Passing northwards till we reach our northern and western boundary (roughly speaking) on the Koorum river, we have tribes who are absolutely independent, who owe no allegiance to any one, and are little open to the influence of either the Khan of Khelat or of the Ameer of Cabul. Some of them are more or less connected inter se by various interests, others more nearly isolated. Koorum itself again owes allegiance to the Ameer, but that allegiance sits lightly on the people and their prepossessions are certainly more hostile to him than to ourselves.

Then we come to the tribes of the Khyber Pass, and to the Mohmunds, who certainly (at least the Mohmunds without our border) are nominally subject to the Ameer, and to a certain extent really under his influence. Indeed, so long as that influence is in harmony with their feelings and prejudices, it is considerable; but neither the Ameer's influence or authority is usually of much avail for any good or pacific end. Then come again tribes who are independent, but, no doubt, to a certain extent open to the Ameer's influence, and comparatively little to ours, though with some of them we have established a kind of footing of amity.

It is evident that the same sort of relations cannot be established with all of these differing tribes. No doubt it is essential in all cases, as far as may be possible, to gain their confidence; but the possibilities of so gaining, and of bringing that influence to account, vary in almost every individual case. With the wholly independent tribes it may be carried to any extent, even so far as not only to exclude the Ameer's influence, but eventually to render them entirely amenable to our own authority. With time and patience I do not despair of seeing this result, even with the most refractory tribes; but where the Ameer's authority is already fully established, we can, of course, so long as we are at peace with him, only look to work through him. This is, however, the case to a very limited extent at present; and if our border system is fully efficient, as I admit it is not at present, his influence may be so greatly diminished, and our own so increased, as to render his interference a factor of very little importance in our purely frontier politics. In short, therefore, I consider external politics—that is to say, our relations with the larger chiefs, like the Ameer of Cabul and the Khan of Khelat, especially those with the former—of very partial importance as regards our domestic border policy.

The success or failure of this latter policy is, I believe, far more affected by the relations of our district officers personally with the border tribes. I think I could show that the greater number of our quarrels with them have arisen from mistakes actually in civil administration within our borders; for example, it seems to me that the recent onslaught on the coolies employed on the Eusofzye Canal was provoked by a careless disregard of the rights and feelings of the people, which would probably have produced a riot in our oldest territories.

If I am not misinformed, even the Kohat Pass troubles, just ended, were really the result of an unwise disregard of the feelings of some of the tribes. But perhaps the most instructive example is that of the Mahomed Kheyl Vuzeerees, who, after living in perfect peace with us for 20 years, suddenly fired on a party of our troops who were marching in perfect security. And this outbreak was distinctly traced to the impatience of the tribe under what was probably a mistake on the part of our officers, and certainly to their inability to obtain what they thought fair attention to their complaints.

My own opinion, therefore, is that the subjects of external foreign policy, and of our domestic border policy, may, for all practical purposes, be dealt with separately. I propose to deal with the latter first, and I begin by at once admitting that the present state of the frontier leaves much to be desired, and that reformatory action is needed; but, before proceeding to treat of the real evils and the mode of remedying them, I wish to say that, as I understand the actual policy which has been pursued on the Peshawur frontier, the Viceroy's Minute appears to show a considerable misapprehension of it, especially in paragraph 67. So far as I know, small punitive military expeditions are no cardinal feature of that policy; and, although they are no doubt sometimes unavoidable, when any such expeditions have been resorted to, it has been with as much reluctance and dislike as is expressed in the Viceroy's Minute.

No doubt impatient officers frequently unnecessarily recommend them; but the best proof of the judgment with which they have been sanctioned is, I think, to be found in the fact that it has been seldom necessary to repeat them in each individual instance, and that they have become gradually more and more rare. In fact, of late years "blockades" of the tribes have, in practice, nearly superseded punitory expeditions.

I except, however, the Black Mountain expeditions, which have partly arisen from a separate exciting cause, and which have borne closer resemblance to foreign wars.

Again, I think his Excellency, in condemning the frontier administration of the past 25 years in his 65th paragraph, hardly makes allowance for the condition in which the country was at the beginning of that period. The argument used in its defence is, not that the Sikh and Mahomedan Governors were less successful than ourselves, but that the state of things which they bequeathed as a legacy to us, and which had existed certainly in the same condition as far back as the invasion of Timur (who describes it), burdened us with the most extraordinary difficulties. Literally, for centuries the tribes from Hazara to Bannu have gloried in disorder and bloodshed. All history represents them as absolutely resisting all control, wholly reckless of life, predatory, and violent. So independent and so impatient of control, indeed, that they had practically become almost destitute of any formal cohesion among themselves, except temporarily, and for the purpose of resisting for the time being some external pressure. Till we came in contact with them nobody had ever attempted to deal with them, except by sheer force, which they have always been able to resist or evade.

Our policy has been to use patience, and to resort to force but rarely, and never except to resist or punish aggression. The success of this policy must be measured, not by its absolute, but by its comparative, results.

It is quite true that even now much remains to be done; but it is not to be forgotten that, under Sikh rule, some of what are now our frontier villages near Peshawur were actually held by a yearly tribute of so many human heads taken from their neighbours across the border; and that, when any of the latter were caught alive, they were kept in prison to be hanged without reference to their individual guilt, whenever circumstances seemed to indicate the necessity of severe measures.

Neither is it to be forgotten that for some years after our rule officers even in Peshawur could not walk in safety to mess; that a dropping fire of musketry was to be heard all night, and that the same state of things prevailed almost everywhere on the border. The success of our border policy should be measured, not so much by what remains to be done, as by what it has already effected. And what is this? Our own frontier territories is actually, in many respects, better ordered and more peaceful than districts in Bengal which we have administered for over 100 years! and yet they are peopled by races differing little in blood and in manners from those across the frontier. Indeed, the complaint which the Secretary of State makes, and with some justice, is that our system is too refined and too regular!*

So much for our own districts. As regards those beyond it, we have, too, effected something; we have established a reputation at least for general equity and fair dealing which has made us, I will not say popular, but certainly not unpopular as neighbours; and this influence has spread far and wide, and is felt even in Western Afghanistan. Moreover, we have drawn, and still draw, a large number of the best soldiers of our army

* NOTE.—I append an extract from a letter which appeared in the Englishman newspaper of the 15th instant, and which shows how the change strikes a perfectly unprejudiced observer:—

"About ten days ago I paid a visit to the city of Peshawur. Not many years since for a European to be there without an escort, or first having given notice of his coming, was impossible. Now not only do Europeans go to the city daily, but ladies often go there alone, and are always treated with the greatest civility."

not merely from our own Trans-Indus districts about Peshawur, but from the independent tribes beyond them; and it is to be remembered that the training and discipline which these men received does not lose its effects wholly when they leave our service, and is certain more and more by degrees to bring home to these savage tribes habits of discipline and civilization. I cannot help feeling that it is unjust to the system by which our Punjab frontier has been administered for the past 25 years to condemn it, and the admirable officers who initiated it, because there is much yet to be done. This last fact I quite admit, nay more, I am ready to confess, that our frontier system is not now working as it ought to do, and that some reform is needed. It seems to me, however, that the real fault is not so much in the system itself as in the mode of working it. Major James' memorandum, which his Excellency quotes in his 63rd paragraph with approbation, exactly hits the blot, and with all that his Lordship says in that paragraph I heartily concur.

The truth is, indeed, not that the original policy and system have failed, but that the evil has literally arisen from their success. The domestic administration of our frontier districts has taken such a detailed shape, and has so occupied the time and attention of the frontier officers, that their duties of personally mingling and dealing with the tribes beyond, and even with the people of their own districts within, the frontier have been far too much neglected. In fact, the tendency, which is so mischievous to our administration everywhere, of making our officers rather mere creatures of paper routine than active governors of men, has been developed to its full extent on the frontier, where its evil consequences have been more marked and more immediately patent than elsewhere.

The problem really is how, without impairing what I may call the domestic administration, (for, as I have said, its indirect effect is valuable even beyond our border) to improve the external relations of our frontier officers. His Excellency has, it seems to me, rightly apprehended the proper remedy, which, broadly speaking, is to employ only selected men, and more of them; that is, to find men fitted for all these duties, and to give them leisure to attend to both, by relieving them of the drudgery which the necessary improved working of the "domestic" administration continually involves.

I agree also with the view that it is expedient to relax somewhat the restriction placed on the action of our district officers as regards entering into friendly relations with chiefs across the border. This may involve some risk; but if we have picked officers to do the work, the risk will be reduced to a minimum, and we often shall gain much advantage from such intercourse.

On other points of detail, I am forced to express an opinion contrary to that held by his Excellency the Viceroy, especially as to the 64th and 68th paragraphs. If I am not misinformed, our difference of opinion rests on a different apprehension of facts. It is to be remembered, as I have said, that when we first came in contact with the border tribes, there was scarcely any tribal cohesion. It has been, as I understand, the aim of our officers to create this, or a substitute for it. I do not understand how the contrary policy of reducing it to a minimum, where no recognised authority can be found or used, could work for a moment.

To attempt, without any aid from the tribes themselves, to trace individual offenders and their abettors, and always to a great extent without our frontiers, is simply and absolutely impossible, much more impossible is it to exercise any authority over them, or to punish them when traced. It is true that occasionally some clue may be independently found, but it would ordinarily be impracticable to follow it up without the aid of the people. It is true that with their aid notorious and signal offenders have been occasionally traced, caught, and punished: without it nothing will ever be done. The people beyond our border, at any rate, are certain to resent the attempt to deal with offenders independently; indeed such an attempt would give rise to violent irritation, and would infallibly soon result in the restoration of the old relations which existed under the Sikhs, and undo every good effected up to the present time.

Strictly speaking, as I understand, the term "Arbab" is confined to the Mohmund tribe, and means a chief more or less hereditary. We found on the annexation of the frontier several of these, who from their position, combined with their personal character, exercised considerable influence, not only among their own, but among neighbouring tribes. That influence was naturally used by our officers, and so far and so long as it exists it would be the gravest possible error to ignore it. It will continue to exist whether we ignore it or not, and, if not utilized for our purposes, will certainly be exerted to hinder them, for such men will always be driven into opposition by neglect. The term "Arbab" has, however, I believe, been loosely used in reference to other chiefs. Wherever a man of influence was found who led other tribes as well as his own, our officers naturally used him as a means of getting at isolated, and often otherwise inaccessible, clans or villages, until almost every natural division of our frontier had some leading man through whom negotiations with the tribes were carried out. It may be said that this is a very weak and unsatisfactory system, but it was, and I believe still is, the only system possible. We cannot, beyond our border, deal with individuals, it is a physical impossibility. Our writ does not run beyond the frontiers, and the attempt to enforce it would at once produce a general embroilment. Our system of indirect influence, at any rate, does something. We should not destroy, but improve it. At present its success or failure depends mainly on the judgment of our officers in employing the man who has real influence with the people. The system has worked less satisfactorily of late than previously, I understand; but, as I am informed, this has resulted from the less perfect knowledge both of chiefs and people among our frontier officers, of which Major James wrote, and which it should be, I take it, our first object to resuscitate.

As regards disarmament, I understand his Excellency to refer to disarmament within our own frontier. There has been much correspondence on this subject, and it is an object which, however desirable, involves very grave questions. We certainly cannot deprive our own people of the means of defending themselves until they are otherwise defended, which is hardly yet the case; and, in fact, in some of the narrow isolated valleys in immediate contact with independent tribes no military or police of anything like existing strength could afford adequate protection to the people. I think, however, the bearing of arms might, as his Excellency suggests, be gradually brought under regulation, but even this measure will be highly unpopular and difficult to enforce.

These are the general remarks which I wish to make with reference to our dealings with our own frontier people, and with the border tribes.

As regards the principle of dealing with them, no change is, I believe, required. What is really required, is to make the existing system more perfect, and to restore the balance which has been lost by too exclusive attention to the measures of internal administration. The details of the measures needed for effecting this will be discussed afterwards.

As regards the dealings with Khelat, it seems to me quite essential that they should be direct between the officers on the spot and the Government of India. It would be, in my opinion, most undesirable that they should pass through any medium. I see nothing but confusion, delay, and mischief in such course. Wherever it has been tried before, it has been found a mistake and abandoned.

For the same reason I quite agree that any relations with the Ameer of Cabul, and with any officers who may be in immediate communication with him, should be direct with the Government of India, and not through the Punjab. On the other hand, so long as the officers so employed, and the officer at Khelat, are directly in correspondence with, and under the immediate control of the Government of India, there need be no fear of any divergence of policy between them.

It seems to me that it is on the basis of the principles above stated that any re-organisation of external relations along our frontier should be placed.

What, therefore, I would propose in the first place, is that the relations with the Khan of Khelat should be made over entirely to the Governor General's Agent there, who should correspond direct with the Government of India. I would, for the purpose of dealing with the relations between our own people and the frontier tribes in the Khan's dominion, make all our frontier district officers ex-officio assistants to the Governor General's Agent at Khelat. This would enable them to deal, in communication with him and under his direction and orders, with all trifling matters of dispute, and I believe this would be found an effectual mode of disposing of them. This system would, I think, apply as far as the northern end of the Dehra Ghazee Khan district;* if necessary, a rectification of boundaries might be made so as to suit it.

At Peshawur I would have another Governor General's Agent, who should, for the present, be charged with the relations between the Governor General and the Ameer of Cabul. These relations, however, are of a nature which may be changed or extended any day, and I confine my expression of opinion to the existing state of facts. If, for example, we entered into such relations as necessitated the placing of officers of our own beyond our frontier in the Ameer's dominions, it might be necessary to re-consider the entire matter.

So far in regard to purely external political matters, and in respect to the lower part of our frontier as to the relation of civil government with frontier politics. I do not, in respect to this lower portion of our frontier, see why the civil government should be in any way under the Government of India. There are, on the other hand, very important revenue and other considerations which I think make it imperative that the Government should be assimilated with the Punjab administration, the people, their custom, tenure, language, and manners all more or less assimilate, and it would be convenient, moreover, to exchange officers with the Punjab, and many urgent reforms, especially in the revenue system, will best be carried out under the control of the Punjab Government. I think, however, a partial re-organisation of the machinery of the administration will be requisite, on the principle of which I have already spoken, so as to give a better selection of individual officers, and more leisure for political duties, than they have at present, at least as regards Trans-Indus districts. I shall, however, indicate more precisely what I mean when speaking of the Peshawur frontier.

* NOTE.—Possibly it would not quite apply beyond "Harrund."

I do not think that this addition to the Government of the Punjab will overweigh it with work, especially if it be relieved of the Peshawur frontier; but even if this proved to be the case, the necessary relief could be found elsewhere; into the discussion of this subject, however, I do not enter here.

The political relations of our frontier to the north of Dehra Ghazee Khan are, no doubt, partly complicated with our relations as to the Ameer of Cabul, though not, as I believe, in any very important degree. They still depend far more, as I have said, on the proper civil administration of our frontier and on the immediate and personal relations of our administrative officers to the frontier tribes.

At the same time I admit that these relations require closer and more direct attention than they have of late years received, and if no change of system be inaugurated, but only a change of machinery, I can see a possible advantage in placing, at any rate for the present, these relations under a separate high officer on the spot. The difficulty arises in regard to the separation of the civil administration from that of the Punjab. Now I cannot desire to see less attention or less close supervision given to this portion of the administration than it now obtains by the subdivision of labour which the constitution of a large Government like that of the Punjab renders possible. There are also other advantages in maintaining the connexion which, I think, are somewhat overlooked in his Excellency's Minute.

Officers of the class who should be entrusted with frontier duties require to be specially qualified, both by natural gifts and by local training. Many a very excellent officer otherwise may prove deficient, either in health, or energy, or temper, or tact, for frontier duties. So long as the connexion of the frontier with the Punjab is, in some degree at least, maintained, it would always be possible to relieve officers not fully qualified for frontier work, and to provide for them elsewhere.

I would accordingly partly retain the present connexion so far as to provide that the junior part of the Commission should be provided from the Punjab, and should be graded among the officers of that administration, though I would place the direction of the administration, civil and political, for the present, under the Governor General's Agent, and through him immediately under the Governor General in Council. He should have the power of a Chief Commissioner within the tract from the north of the Dehra Ghazee Khan district to the Indus. In some respects I think it might be preferable to retain the Hazara district under the Punjab Government, constituting the Deputy Commissioner, as he was before, an "independent" Deputy Commissioner on somewhat higher pay, and, in regard to his political relations, constituting him a Political Agent corresponding directly with the Government of India. There are, however, close relations between the tribes of Eusofzye and those of Hazara which I learn would make it difficult to separate them, and perhaps it may be found necessary to include Hazara in the territories under the Governor General's Agent.

By this arrangement the relations with Khelat, which I think it important should be directly under the Government of India, will be so retained. The inconvenience of having the administration of Sind and the Lower Derajat, which is closely connected with the Punjab, separated and placed under an office situated at the extreme northern corner of the Punjab, will be avoided. The Governor General's Agent at Peshawur will have a compact and manageable jurisdiction.

By this arrangement, too, and by a certain re-apportionment of the Sind Commission, the authority of the Chief Court might, if thought desirable (as I think it may be), be introduced there.

Mozuffergurh, Dehra Ghazee Khan, and Upper Sind would be combined under one Commissioner. A Commissioner would be appointed for Lower Sind, but the salary of the Judicial Commissioner in Sind would be saved, as also the difference between the salary of a Commissioner and that of the present Chief Commissioner of Sind. Some strengthening of the civil officers, both as to numbers and emoluments, in the frontier districts would be necessary to enable them to apply themselves to their political duties, but this need not be quite to the same extent as on the Peshawur frontier, and is a matter of detail which might be settled hereafter.

As regards the Peshawur province, the Governor General's Agent having the powers of a Chief Commissioner, would take also a share of the present Commissioner's executive duties. I would give him a Financial and Judicial Commissioner (in one) to assist him, with power to refer cases for opinion to the Punjab Chief Court, if necessary; also one or more Additional Commissioners for the ordinary work, now taken by the Commissioner and the Additional Commissioner. I think two would be requisite, but perhaps one would suffice eventually; it will be well to have two, at any rate, till the work of organisation is complete. I would give in each district a Junior Deputy Commissioner, giving to the Senior Deputy Commissioner, perhaps, certain increased power of dealing with criminal cases, and I would add to the staff of Assistant Commissioners. I would, as a rule, select all these officers below the rank of Senior Deputy Commissioner (I think the name might possibly be changed with advantage) from the Punjab Commission, on the list of which they should be borne in italics, and to which they should return if the Governor General's Agent think that their services ought to be dispensed with on the frontier for any reason which would not require their removal from civil employ altogether, and on this point I would allow no question between the Punjab Lieutenant-Governor to the Governor General's Agent.

The higher officers, and on special occasions others also, might, if it be expedient, be selected from elsewhere, but their names should be seconded on the list of the Government to which they belong, in order to provide, as in the case of the Punjab, for their return if necessary.

I would give the Governor General's Agent a salary of Rs. 5,000 and 500 sumptuary allowance; to his Judicial and Financial Commissioner Rs. 3,500 and travelling allowance; to the Additional Commissioners Rs. 2,500 each and actual travelling allowance. To the Senior Deputy Commissioners I would give Rs. 2,250 each and actual travelling allowance, as in a first-class regulation province, and I would give the necessary number of Assistant Commissioners on the usual pay, allowing to any officer who had passed in Persian Rs. 100 extra; to an officer who had passed in Pushtoo Rs. 150, and if invested with political powers (as an officer, for example, at Bannu and Kohat ordinarily would be), Rs. 200 in addition. It would thus be possible for an Assistant Commissioner serving on the frontier to draw Rs. 450 of allowances besides his pay. I think I would give the Junior Deputy Commissioner also the language allowances; this would make the appointments very popular and much sought after.

The extra cost of these arrangements would not be very great, even if, as I think should be done, the language allowances be extended to the police.

I agree, too, that the police might be strengthened and improved. I would express no opinion on the system of patrolling. If done at irregular times and in a proper manner it may be useful, especially in some parts of the frontier; I would not give any hard and fast order regarding it, but leave it to the discretion of the local officers.

Lastly, I would encourage all officers to mix with the people and to treat them liberally and hospitably, and for this purpose I would allow the officers in charge of districts and outposts and others of higher rank to draw contingent bills for any reasonable expenditure in entertaining or in presents on the authority of the Governor General's Agent.

I would extend this permission to the officers commanding frontier regiments, and I would give the language allowances to the officers of the Frontier Force also. It would not be a very expensive measure, for not many would pass. I would add one subaltern at least to every regiment. As it is, I am assured, the higher attention now paid to discipline, drill, marshalling &c., &c., leave the officers little time to learn much of their own men, still less of the country and its inhabitants, with which it is very desirable they should be well acquainted.

I have no very strong objection to the transfer of the Frontier Force to the Commander-in-Chief, provided care be taken not to assimilate it too closely to the Regular Army; and to provide for this, I think, it should always be a Special Assistant Adjutant-General at head quarters for the Frontier Force, as in the case of the Assistant Adjutant-General for Artillery, who would, of course, be an officer trained in the force. This would cause little or no extra expense, for the Military Secretary to the Government of the Punjab would be of course abolished. In conclusion, I can only say that I have written this Minute very hurriedly, and that, while I have suggested the separation of the Peshawur frontier from the Punjab, I yet feel not wholly satisfied whether it would not be better to keep the superintendence of the Punjab Government over the civil Government, at any rate eventually, but the experiment of separation might be tried. I cannot, however, deprecate too strongly any alteration of the principle of treating the tribes on the frontier, although the machinery employed should be improved.

I must, however, say that I disagree absolutely as to that part of the proposed despatch which contemplates as possible the transfer to Bombay of the whole of the Central Provinces. The Secretary of State has expressed his unwillingness to derogate too much from the importance of the Government of Bombay. Even without Sind, Bombay would be, with the addition of North Canara, more important than it once was; still if it be deemed advisable to enlarge it, the most obvious mode of doing so is by adding to it the Mahratta provinces of the Central Provinces, those more especially which formed the old kingdom of Nagpore. This, indeed, is the inevitable ultimate fate of these districts, which are allied in every way with the Bombay Presidency; and the only hesitation as to this point which I feel is based on the opinion stated by Lord Northbrook regarding the causes which render it temporarily inexpedient for political reasons.

But to transfer the whole of the Central Provinces to Bombay would be, I am convinced, in the last degree mischievous. The portion which formed the old Saugor and Nerbudda territories is allied by tenures, language, kindred, feeling, history, and interests to the North-western Provinces, and has been administered for some 55 years on the North-western Provinces system. In fact, the great drawback to the success of the Central Provinces administration has always been the diverse character of its component parts, and the different qualifications required for the administration of each. This will be aggravated if these districts be made over to Bombay; whereas their transfer to the North-western Provinces will remove the difficulty. Such a transfer will, moreover, be economical, as it will require hardly any addition either in Bombay or the North-western Provinces to the superior establishments, and the offices of Chief Commissioner or Judicial Commissioner in the Central Provinces may be abolished, and the charges for them saved.

Government of India.—Foreign Department.—Political.

To the Most Honourable the Marquis of Salisbury, P.C., Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

My Lord Marquis, Simla, the 17th May 1877.

Your Lordship's Political Despatch No. 72, page 40, of 13th July 1876, on the subject of changes necessary for the improved administration of the Western and North-western Frontiers of India, was duly received and considered by us; but our reply to it, postponed at first until his Excellency the Viceroy should have had the opportunity, desired by your Lordship, of personally visiting the frontier, was further delayed by the pressure of other questions urgently demanding our more immediate attention.

2. In the despatch above referred to, your Lordship expressed your satisfaction at finding that the views of the Government of India, regarding the transfer of the province of Sindh from the Presidency of Bombay to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab, were in full accordance with those already expressed by yourself on the subject; and your Lordship then authorised us to take the steps necessary for giving effect to these views at such time as might seem to us most convenient.

3. But, although thus finally approving the principle of the withdrawal of Sindh from the charge of the Government of Bombay, your Lordship pointed out that many difficult questions of detail in regard to the future management of the two provinces of Sindh and the Punjab remained to be settled. For instance, whether the Trans-Indus districts should be governed as a single district, or be divided; whether, for administrative purposes, they should be entirely disconnected from districts on this side of the Indus; and whether the system of administration should be civil or military. On these points your Lordship suspended your opinion, considering that they could be decided with less difficulty should his Excellency the Viceroy be in a position to personally visit the localities and consult with the officers by whom the arrangements which may be ultimately thought best will have to be carried out.

4. We have now the honour to transmit for your Lordship's consideration a Minute by his Excellency the Viceroy on the re-organisation of the frontier. The details of the measure therein recommended will doubtless require revision; and to these our best attention is now being given. But the views expressed by his Excellency as to the broad principles upon which the administration of our frontier should now be re-organised, without any avoidable delay, have been formed with careful consideration after a personal inspection of the frontier; and in those views we generally concur. We adhere to the opinion expressed in our Political Despatch No. 85, page 39, of 7th April 1876, regarding the severance of Sindh from Bombay, and also to the opinion that there are no districts requiring a separate military government. But, having in view the tendency of recent events on our own frontier, as well as in Central Asia and in Europe, and the growing importance and imperial character of our frontier and trans-frontier relations, we think it has now become desirable that the conduct of these relations should be under the direct control of the Government of India, and not administered, as heretofore, through the agency of a local Government. We are further of opinion that the separation of political from administrative duties is practically impossible when these two classes of duties are interwoven as closely as they now are in the government of the frontier. To place the frontier officers under the local Government, quoad their administrative duties, and under the Government of India, quoad their political duties, is a system fraught with inconvenience; and one which has already proved the source of serious embarrassment to this Government. We think that in the marked separation of the frontier districts, geographically, historically, by race, by institutions, and by customs, from the Cis-Indus districts, there are many and strong reasons for their administrative separation also. Lastly, we consider that to add the distant province of Sindh, with its rising seaport and important frontier relations, to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab, without affording the latter any corresponding relief, would unduly increase the administrative charges and responsibilities of that Government; which, owing to the extent of its jurisdiction, its long and troublesome frontier line, and the variety of the interests it has to deal with, is already, perhaps, the most difficult and onerous of all the local Governments.

5. We therefore recommend that the Frontier or Trans-Indus districts of the Punjab and Sindh be formed into a separate Frontier Government; administered, under the direct control of the Government of India, by a Chief Commissioner and Governor General's Agent at Peshawur; that this officer should be charged with the general conduct of all our frontier and trans-frontier relations; and that he should be provided with subordinate officers accordingly at Peshawur and Jacobabad, the latter having the special charge of the administration of the lower frontier and our relations with Beloochistan. We further recommend that the Sindh and Punjab Frontier Forces be amalgamated and placed under the Commander-in-Chief in India, retaining, however, their local and special character, but making them interchangeable within the limits of the Frontier Government.

6. If these recommendations meet with your Lordship's approval, and the general principles of frontier administration, as indicated in the Minute of his Excellency the Viceroy, be accepted, measures will be commenced at once to carry them out, and to settle the details of transfer and administration with the local Governments and officers concerned.

7. In making these recommendations we have not failed to consider fully the views expressed by your Lordship on the necessity of compensating the Presidency of Bombay, in other quarters, for the loss of territory to which it will be subjected by the necessary transfer of Sindh. We recognise the propriety of such compensation, if the present scheme of frontier re-organisation be carried into effect; and we are of opinion that it can be best provided for in the manner suggested in your Lordship's above-mentioned despatch; viz., by the administrative union of the whole or part of the Central Provinces with the Presidency of Bombay.

8. As, however, the detailed arrangements for carrying out any such subsidiary measure are clearly distinct from, and independent of, all the measures directly involved in the administrative re-organisation of the frontier districts, we propose to take the earliest opportunity of addressing to your Lordship a separate despatch upon this subject.

We have, &c.

No. 18.

Political No. 1.

To His Excellency The Right Honourable the Governor General of India in Council.

My Lord, India Office, London, November 29, 1877

Para. 1. I have received and considered in Council Political Letter of your Excellency's Government, No. 86, dated the 17th May last, forwarding a Minute by your Excellency on the subject of changes considered necessary for the improved administration of the western and north-western frontiers of India, and recommending certain measures to give effect to the views therein expressed, which have received the general concurrence of the Government of India as a body.

2. The recommendations of your Excellency in Council are that the frontier, or Trans-Indus, districts of the Punjab and Sind should be formed into a separate frontier government, administered, under the direct control of the Government of India, by a Chief Commissioner and Governor General's Agent at Peshawur; that this officer should be charged with the general conduct of all our frontier and trans-frontier relations; that he should be provided accordingly with subordinate officers at Peshawur and Jacobabad, the latter having the special charge of the administration of the lower frontier and our relations with Beloochistan; and that the Sind and Punjab frontier forces should be amalgamated and placed under the Commander-in-Chief in India, retaining, however, their local and special character, but becoming interchangeable within the limits of the Frontier Government.

3. I agree with your Excellency in Council in thinking that the attachment of the province of Sind to the Punjab will overtask the powers of the Punjab Government unless some relief be afforded to it; and I concur in the opinion expressed in the Despatch under reply, that, under existing circumstances, it will be expedient to place the management of our frontier and trans-frontier relations more directly under the Government of India. That these relations, whether they concern the petty tribes along the border, or the more important States behind them, must be conducted according to the views of the Government of India, is not open to dispute. Nor can it be reasonably doubted that administration is rendered more vigilant and more vigorous by shortening the "administrative chain" that connects the authority which gives the orders with the officer by whom they are carried into execution. The Punjab Government was interposed between the Governor General and the frontier officers at a time when communication between Calcutta and the Punjab was tedious and difficult, when the state of affairs beyond our territory caused little solicitude, and when the duties imposed upon the Government of Lahore were not such as to prevent the frontier from receiving a large share of its attention. In all these respects great changes have taken place. Since the construction of the telegraph, and of the nearly completed railway, distance has ceased to be a consideration of primary importance. The Government of Lahore, besides the care of a province advancing with singular rapidity in every kind of improvement, has been burdened with accretions from the territory, first, of the north-west, and more recently of Bombay. On the other hand, it cannot be denied that frontier questions involve more important consequences and present greater difficulties than was the case in former times. Various causes have contributed to create irritation and restlessness among the turbulent Mussulman populations who are our immediate or more distant neighbours. The critical position of the first Mahometan State in the world has given a renewed vigour to the impulses of fanaticism which in these countries are never in complete repose. At the same time the military activity and large territorial acquisitions of Russia have, undoubtedly, created excitement among populations beyond the sphere of her immediate influence, and may have generated in some minds the illusion that a conflict with the British power was no longer so hopeless as it formerly had been.

4. All these considerations appear to me to justify you in wishing to strengthen the administrative machinery through which your frontier relations are managed, and I am prepared to authorise the measures necessary for that purpose. Fears have been expressed that administrative modifications of this kind might carry with them a change in the pacific policy which has for many years guided the Indian Government in its dealings with neighbouring tribes and States. It is almost superfluous for me to draw your Excellency's attention to these apprehensions, for they are as much at variance with your own views as they are with the instructions which the Indian Government has uniformly received from the Government of Her Majesty. Your Excellency discerns as plainly as Her Majesty's Government that a policy of conquest on your north-west frontier would lead to no advantage which would in any degree countervail the certain financial and political embarrassment it would cause. The changes now under consideration have no such object. They are measures of defence and security, not of aggression. They will operate as a guarantee for the maintenance of existing territorial limits. In that they tend to discourage attack from without and so to prevent war, they make less possible the only contingency under which an advance of frontier might conceivably be forced upon your Government.

5. Your Excellency has intimated an opinion that though the main object you have in view is a more effective control of frontier relations, the change would be more satisfactorily effected by the constitution of the Trans-Indus districts into a distinct and separate administration. Many of the considerations you advance are cogent, and in forbearing at the present time to give effect to them I must not be understood to be recording an opinion definitively adverse. But while I admit that it may possibly hereafter be found expedient to adopt some such comprehensive scheme as that proposed by your Excellency's Government, I am disposed to think that both the objects in view, viz., the relief of the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, and the more effective control by the Supreme Government of frontier policy, might be adequately secured by a less extensive change. Any unnecessary disturbance of administrative arrangements is distasteful to the people of India, and open to many practical objections; and a large change can seldom be effected without considerable cost, which is to be deprecated at the present time.

6. Financial considerations, even at this period of extreme pressure, might not justify the abandonment of any measure shown to be absolutely necessary; but any administrative change, involving a considerable increase of expenditure, should at all events be deferred, if a less costly arrangement may seem to offer a reasonable prospect of being attended with success. Nor can it be forgotten that grave objections have been expressed, in various quarters entitled to respect, against the transfer to a new authority of the jurisdiction in civil matters at present exercised by the Punjab Government over the inhabitants of the districts byond the Indus. I do not say that such a transfer need, in fact, be seriously or permanently injurious to the persons who would be affected by it; but in any change of the kind it is important that the feelings and interests of all concerned should be previously ascertained and carefully considered.

7. In lieu therefore of the proposals of your Excellency's Government, I am prepared to sanction the adoption of the following measures:—

(a.) The Trans-Indus districts of the Punjab and Sind to be divided into two divisions, taking the dividing line at the point where the Belooch gives place to the Pathan.

(b.) A Commissioner to be appointed over each division by the Viceroy, but in respect to all internal affairs to take his orders from the Punjab Government.

(c.) The Northern Commissioner to be styled Governor General's Agent and Frontier Commissioner; to receive the salary of a Chief Commissioner; and upon all external matters, i.e., matters concerning those who are not subjects of Her Majesty, to correspond with the Viceroy direct, and be the superior of the Southern Commissioner, who upon those matters will correspond with him alone.

(d.) The frontier forces, for the present at least, to be under the orders of the Governor General's Agent, not under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief.

It would be for your Excellency to decide in respect to each class of cases whether the communications of the Frontier Commissioner should be sent under flying seal through the Punjab Government; and it would also be for your consideration whether, in view of the present financial exigency, the post of Commissioner of the Southern Division should not be filled by the Commissioner of Sind.

8. I do not deem it necessary to enter, at present, into the minor questions involved, such as the residence of the Frontier Commissioner, or the number of Deputy Commissioners, or any of the military details. Upon these points the Punjab Government should be directed to submit to your Excellency in Council, as speedily as possible, detailed proposals in conformity with the above principles, after consideration of which you will be in a position to make specific recommendations for the approval of Her Majesty's Government. I trust that having regard to existing financial exigencies, it may be found possible to establish the new organisation without any considerable increase on the present cost of administration in the Punjab and Sind.

9. I have not overlooked the fact that the measures sanctioned in this Despatch involve a duplicate responsibility, which is in theory objectionable, and may be attended with occasional inconvenience. But there are precedents which justify the belief that they may practically be worked with general success; and, having regard to the various considerations which make it advisable that no greater change should be made in the existing order of things in the Punjab and Sind than may be really necessary to the effectual attainment of the ends desired, they are probably more suitable to the circumstances of the present juncture than a more extensive reorganisation.

I have, &c.
